The degree to which a person is affected by test anxiety varies, said Dr. Michael Affemann, a new counseling psychologist at the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center.

Tests are not a true reflection of a person's knowledge, Affemann said.

Like the knowledge that must be learned in order to do reasonably well on a test, test anxiety is a learned behavioral pattern.

There are many self-deluding myths about test anxiety, Affemann said. "There is not enough time and I just can't work with numbers" are two of the self-deluding myths that can destroy a person's studying habits and lead to test anxiety, he said.

Outside pressures by family to do well in college and a lack of self confidence are other factors that lead to test anxiety, he said.

The real goal in conquering test anxiety is for the person not to be anxious anymore and be as relaxed as possible during an exam, he said.

"Better time management and the reorganization" are two of the strategies used to combat test anxiety, Affemann said.

People are also taught what to do during the last 24 hours of a test, he said. How to eat and sleep, along with what to wear on the test day is also taught.

Relaxation exercises are also taught in the event a person becomes paralyzed during a test, Affemann said. If a person can remain calm during a whole test, he will succeed in breaking the pattern of test anxiety.

Once the pattern of test anxiety is broken, good grades will soon follow, he said.

Colclough Moving to Washington

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

A six-year veteran of the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center left last Friday to start a new career in Washington, D.C.

Ginga Colclough, a nurse practitioner, would have been starting her seventh year at UNCW had it not been for new job that sought her out.

"I did not go seeking a new job, it came seeking me," Ms. Colclough said during an interview in her office last Friday—her last day at UNCW.

Ms. Colclough will be working as an Operations Manager for the Research Triangle Institute whose main office is in the nation's capital.

The Research Triangle Institute will be awarded a contract in October for AIDS research in October by the National Cancer Institute, Ms. Colclough said. She will be the Operations Manager for the RTI AIDS research group.

"I will be in charge of the office and I'll be responsible for most of the physical examinations done," she said.

Ms. Colclough credits her experience at UNCW for allowing her to obtain her new position at RTI. While she has no experience treating AIDS patients, she does have knowledge on the treatment and prevention of other sexually transmitted diseases.

During her interview at RTI, Ms. Colclough was asked about her experience in treating and caring for patients with sexually transmitted diseases.

She responded by stating how her experience in treating and caring for patients with other sexually transmitted diseases can be related to treating and caring for AIDS patients.

Ms. Colclough's colleagues at the UNCW Student Health and Wellness center gave her a slim reddish-brown briefcase as a going away present.

Leaving UNCW after six years is not easy for Ms. Colclough. "I have learned a whole lot," she said. "I have thoroughly enjoyed my experience here."

"It's been very stimulating working with the UNCW student population," she said.

Some Veterans Say

Return to Civilian Life No Easy Road

Student Press Service

After a decade in which the American armed forces were barely able to fill their ranks with qualified enlistees, young people have increasingly turned to the Army, Navy and Air Force as a smart career move. Many factors contribute to the military's appeal in the 1980's, but key among them is a tight job market, for which many young graduates have few marketable skills, and advertising campaigns designed to convince potential recruits that the military can be the best way to get a leg up in a high-paying civilian career.

With marketing slogans such as "Be all you can be," "What's in it for you," "Aim high," and "Chart your own course," the message is clear: military service can give you what you want. You can write your own ticket to a good job and the good life. Recruitment literature puts it simply: "The Army's a great place to get started on your career." In the last few years, more of the country's graduates have been believing it. In only one year between 1972 and 1980 did the number of high school graduates enlisting in the military top 65 percent. Since 1981, by contrast, at least eight out of 10 enlistees have had diplomas.

Veteran unemployment, though, remains, higher than the jobless rate as a whole (9 percent in June compared to 7.1 percent overall) and job analysts inside and outside the Defense Department are questioning and benefits of military service in the civilian job market. A large number—perhaps a majority—of recruits leave the military with few or no job skills useful in civilian occupations. Many have a difficult time finding work and readjusting to civilian life.

Some Pentagon officials privately acknowledge a problem. A preliminary study prepared for (but not yet approved by) the Defense Department that was made available to the STUDENT PRESS SERVICE documents the difficult time many enlistees have re-entering the civilian workplace, and it is critical of military policy in aiding veterans into decent jobs after their term of enlistment.

"Many of the training opportunities available in the military are excellent, but only a very small percentage who enlist ever get a chance to receive those services," says Randy Walker, a 20-year veteran of the Army who now works for the Texas Employment Commission in Houston, helping veterans find civilian jobs.

State employment officials in Texas, California, North Carolina and Maryland who were contacted by the STUDENT PRESS SERVICE all had similar views. Each office contacted serves a large number of recently discharged veterans from nearby military installations, and all officials agreed on this point: some military training can be transferred to civilian jobs, but only a minority of enlistees receive that kind of training; many others received few or no skills that are of value in civilian life. Says Walker: "As far as the direct translation of skills (to civilian jobs), oftentimes that's very hard. Only a small number ever get precision work or equipment repair. It depends a lot on the luck of the assignment."

Government data supports that conclusion. The Defense Department's Manpower Data Center estimates less than 11 percent of military assignments are for highly trained craftsmen, electricians or repairmen. By contrast, one-quarter are general infantry assignments, and another quarter are either supply handlers or in administrative personnel, including clerk typists. According to a study by the Congressional Budget Office, only one recruit in three gets an Army assignment considered "very technical." The proportion of technical jobs varies between service branches, however: The Air Force has by far the most occupations requiring high skill levels. The Marine Corps, made up mostly of combat positions, has the lowest.

Despite the growth of complex weapons systems, advanced communications equipment and the general spread of computers and high technology throughout the armed forces, the number of jobs requiring advance skills to operate sophisticated equipment is not expected to increase. According to the same CBO report, "the proportion of enlisted recruits assigned to comparatively technical jobs (such as operating and maintaining advanced electronic equipment) will increase by only about one percentage point between now and 1991."

The fact is, technological advances make many weapons and equipment easier to operate and simpler to repair, which could actually reduce required skill levels in some areas. For instance, the Army compared the performance of its new M-1 tank, manned with crews that scored in the lowest category on the Army's aptitude tests, to its old M-60 tanks when they were operated by GIs scoring in the highest percentile. The poorest qualified recruits in the M-1 did significantly better-by "killing more enemy tanks"—than did the top-notch soldiers in the old M-60.

In addition, those who do get the choice assignments that teach marketable skills tend to be the recruits who already have the best chance of making it in civilian jobs. The Army promises skills training "if you qualify," and everything hinges on the Armed Forces Qualifications Test plus a soldier's previous education. Those who come to the military most qualified are the first to get technical assignments. (That's a key reason why minorities get a smaller share of the most technical positions than whites, even though they enlist in the military in numbers proportionate to the population at large. The Defense Department estimates the proportion of whites in skilled craft jobs at roughly twice that of blacks.) One Army recruitment brochure profiled two "typical" recruits receiving advanced skills training—one in electronics, one in journalism. Both had two years of college prior to enlistment; only a fraction of all enlisted recruits have any education beyond high school.

The end result for many veterans, especially young ones who served short-term enlistments, is few job skills to show for their time in the service. "The two-, three-, four-year enlistees in general do not have marketable skills to go out and find employment just on the basis of their military training," says Martin Smith, a veterans employment representative near the Patuxent River Naval Air Station in Maryland. "It's more of a problem for the young veterans, those who are first-term enlistees."

The "Pax river" base, home of the Navy's test pilot school, hosts a larger number of better qualified enlistees than many military outposts, according to Smith, so he believes his office has an easier time placing veterans than in many areas. Still, many who pass through his office can't qualify for jobs in the local defense industries. "Usually the kids who get out with just two or four years experience just don't have a high enough skill level to go out there and get a job with a defense contractor." He estimates six out of ten need more training, and he often refers them to federal job training programs. "For about two-thirds of them what the military is giving them is not marketable."

R. E. Mueller, former Marine who is now a veteran employment counselor in Jacksonville, N. C., near the Camp Lejeune Marine Corps base, works with fewer enlistees who have technical training. The region's agricultural and light industry economy, he says, provides few openings for newly discharged recruits trained mostly in combat specialties, despite a statewide unemployment rate under 5 percent. "People (here) are in artillery, infantry, trained in tanks—there's a lot of that. They end up going into construction, which we have a lot of. The electronics people, air people, have to leave the area if they want a decent job. Most of the communications people are just dead unless they are repair people. The radio and telephone operators, the radio men, they've just wasted four years of their lives, that's all they've done. The Marine Corps is primarily a fighting machine, all they want to do is kill people. We don't have a lot of room for that out here." He puts the number of veterans in his area who use their military training in civilian jobs at "damn few."

Although there is little the military can do to give more enlistees training in their regular duty assignments, there are efforts, directed by the Labor Department for the Defense Department, to improve employment counseling and placement services for discharged veterans. Al Payne, who is testing a job counseling program that will eventually become the standard procedure for all enlistees leaving the service, is convinced many recruits have valuable skills but do not know how to sell them in the labor market. "Keep in mind, the military is not in the business of training people for the labor market. (But) many (veterans) do have skills and training that they have acquired while in the military that can transfer to the civilian labor market."

Others agree that many veterans' employment outlook could be improved if they simply had more guidance in how to look for jobs. "More and more what we are seeing," says Randy Walker in Houston, "is a critical problem in not knowing how to market the skills they do have."

There are other advantages to military service besides on-the-job training. Many young recruits are quickly shaped into disciplined workers who can maintain tough schedules, take orders, and deal with authority and organization. And of course, the military will pay for extra education, including college, during and after a term of enlistment. But the trouble there again is that those who need it the least often take the most advantage of it. Smith figures 20 percent of the veterans coming through his office took extra classes in the service, even though the military pays 75 percent of the cost. "Those 20 percent seem to be the smart kids anyway," he says. "I don't think the outside training opportunities for the first-term kids are making a great deal of difference." Adds Walker: "They've got to plan. They can go in and really help themselves, but most don't do that."

"Many start out as laborers," says Mueller. "Very few people really get what they want when they first get out of the military."

Reporter 'Takes the Challenge'

By Martin Sweeney, Student Press Service

I have always been one of those people who believed joining the Army wasn't exactly the best path toward a successful future. Still, there are times when I find myself whistling the "Be all the you can be" song or wishing I was cheering on the Cadets at the Army/Navy football game. The Army maintains a mystical quality. This mystique, fueled primarily by skepticism, drove me to find out more about it.

I went downtown to an Army recruiting office to pick up a pamphlet or two and see what they were telling the candidates. As I was leaving through a booklet on "The Army and You," I began to hear the sound of marching and chanting from down the hall. I noticed a darkened room to the right with people inside. A film was being shown. The recruiting sergeant noticed me lurking in the doorway and motioned for me to come in.

The room held about forty or so chairs, most of which were taken. All eyes were fixed on the screen, filled with scenes of intense physical training. Soldiers were barking out "yes, sir" and "no, sir." None of the soldiers in the film looked discouraged or tired; they looked intense. As the camera panned their determined faces, the narrator calmly explained the Army's "tough but understanding" disposition.

The film, about twenty minutes long, was packed with images that made me wonder why the Army had to recruit at all. Inter-racial couples rode carriages through the streets of London, friendly teachers went one-on-one to explain the basics in computers, happy families hugged their sons and daughters at basic training graduation, and camouflaged units discussed tactical maneuvers over hot coffee. It certainly wasn't the way I had ever envisioned the Army.

When the lights came on people turned to each other and talked about the "good" parts. Everyone quieted as the sergeant pulled up the screen and stood facing the group. He wasn't tough or rugged looking and struck me as more of an insurance salesman than an Army recruiter. He asked for any questions and virtually every hand raised except mine. He answered every question completely, no matter how obvious. After the long question/answer session, he invited anyone interested to see him for an individual conference. As the audience filed out, the sergeant approached me and introduced himself. He asked me what I thought of the film and if I would like to see him tomorrow to confirm my enlistment. I said I'd think it over. He was very polite and made sure I had a handful of brochures.

The first "Museum of World Cultures Travel Abroad-Travel Experiences Program" for the Fall of 1986 will be held Wednesday, October 15th from 7:30-9:00 p.m., Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall on the Campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The first lecture will be: "China-The New Way," by Bernard Bentley. For more information contact Paula Lapaire-Kamenish, Department of Modern Languages, office # 395-3598.

The ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR of the Seahawk is seeking correspondents from the fields of the visual arts, music, literature, radio, and writing to serve as liaisons between those groups/establishments in those fields of interest and the UNCW community.

In particular, we need people who are willing and able to help us coordinate fuller coverage of the Arts in the Cape Fear region as they apply to those fields of study and entertainment.

Help us keep you informed! Interested students should contact Tamara Drew at the Seahawk, Room 205 University Union - 395-3789/3229.

LivWell '86 Offers Variety of Events

"LIVWELL '86," a health promotion event for UNCW students, faculty and staff will be held from 10 a.m. - 2 p.m., Oct. 1 in front of the University Union. "LivWell '86" will consist of a variety of events aiming at the responsibility of maintaining one's health.

The event is sponsored by the UNCW Student Health & Wellness Center and is being coordinated by Health Promotion Services Coordinator Deborah Haywood.

The events and exhibits will focus on wellness within six dimensions: physical/nutritional, social/environmental, intellectual, occupational, spiritual and emotional.

Within each dimension, students are encouraged to participate in a variety of events. For example, UNCW nursing students will take vital signs such as blood pressure and heart rates in front of the Union.

There will also be cholesterol checks, information on substance abuse, stress management, and other social issues related to health.

Cape Fear Substance Abuse will have a mock ropes course set up in the trees in front of the Union. The course is part of an outdoor adventure program designed to build confidence.

According to Haywood, this year's wellness promotion has included a lot of community involvement.

"We will have Dr. Michael Donahue, a dermatologist, on hand to discuss skin problems and also Dr. Greg Howard to answer any questions on dental problems. We also have the topic of LivWell, which we took from the LivWell theme, where we will have information on healthy sex, relations, responsibility, and communication."

Along with informative events and displays, there will be free snacks as well as entertainment provided by the UNCW Gospel Choir and the Jazz Ensemble. A drawing for health related prizes will also be held. The prizes include a bicycle, a three-month membership to a health club, and a $25 gift certificate from a local sporting goods store.

"This is our second year with this promotion," Haywood said, "and we hope to see lots of faculty and students out there enjoying themselves as well as learning more about being healthy."

Modern Languages Offering Foreign Film Series

The UNCW Foreign Film Series is offering the following films free to students:

futuristic aircraft, including helicopters and swept wing jets.

Martin has served in Alaska, Hawaii and Fort Ord, California, where he taught basic training.

"Made a lot of friends there," Martin grins.

UNCW is the first ROTC program that Martin has been involved with, and he has been in the Wilmington area for just over a year.

Martin has been in the service just under twenty years.

Martin is married and has one son in a military academy.

Atlantis Accepting Submissions

The Atlantis, UNCW's student literary art magazine, is currently accepting submissions at the information desk of the University Union.

UNCW students are encouraged to submit poetry, short stories, essays, plays, artwork, photography, original music scores and any experimental works.

Deadline for fall submissions is October 27, at 5:00 p.m.

Don't forget—

October 29 is the deadline to apply for graduation in Spring, 1987. Seniors should register with the Career Planning and Placement Office.

World Cultures Studies China

The Museum of World Cultures Club is presenting "Travel Abroad—Travel Experiences Program" for the fall of 1986.

The first lecture will be "China—The New Way". Bernard Bentley, member of the recent entourage to Dandong, China, Wilmington's New Sister City, will host the presentation and slide show.

The program will be held Oct. 15th from 7:30-9:00 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

After the presentation there will be a chaired discussion and question and answer session with the audience.

Admission to the program is free.

Future topics and speakers include "The Soviet Union", a presentation to be given by Dr. Ralph Brauer and "Peru - A Work Experience", to be given by an UNCW student.

For more information, call Paula Lapaire-Kamenish 395-3598

Art Classes Set

An Oct. 21 registration deadline has been set for two adult art classes to be taught by Sybil Thearing through UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ROTC Not Majoring in Rambo

Recently, the UNCW Department of Military Science was granted its independence, so to speak, when we became a host institution. Until that point, ROTC here had been a part of the Campbell University group in Buies Creek, N.C.

This upgrading brought UNCW's ROTC more control over itself, and increased the staff by three more full time instructors.

In times past, there have been cries of an over military presence on any campus, because ROTC was training youth to be baby killers, and wild eyed crazies who shot little old ladies in the back for fun.

Two weeks ago, we joined the ROTC cadre from here on a field trip. None of the cadets were drooling in anticipation of chowing up the Cub Scout pack who came to the park as we were leaving; indeed, the most popular members of the group were the children whose fathers had come on the trip. One little girl couldn't reach the water fountain, and three cadets almost broke their necks trying to help her up to the spigot.

Doesn't sound like a bunch of brutes to me.

In his speech at the Host Luncheon last month, Brig. Gen. Peter Lash, commander of all ROTC groups in this region, said that Reserve Officer Training programs were not necessarily designed to bring about great military officers as much as they were to bring out people who can lead—whether that be in a business, on a parade ground, or in an emergency.

The next time you see a cadet walking down the hall, don't sneer at him or her because they are wearing a uniform.

That person is one of the few who will be defending this country—your home—from "any threats, foreign or domestic".

And that includes protecting babies and little old ladies.

Paper vs. Politicians

In recent weeks, an underground newspaper by the name of The Hawk has been distributed around campus. The first edition of this tabloid was apparently an attempt to do nothing more than slander Mr. B. Allen Dudley, Student Body President. The Hawk made enough insulting remarks about Mr. Dudley, the SGA, The Seahawk and the University in general to discredit itself.

During this time, we at the Seahawk thought that we had stood by the SGA sufficiently to show our support for this organization - as an independent group, not as the SGA's newsletter. In no way is The Seahawk subject to the censorship of the SGA. According to The Hawk, The Seahawk is subject to censorship by the SGA.

At every Senate meeting, one of our reporters is there to cover fairly any all of what goes on, and it gets printed - even when that reporter is put on trial by the Senate.

If the students want a newspaper, that is fine. We are trying to put out a quality product the school can be proud of.

The only problem is that some folks just want to roast anyone who is media.

Apparently, some folks are only interested in a newspaper when it can serve their interests - the quality of the paper is not important. Some other folks are just not happy unless they have a newspaper, not to read, but to chew on.

If those people think they can put out a better newspaper that will serve this campus better, that is fine.

Why didn't they apply for editor?

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

There she is... Miss America? Perhaps.

On Saturday, November 1st at 8 p.m., Kenan Auditorium will be the setting for the 1987 Miss University of North Carolina Wilmington Pageant. This is the second year for the pageant. However, this is the first year the winner will advance to the Miss North Carolina Pageant, and perhaps on to Miss America.

Contestants must be females between the ages of 17 and 26 and should be full-time students at UNCW. All contestants will compete in interview, talent, evening gown and swimsuit. Five judges, approved by the executive director of the Miss North Carolina Pageant, will decide on the winner. Those women placing as second, first and winner will receive a scholarship, trophy and various prizes. The winner will advance to the Miss North Carolina Pageant in Raleigh, next June. Tickets for the pageant are available at the SGA office, or can be purchased on the night of the pageant.

The pageant is sponsored by the Student Government Association. Pageant director is Mitchell W. Butts. Butts, a student and an employee of WECT-TV, is well experienced in the world of pageantry. He has been an assistant director for the Miss Spivey's Corner Pageant, and has produced and directed pageants for Western Piedmont College and Catawba Valley College. He has choreographed numerous pageants across the state. Butts is well

Red Meat vs. The Red Menace

For years, people have been feeling guilty any time they were beginning to enjoy a meal, a little bug inside their head would say, "You're gonna get fat... You know that you are not supposed to enjoy eating. Eating is a sin, A SIN!"

Well, after long research, I have found out the truth about eating.

Eating is not a sin. It can be fun. There is nothing wrong with eating. The myth that eating is a sin is in actuality a long, involved Communist plot.

That's right. You've been feeling guilty about eating for all this time because of some smart Russians.

It started out when they infiltrated several agents into our country. These agents posed as nutritionalists, or some other unlikely-sounding official name, and they came in and told all of us red meat loving Americans that we were wrong.

What do you mean, its not good for you? We ask. We've been eating red meat for years and we are fine and dandy. My Uncle Joe ate red meat every day, and he lived to be 91.

Yes, they say, but he could have lived to be 100 if he hadn't eaten red meat all those years.

Of course, what they don't know is that Uncle Joe was shot by the daddy of his twenty year old girlfriend, but that's another story.

The plot goes like this.

All of us red blooded red-meat eating Americans are supposed to stop eating the foods we love, and because of that, there will be a food surplus while we are all reduced to eating yogurt sprinkled with wheat fiber and raisins (raisins are pretty good actually, but not when you pollute them with all that other junk.)

During this food shortage, the Head Red (in Moscow), will call up whomever the president is over here and say, "Hey, you good hearted American, we have a lot of starving little kids over here. Think you could spare a can of Vienna sausages and a moon pie or two for the little tykes?"

Being the good hearted American that he is, the Pres will say, "sure, be glad to. After all, since our people have gotten on to this health kick, there's all this food left over. Nancy and I still eat steak and fried chicken and pork, but most of My Fellow Americans are to busy sweating and hurting themselves at aerobic health spas to eat. You know, of course, that all that red meat does build up all kinds of bad stuff in your body?"

Yes, replies the Commissar, licking his chops.

"You do know," says the Pres, "that feeding children red meat will make them catch cancer, go blind and die?"

"Anything to keep their poor darlings from starving," smiles the Head Red.

"It's your funeral," says the President.

"That's what you think," mutters the Head Red.

So, we start feeding the Russkies. Those kids still go hungry, but the army gets fed. Real well fed... Fed better than we are over here.

Eventually, the Russkies get well fed to the point that they attack us, and finally take over the country, and think about what that would do to the Cubs chances at winning the pennant this year.

However, we can defeat this dastardly plot against Mom, apple pie, hot dogs and Red, White and Blue beer. We can save Momma's homemade deli your mouth harm biscuits from going to feed them nasty foreigners.

Just go on down to the grocery store, by all the ham and bacon and beef steak you can, and have a big cookout.

Have a good ol' pigpickin', with a hog the size of Uncle Joe's Cadillac, with fat cozzin' down the sides (of the hog, not the Cadillac).

Then you can set back with an RC Cola (the only kind that ain't been made into a diet cola) and be proud that you have done your patriotic duty as an American.

Be strong. Eat American.

(Ed. Note - Shortly before press time it was discovered that RC had indeed started production of a diet cola. Nothing is sacred any more.)

Reviewer Neglects Cast Members Claims Writer

Dear Editor,

In reference to the review of Sweeney Todd, I must disagree with some points made by Mitchell Butz. First of all, the blackouts in the play were due to the changing of scenes. This is done in almost every play, not only in Sweeney Todd. Second of all, the reviewer left out two very important names in his write-up. The first was Sam Garner. Garner is the managing director of Thalian Association and if it were not for him Wilmingtonians would not have been able to view this great play. The second name that was failed to be mentioned was Sandra Tracy. Tracy was prop mistress and was in charge of all the props used in the play. She along with others spent months gathering, borrowing, and buying objects used for the play.

Also, other mistakes by the reviewer were (one) Anthony did not throw out the bird, it was Beadle and (two) the significance of Sweeney Todd entering from the audience could be detected by most viewers. With this in mind, may I suggest a second review be considered. I feel that it is necessary to have all aspects considered when reviewing a play.

However, as Mitchell Butz states it, this is just an opinion and everyone has one.

Since classes began on Aug. 27, two controversial events have been brought to my attention.

First, our new mascot has received a great deal of discussion and print over the last couple of weeks. The mascot change has been long overdue! It is about time we got a "tougher" image for our athletic teams. "Rambird", as he is called by some students, is something we can be proud of, unlike his embarrassing, wimpy predecessor. I have had friends from ECU come to a basketball game and laugh at our "twenty" bird mascot. The SGA and athletic department should be commended on their design and wished the best of luck for a successful season in all sports.

Secondly, the Delta Tau Delta "Beauty of UNCW" calendar has upset a handful of female students and faculty members. As usual, they use the same worn out arguments of "exploitation of women", "downgrading", "expecting all women to have perfect bodies", etc. When will these women realize that the feminist movement is dead! They lost their support when they began following the "lesbian politics" philosophy of a world independent of men. Women will never achieve this goal no more than men will accomplish the obverse (Not that any NORMAL man would want to). The ladies who were photographed did not feel that they were being exploited by men. The ones I spoke with felt flattered the guys in Delta Tau Delta found them attractive and wished to pose for this excellent fund raising idea. One in particular said her parents loved it so much, "they sent copies to all my relatives".

Fortunately, the majority of the women in America are not influenced by the crying of this select minority over every little thing. This is 1986 and women today can accomplish any goal they set their mind to and still retain the basic female qualities of motherhood, etc.

In conclusion I would like to wish Delta Tau Delta best of luck with their sales and would encourage them to make this an annual project.

For the Love of Rambo

My Turn With Kim Ordmand

It has been almost a year since President Reagan withdrew the United States from the World Court—an action meant to symbolize America's stand on terrorism. Has this action done what it could in terms of terrorism, or has it done more harm than good?

First of all—let's look at Reagan's proposed reasons for withdrawal. Here I must give credit where credit is due. The withdrawal from the World Court is what Mr. Reagan has been teaching the American people about foreign policy since he became president—and even before, as a candidate.

We live in a world of enemies so we must be cruel and heartless. We mustn't be bothered with trivialities or niceties such as the law or other commitments. Others use terrorism so we must use the same thing. America won't take it any more.

These have been Reagan's themes and for the most part have matched the national mood. Americans were tired of complexity and frustration. As usual, they longed for the easy way out—the simple frontier myth, in which a man tough enough could set things right on his own. They longed for "Rambo."

But of course this is a myth. No one man can shape the world events as he wishes—a world where the religions, the superpowers, and the economic dependency of the various countries are intertwined. Basically the president did manage to face some reality; he dealt pragmatically with the TWA hostage takers. But in terms of the World Court—he was off base.

What is the World Court and why am I making such a fuss after a year? Well—the International Court of Justice (World Court) is an integral part of the United Nations, whose purpose is to serve as the principal judicial sections of the U. N. It is to provide advisory opinions of legal issues requested of it by the various nations. It has served as a purposeful institution for the U. S. for the past 40 years in terms of trying to build a court and a system of international law.

Why then did the U. S. walk away? Simple. The World Court decided an issue against the American position. It held that it has the jurisdiction to hear out Nicaragua's complaint about U. S. sponsored terrorism. According to the State Department it would endanger our vital national interests to remain in the Court. So we walked out.

Has the action stopped terrorism in any way? No, not really. Airports are still main targets for terrorism, reporters are still main targets...etc. I have given this withdrawal a year to show me that it would do some good and frankly I don't see any at all. The withdrawal strikes out at an institution that has stood for all America supposedly believes in: law. How sad that fear, anger, and the ever-increasing "Rambo" doctrine will allow such damage to be done to the ideals of the American people.

Editor's note: We are proud to welcome The Swami Gitchigami to the ranks of the Seahawk staff. The Swami hails from a large uninhabited island in the center of a lake by the name of Yetisparylots deep in the Himalayan Mountains of Tibet. One of our staff members spent three months on high mountain trails being led by an Abominable Snowperson before reaching Lake Yetisparylots and asking the Swami to become a columnist for the Seahawk. The Swami agreed, but only on the grounds that he be allowed to start a collection of Rolls-Royce automobiles and not forced to watch daytime television or the Brady Bunch at any time. After much discussion, the editors decided to yield to these demands, and so we present to you The Swami Gitchigami.

ARIES—You overflow with marvelous new ideas this week. The problem lies with the fact that you will develop serious problems tying your shoelaces. Few people listen to people who can't tie their own shoelaces. Maybe better luck next week.

SCORPIO—Show off your stinging wit this week. You're entitled.

SAGITARIUS—All your dreams will come true: fame, fortune, and delicious happiness forever. (Do you believe that?)

CAPRICORN—The Goat is completely out to pasture this time around. Pluto is currently passing through the House of Goofy, and Goofy is a good word to describe you this week.

AQUARIUS—The water bearer will be having a pretty nifty week, Swami thinks. Intellectual and romantic pursuits are highlighted. Swami likes Aquarian women; perhaps Aquarian women like to go on magic carpet ride with Swami, hmmm?

PISCES—You may experience short interludes of sobriety this week. Please enjoy these moments and try to do something normal for a change, like getting out of bed before noon.

New Faces in the Seahawk Office

The UNCW Seahawk has an all new staff this year.

The UNCW Media Publications Board named a new editor last Thursday for the Seahawk this year.

Jefferson C. Weaver, a junior English major, was named to the position after the board reviewed applications submitted for the position and interviewed all applicants.

Jeff has extensive experience writing and doing layout and photography for several newspapers. He also grew up with journalism since both his mother and father are newspaper reporters.

As editor-in-chief, Jeff has assembled a staff of both professional journalists and people who are just interested in journalism.

Joseph B. Allen is managing editor. Joseph, a physics major, has written for This Week and Encore magazines and several other newspapers and magazines.

Tamara Drew, Entertainment Editor, writes regularly for This Week magazine in addition to her work at the Seahawk. Tamara also is a talent agent and works for a recording studio.

Sports Editor Matt Shanklin works in the Sports Information Office on campus and is currently working on a booklet about women's basketball. Matt is an experienced sports writer who has contributed sports information to the Wilmington Star.

Richard L. Bartrug III is the new Business/Sales Manager. Rick has worked for WLOZ—Campus Radio as a public service director and is a music education major.

In charge of layout and design is Terry Pope. Terry has a journalism degree from UNC-Chapel Hill and has worked for the Brunswick Beacon doing layout and design and as a staff writer.

For the first time, the Seahawk has a staff cartoonist. Joseph Morton is contributing his original comic strip, Bloop, as well as drawing editorial cartoons.

Staff writers include: D. Curtis Nicholas, Michael Young, Wes Perry, Anne Simpson, Jerry Boyette, T. James Stanley, Olivia Kayler, and Kim Ordmand.

Advertising sales consultants are Rick Bartrug and Anne Simpson.

Staff typists are Michelle Bruce, Michele Justice, Kimberly Ann Jones, Brenda Acanfora, Kim Wallace and Sheri Brisson.

Distributors are Brad Simpson and Michael Young.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood, campus minister

"We are essentially spiritual as well as natural creatures... life in its fullness, the life which shall develop and use all our capabilities and fulfill all our possibilities, must involve correspondence and fulfill all our possibilities, must involve correspondence not only with our visible and ever-changing, but also with our invisible and unchanging environment; the Spirit of all spirits, God, in whom we live and move and have our being... The significance, the greatness of humanity, consists in our ability to do this."

It is absolutely normal that many people during their college years, walk away from the religious practices which were a part of their upbringing, particularly if such participation was mainly habitual and did not lead to some significant experiences. After all, much of what we did religiously was part of our parental upbringing and since this was a "Please mom and dad, I'd rather do it myself" place in our lives, it seems easy to cast off the precept "Go to church" along with many other parental "do's and don't's".

Fine, lest I am concerned that we throw the "baby out with the bathwater." We outgrow some beliefs and even some religious pictures do not feel relevant to the present issues of our lives, but if we shut down the spiritual dimension of our personal life, then we really are in danger of damaging our process of growth and becoming. For we are spiritual beings, beings in search of meaning, value and some sense of connectedness to "our invisible, unchanging environment."

The Inquiring Reporter

What do you think of the new Seahawk?

Mary Coward, Junior English major: "I like the paper's new format because it has a lot more to offer, and it's better organized. I'm glad that the Seahawk staff finally got it together. The new paper has a lot more information than ever before. I would like to see a little more of arts and literature. The paper was good overall, but I didn't really like the Horrorscope; I thought it was a little flip or contrived."

Sherry Lynn Brisson, Sophomore English major: "I like what has been done with the paper. The paper is more student oriented. The students can relate to the articles. The paper is more fun to read. All in all I think the paper has really improved, and I enjoy it much more. The Seahawk should have some more articles that would bring more realization to the students. Overall I saw a real improvement."

Sir Maximilian Fangsley, esq. Visitor.

Mr. Fangsley, having forgotten his spectacles that day, had no comment on the new paper.

Bobby Joe Springer, Senior, Physical Education major: "I liked the new format. The paper had a good combination of pictures and articles. It's on the rise. I was pleased to see more sports."

Harry Willett, Junior Math major: "I thought the paper was adequate, but I really haven't looked at it that closely."

Orchestra Opens New Season

Tuesday, October 7th the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra will open the 1986-87 season at 8pm in Kenan Auditorium. Tenor John Gilmore of the Metropolitan Opera and University Foundation Distinguished Visiting Professor for the 1986-87 academic year will be performing several arias from the Italian Operas. The Orchestra's program, which consists solely of opera, will include: Mozart's Overture to Don Giovanni, Overture to La Forza del Destino by Verdi, and Beethoven's Leonore Overture Number Three.

Tuesday will also mark Dr. Steven Errante's Wilmington premier as conductor of the symphony. Dr Errante moved to Wilmington from the University of Richmond.

MATT SHANKLIN, EDITOR

Miami-Oklahoma: More Than Just a Football Game

The Miami "Hurricanes" have proved very early this season that they deserved to be national collegiate football champions. They proved this with a 28-16 dismantling of 1985 National Champions and No. 1 ranked Oklahoma.

The Hurricanes hushed all the talk generated before the game as they showed the Sooners the same treatment they gave them last year in a 27-14 win at Norman, OK. But this game was much different than last year's. It represented a true clash of titans, both on and off the field. The clash between these two teams goes far deeper than a battle between No. 1 and No. 2.

It all started when Miami defeated Oklahoma last year. Miami was bitter that it was not considered highly for the national championship, yet Oklahoma was, despite the Hurricanes' showing in Norman. The focus was centered on the battle between Oklahoma and then No. 1 Penn State in the Orange Bowl. Miami Head Coach Jimmy Johnson argued that if Oklahoma defeated Penn State while his troops knocked off Tennessee, then his Hurricanes should be No. 1. Oklahoma Head Coach Barry Switzer countered by saying if his team (which was ranked No. 2 while Miami was No. 3) beat Penn State, his Sooners should be No. 1. This was followed by a verbal war between the Miami clan and the Oklahoma folks. This was only the start of what has turned into a bitter rivalry.

The game itself had three battles. The first was between teams ranked No. 1 and No. 2. A second was between Heisman candidates Vinny Testaverde and Brian Bosworth. The final conflict was between coaches; Miami's Johnson versus Oklahoma's Switzer.

The first battle was won by Miami with their victory over Oklahoma. The bitterness between the two was best exemplified by the fight that occurred on the Oklahoma side of the field late in the game. Although uncalled for, it represented the release of a weeks long pressure. Score 1 for Miami.

The second battle existed between Miami quarterback Testaverde and Oklahoma linebacker extraordinaire, Brian Bosworth. Bosworth is one of the first defensive players to be highly touted for the Heisman. Testaverde, a finalist for last year's award, is considered by many as the top choice this year. Saturday's battle proved just that as Testaverde passed for four touchdowns against the defense of Bosworth. It was just one of those special days for Testaverde as he was near perfect. Bosworth had a good day and showed everyone his craziness by diving into a pileup without his helmet. Yet it was Testaverde's day that overshadowed the "Boz". Score another for Miami.

The final clash took place between Switzer and Johnson. Johnson used to coach at Oklahoma State before coming to Miami. This was the beginning of the verbal war that has flared up since Johnson took over the Miami program from Howard Schnellenberger.

The verbal battle flared even more during the bowl season. Johnson got the shortend of the straw after boasting his team as No. 1, only to see them pummeled by Tennessee in the Sugar Bowl. Switzer could only snicker as his Sooners beat Penn State and claimed the national championship.

This year's battle saw much of the same but Johnson was able to put action behind his words and show Switzer up for the first time in his coaching career. Score another one for Miami.

Saturday's battle could take place again on Jan. 1 in the Orange Bowl. Oklahoma, a Big 8 member, could win their conference and an automatic bid to the Orange Bowl. Miami, whose schedule is on the lighter side the rest of the year, could be undefeated and willing to accept a rematch on their home field.

The Miami-Oklahoma matchup is developing into one of the better rivalries in college football today. As college football fans, we can only sit back and enjoy.

The action was prompted by an incident during WVU's home opener versus Northern Illinois when two persons required hospital treatment after being hit by a liquor bottle. The bottle was believed to be thrown from the student section.

In basketball news, Davidson's final appeal to retain basketball playing membership in the Southern Conference was rejected by faculty representatives of the league schools. Davidson violated league bylaws by joining a new football league called the Colonial. The school will probably now try and join the Colonial Athletic Association, the same conference UNCW is in. This move may prove fruitless because the CAA already has eight members, with none expecting to leave and nine teams would complicate post-season tournaments. Last year, Davidson won the Southern Conference basketball crown and lost in the first round of the NCAA tournament to Kentucky. . . Center Chad Keller, who started 10 games down the stretch for CAA member James Madison has transferred to East Tennessee State. Earlier, Keller expressed an interest in transferring to Miami of Ohio.

HAWK SQUADS: The UNCW home soccer match with the Deacons of Wake Forest University has been rescheduled for next season. The Seahawks and Deacons were slated to play Oct. 15 at Brooks Field. UNCW Now 2-5-1 As

Booters Fall to CAA Rivals

By Matt Shanklin
Staff Writer

WILMINGTON, NC - The UNCW soccer team is having a hard time finding some offense in its past five games. In these games, the Seahawks have been outscored 17-0. The streak, which started on Sept. 14 at George Mason, is a school record. It breaks the old record of three straight shutouts by the 1969 UNCW soccer squad. The latest additions to the shutout streak are Navy (1-0) and American University (3-0) this past weekend. This streak does not stress a lack of effort on the part of Blackmore's troops.

The Hawks opened the weekend against fellow Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) member Navy. The Midshipmen, who have also been struggling, came into Saturday's contest with a 1-4-1 record. The Middies strong point is defense and the game featured just that.

Both teams came out a little tentative, resulting in very few scoring chances and a scoreless first half. UNCW, which had generated little offense in its past games, put some needed pressure on goalie Harry Schmidt and the Midshipmen in the second half. David Cresswell had one excellent chance, only to have his shot just miss wide.

The Seahawks also tried to take advantage of some uncharacteristic play from All-CAA goalie Schmidt. On more than one occasion, Schmidt was caught out of position, but the Hawks just couldn't convert. On other occasions, Schmidt, who finished with seven saves, was at his best and was able to turn the Seahawks away.

Midway through the second half, the 90 degree heat and humidity began to take its toll as the play began to suffer. The defenses, as well as offenses of both teams began to make more mistakes. UNCW made one late in the game that proved costly.

This mistake resulted in the game-winning goal which came with just 4:38 remaining in the game. Scott Miller beat UNCW down the left wing, and shot from about 14 feet out. UNCW goalie Donnie Lewis made a good save, but Navy's Jeff Jacober came rushing in to head the rebound into the net. UNCW was not able to get the equalizer before time ran out and fell 1-0.

"I'm not disappointed at all," said Blackmore after the game. "Our defense did a nice job and we had our chances to score. We did generate some offense today. We just made one mistake and that cost us the game."

Sunday proved no better for the Seahawks as they hosted 1985 NCAA runnerup, American University. The Eagles, which pushed UCLA to the limit last year before bowing out 1-0, came into their CAA matchup with the Seahawks with a struggling 4-4 record. The Eagles started out slow, but were showing signs of the Eagles of old when they shutout East Carolina the day before 4-0.

American came out strong, taking an early 1-0 lead at the 5:58 mark on a goal by Todd Trimble. AU extended that lead on a UNCW blunder in the backfield. The Hawks were in the process of passing back to goaltender Lewis when Fred Willumsen intercepted a pass, crossed it in front of the goal, and Steve Marland headed it in past a helpless Lewis. Lewis played an outstanding game, finishing with a season-high 11 saves.

The second half saw UNCW apply some pressure with the help of the wind. UNCW, who was outshot 19-9, could not seem to break the AU defense. The Eagles played a ball control offense in the second half and when an opportunity arose late in the game, Coach Pete Mhlert's troops were there. This occurred with just 7:32 remaining in the contest as Mike Iannucci blistered a shot past Lewis for the final American goal.

"I thought we played hard defensively," said Blackmore Sunday. "We had our chances to score, but they have a lot of talent and play well together."

With the win, American moves to 5-4 and 2-0 in the CAA.

"We had lacked composure up front, but that is coming around," said American coach Pete Mhlert. "In the first half, we took advantage of the wind and we wanted to put as much pressure on UNCW as possible to see what they had. In the second half, we slowed things down to keep the advantage."

As Jackie Blackmore searches for the answers to the UNCW problems, things will not get any easier for the Hawks, as they travel Thursday to East Carolina to take on the Pirates. The Seahawks must get things righted or face being in the cellar of the tough CAA.

Water Polo places 2nd

BY D. CURTIS NICHOLS

The Duke Blue Devils captured the first-ever North Carolina Water Polo Championship this weekend at UNCW. Also, competing in their home waters was the UNC Wilmington and UNC Chapel Hill.

The three team tournament opened with UNCW defeating UNC Chapel Hill, 19-14. The win was the first ever for freshmen goalie Rob Miecznikowski. Duke University eliminated UNC Chapel Hill from the tournament by the score of 23-7. This set up a showdown between the two squads for the mythical North Carolina state title.

Duke won the match 15-7, but the score did not tell the real story. Duke took an early first half lead, but after that the Seahawks played their tough.

"Duke is a skilled team and they got too much of a lead, but after that we played as well as they did," Coach Marc Ellington stated.

Steve Stokes lead all Seahawk scorers with an impressive 13 goals. Nine of the goals came against UNC Chapel Hill.

"This years aquad is mostly compiled of freshmen. It is a rebuilding year but with some experience they can compete with anyone," Ellington said.

This weekend the Water Polo team will compete in the first round of the Southern League Varsity Tournament at George Washington University.

Lane's Golfers Finish Eighth at JMV Inv.

FROM STAFF REPORTS

UNCW's men's golf team finished eighth out of 22 teams in its second outing of the season in the James Madison University Invitational at the Olde Mill Golf Course at Ground Hog Mountain, Va.

UNCW's David Teem was tied for the lead after the first day of play with a 74, but shot an 80 on the final day to finish tied for eighth at 154.

Richmond won the event with a 303-301-604 total, followed by Virginia Commonwealth at 316-304-620 and Guilford at 316-308-624. UNCW had a 322-319-641 total for eighth place.

Behind Teem at 154 for UNCW was Richard Kimble (80-82-162), Travis Connor (85-79-164), Jay Wyrick (94-78-172), and Brian Hepler (83-95-178).

The UNCW golfers don't play again until Oct. 20-21 when the Seahawks compete in the Campbell University Invitational at Buies Creek, N. C.

Lady Seahawks Place Fourth

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Sandy Chester was the team medalist for UNCW for the second straight tournament, firing a two-day total of 160 as UNCW placed fourth out of nine teams in the Eastern College Athletic Conference Women's Golf Tournament over the weekend.

Coach Lea Dudley's Lady Seahawks played concurrently in the James Madison University Invitational, finishing sixth in the JMU tourney.

JMU won the ECAC event with a 650 total, and Longwood captured the JMU tournament with an identical score.

The UNCW volleyball team completed their second week of competition with a split. The Lady nets defeated Coastal Carolina College in a hard fought match while falling to The College of William and Mary Saturday.

In Conway, SC, the Seahawk spikers won a five game marathon match. The scores of the games were 11-15, 15-13, 15-7, 10-15, and 15-9.

"Lisa Mills blocked well while Martha Bryd led the team defensively," explained Assistant Coach Elaine Penn.

The second match of the week was against defending Colonial Athletic Association champions William and Mary. UNCW fell to the Lady Tribe by scores of 15-4, 15-11, 15-3.

The Lady Hawks' record now is 3-2 and 0-1 in the conference. They return to action against Campbell University this week.

Dunphy Captures CAA Award

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Martin Dunphy, a freshman goalkeeper from George Mason University, was named Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) player-of-the-week by the CAA headquarters in Richmond, Va for the week of Sept. 22.

In his first collegiate start, Dunphy made 10 saves as the Patriots tied Clemson 0-0 in overtime last Sunday (Sept. 21) in Fairfax. Dunphy played all 110 minutes against the Tigers, who entered the game ranked fourth nationally. Against North Carolina the day before, Dunphy made four saves and did not allow a goal in 32 minutes as GMV won 5-3. In four appearances (232 minutes) this season, Dunphy has 18 saves and no goals allowed.

Seahawk Athlete of the Week

FROM STAFF REPORTS

WILMINGTON, NC - Junior soccer player Donnie Lewis has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the UNCW sports information office.

Lewis, a goaltender from Fayetteville, NC, played outstanding in goal against Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) opponents Navy and American this past weekend. In Saturday's game with Navy, a 1-0 loss, Lewis collected six saves. The lone goal came on a defensive mistake following a Lewis save.

In Sunday's game with 1985 NCAA runnerup American, a 3-0 loss that extended UNCW's scoreless streak to five, Lewis collected a season-high 11 saves, eight coming in the second half.

"That was as good a game as (Harry) Schmidt played Saturday," said Coach Jackie Blackmore of Lewis' play Sunday. "In my opinion, he is every bit as good as Schmidt who was the top goalie in the CAA last year."

Against American, Lewis was responsible for just one goal as the other two, one of which was an intercepted back pass to Lewis, were defensive miscues.

"It is very unfortunate that we haven't scored more goals for him," said Blackmore of UNCW's offensive output. "If we could win a few games, maybe Donnie would get some of the recognition he deserves."

For the season, Lewis has recorded 55 saves in 760 minutes of play. Lewis averaged 0.89 goals allowed last season with seven shutouts, but has given up

Cross Returns To Thalian Hall

Mike Cross appears at Thalian Hall this weekend.

Thalian is Hub for Riverfest Events

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts will be the location for three major events preceding and during Riverfest '86.

On Thursday, Oct. 2, the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts and the Art Council of the Lower Cape Fear will sponsor the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival's touring production of LOVE'S LABOUR LOST. This classic, romantic comedy is one of Shakespeare's most delightful plays. Tickets are priced at $8 and $6, half price for students and Senior Citizens. Performance is at 8:00 pm.

On Friday, Oct. 3, the Thalian Hall Classical Concert Series will present Ballet South and a company of 20 dancers directed by Dame Sonia Arova, in a performance of "Romeo and Juliet". The performance is at 8:00 pm. Tickets are $8 for adults and $6 for students and Senior Citizens. Also, on that Friday at 4:00 pm, the company will give a master class at the Community Arts Center for a fee

On Saturday, Oct. 4, the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts is particularly pleased to once again present MIKE CROSS IN CONCERT for two performances at 7:30 pm. and 10:00 pm. Cross' beautiful blend of all styles of music, done in toe-tapping styles and interspersed with his own unique brand of story-telling and humor continues to delight audiences all over the United States. Cross gave two standing room only performances in Thalian Hall during Riverfest '85, so be sure to order your tickets early. Tickets are $15 and $10.

FOR TICKETS TO ALL PERFORMANCES, CALL THE THALIAN HALL CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS BOX OFFICE AT (919) 763-3398 OR 763-9328. BOX OFFICE HOURS ARE MONDAY THROUGH SATURDAY FROM 10:00 AM. UNTIL 5:30 PM. AND SUNDAY FROM 1:00 PM UNTIL 5:00 PM.

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Ten years have passed since Mike Cross released his first album and made the sound he calls the "Appalachian Mountain Boogie Blues" a concrete frontrunner on the North Carolina music scene. Now, seven albums and thousands of gigs later, North Carolina's favorite entertainer has risen to national prominence as a result of his unique combination of humorous lyrics, hot pickin', and high energy stage performance.

For the second year in a row, Cross will appear in concert at Thalian Hall during Wilmington's Riverfest celebration to perform that unique combination of original songs, old time mountain fiddle tunes, 12 string bottleneck blues, and Irish jigs and reels that has attracted so much attention throughout the country. By coupling his own brand of homespun humor with extraordinary musicianship, Cross is known for presenting an outstanding show wherever he goes.

His original lyrics and stories have been heralded as humorous in a style reminiscent of Mark Twain and Will Rogers, and his particular style of musical artistry had been lauded for excellence in Record World, Cash Box, and Variety magazine. Variety magazine described him as "an almost dauntlessly versatile writer and performer."

The most remarkable thing, though, is the fact that it is all a quick of fate. Cross, a native of Lenoir, was happily pursuing a college degree on a golf scholarship when destiny intervened and led him down the path to a life in music. After a bout with flu left him recuperating at a friend's house in the midst of a snowstorm, Cross found himself intrigued by the guitar sounds created by Larry Reynolds, a roommate of that friend.

Cross spent the next two days learning - chords from Reynolds, after which learning to play the guitar became an obsession. Cross is philosophical about the way that those few days changed his life's direction. In a recent phone interview, he explained that he became "a participant in a dance that was already playing."

"I've tried to figure it out. I guess life's what happens when you're making other plans. Destiny leads you in a direction that you're not aware of but are already prepared for," he said.

Cross feels that the discipline he learned in sports actually helped him prepare for a musical career, and added that one thing that he loves most about music is the fact that musicians contribute to each other, whereas in sports, he didn't like the competitive element - the fact that "your buddy becomes your opponent."

After he started playing music professionally, Cross continued his education by spending two years in law school, but his following grew and the musical opportunities continued to abound. He took up the fiddle as a second instrument, and the overwhelming success of his first album, "Child Prodigy," convinced Cross to dedicate himself to music full time. Cross' second album, "Born in the Country," was released in 1977 and was a Recommended LP Pick in Billboard Magazine.

Since the first album's release in 1976, he has performed at colleges and festivals throughout the country, and has experienced a number of transitions during those past ten years on the road. One major transition was adjusting to playing major concert halls after years of gigs at colleges, bars, and clubs. Another was getting used to recording in a studio atmosphere. "I've played on stage thousands and thousands of times, but I've only recorded seven albums. I'm just getting used to it." Cross explained that live performances involve reaching out to people, whereas in the studio, you have to focus all of the energy on simply hitting notes and trying, in effect, to "reach the machine."

"The problem," he said, "is that you get locked into what you anticipated, compared with what you actually did. What you expect it to sound like versus how it sounds. The hard thing is trying to get rid of the preconceptions about the sound. But at least you can erase the tape if it sounds bad."

Cross' seventh album, "SOLO AT MIDNIGHT," was released within the last year and is selling well. He has two projects planned for the future, but has set no release dates as of yet. He records at TGS Studios in Chapel Hill, which is owned and operated by engineer/producer Steve Rhoadack and is, according to Cross, conveniently located in the woods not far from his home.

Cross, who toured almost constantly for ten years, confined his touring schedule to weekends after the birth of his second son last year. His wife, Cindy, is an audio engineer who tours with him and runs the sound for all of his shows. While acting as road manager for her husband, Cindy, who is also a musician, would often comment about the sounds to Cliff Miller, the audio engineer.

Eventually, Miller trained her to take over his job.

Cross is proud of his wife's participation in his show. "There are nights when my fingers don't dance like they ought to, but she never fails to get the best sound from a system."

And when he's not touring? "I'm like a hermit out in the mountains. I decided to stay home more for personal, artistic, and family reasons." But Cross and his wife still maintain an intense weekend touring schedule that takes them all over the country and

Canada, playing songs that were described by one radio program director as "a smorgasbord of people music."

Even with seven albums under his belt, two future projects in the offing, sold out appearances, and a growing nationwide following, Cross remains philosophical about his success. When asked about his big dreams, he replied:

"My dreams are in slow, quiet steps - to continue to improve to where I can actually say, yes, I play the fiddle or yes, I play the guitar. It's all a matter of perspective. Sometimes you don't feel good about how you played, but the people who heard it loved it."

And love it they do. As a friend of mine recently said, "There's no doubt about it, hands down, no see him. Mike Cross is definitely excellent in concert."

Mike Cross will appear in concert for two shows on Saturday, Oct. 4th at Thalian Hall. Shows are at 7:30 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $15 and $10. For more information contact the Thalian Hall box office at 763-9328.

UPB Offers Bargain Price Entertainment

Many college students need a break once in a while from studying and have need to get out and have some fun.

Unfortunately, one of the problems with being a student is a lack of available funds for getting out and having fun. The University Program Board realizes this.

The UPB has scheduled several all-time favorite movies for this semester's "Fall Flicks '86". While most are several years old (Abbott and Costello meet the Mummy, The Marx Brothers, and Dr. Strangelove all date from before most of us were born) none cost more than a dollar and many are free.

The UPB has given many students who have neither cable nor a video cassette player to see classic films from the thirties to the eighties. Movies like Incredible Journey, Rebel Without a Cause, and Easy Rider have made Sunday and Tuesday nights on campus just a little less dreary.

The traditional showing of the cult hit The Rocky Horror Picture Show every spring has packed Union Room 100 beyond overflowing more than once.

So take a break from studying, grab a friend, and give yourself an affordable treat thanks to the University Program Board.

to be held Oct. 17-19 in Wilmington. Member's sculpture and provides a forum for exchange of ideas among both themembers and the public.

Rozier Organ Recital: Clair Rozier, newly appointed assistant professor of music, will conduct and Organ Recital at 8 p.m., Fri. Oct. 3, in Kennan Auditorium. She will perform works of Bach, Widor and Albright.

Fry Accepts Positions: Robert E. Fry, director of institutional research, has accepted the position of president-elect and annual meeting program chairman of the North Carolina Association for Institutional Research. Membership in the association is made up of public and private junior and senior institutions in NC. The 1987 annual meeting, titled "Models for IR and Management—Miracles or Mayhem" will be held next year, April 22-24, in New Bern and will have among other participants, Dr. Peter Ewell of the National recognized for his work in the area of student outcomes assessment. For further information, contact the office of institutional research.

Plans Unveiled for New Rec Center

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

A new recreational center for UNCW students is in the final stages of planning, said B. Allan Dudley, UNCW Student Government Association President.

Final approval for the new recreational center should be given shortly, Dudley said.

Approval for the recreational center must go through the state chain of command since state money is being used to build it.

"Ground for the recreational center should hopefully be broken the middle of the semester," Dudley said.

"And hopefully construction will be under the way by the [fall] semester's end," he said.

"The recreational center is tentatively scheduled for completion for the Fall 1987," he said.

The completion date depends heavily upon the date construction begins on the recreational center.

The new recreational center will be behind the Residence Life Apartments, Dudley said.

"When completed, the recreational center will have a tennis court, basketball court, a baseball diamond, a football/soccer field, volleyball nets and a picnic area," he said.

The recreational center will also have a gazebo that will be able to host outdoor concerts, Dudley said.

Completion of the project is slated for 1987.

LivWell '86 a Healthy Success

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

"LIVWELL '86," a health promotion event for UNCW students, faculty and staff held on Oct. 1 was a huge success, said Deborah Haywood, Health Promotion Services Coordinator at the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center.

LivWell '86 was sponsored by the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center and was coordinated by Ms. Haywood. The event took place from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., and consisted of a variety of events aiming at the responsibility of maintaining one's health.

"About twenty percent of the student population, well over 1,000 students attended," Ms. Haywood said.

Students who attended were encouraged to take a look at their lifestyles, she said. Events and exhibits focusing on wellness within six dimensions: physical/nutritional, social/environmental, intellectual, occupational, spiritual and emotional.

"We wanted students to take a look at where they are going," Ms. Haywood said.

In addition to feeling good about themselves, students were also given the chance to learn how they could improve their health.

Students were encouraged to participate in the variety of events that was held within each of the six dimensions of "LivWell."

UNCW nursing students students took vital signs such as blood pressure and heart rates in front of the Student Union.

There was also cholesterol checks, information on substance abuse, stress management and other social issues related to health.

A mock ropes course was set up in the trees in front of the Union by Cape Fear Substance Abuse. The course was part of an outdoor adventure program designed to build confidence.

Thomas McCall, an instructor and Averitt's faculty advisor, said that "Brian was a really nice person. I had him in several classes, and he was a hard worker. I really liked him."

In a statement released Thursday, Sigma Alpha Epsilon mourned the loss of one of their brothers and described him as a special person.

"Brother Brian made a difference. For all of us... his difference will flourish and remain among us."

Averitt is survived by his parents and a brother.

More faculty and students participated in this year's "LivWell," Ms. Haywood said. "This is our second year with this promotion," she said.

Dr. Michael Donahue, a dermatologist, was on hand to discuss skin problems, and also, Dr. Greg Howard was on hand to answer any questions on dental problems.

Another part of the "LivWell" activities was "LivWell" - a program that provided information on healthy sex relations, responsibility and communication.

Free health snacks were also provided with the informative events and displays. The UNCW

Gospel Choir and the Jazz Ensemble provided the entertainment for "LivWell."

A drawing for health related prizes was also held.

The prizes included a bicycle, a three-month membership to a health club and a $25 gift certificate from a local sporting goods store.

"Our goal [for "LivWell"] is to help students develop a healthy lifestyle," Ms. Haywood said. "LivWell is the first in a series of planned events to help students develop a healthy lifestyle."

The next event scheduled is National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, Oct. 20-26.

Police Arrest UNCW Student

By Olivia Kayler
Staff Writer

Campus Police arrested a male UNCW student and placed him in New Hanover County Jail for 2nd degree burglary early Sunday morning.

Sometime between 12:30 a.m. and 2:30 a.m., the student entered an unlocked room in Graham Hall. An eyewitness reported seeing the student leave the room with a stereo receiver. Campus Police searched the suspect's room and found the stolen property. The suspect then confessed to the crime.

Campus Police reports another larceny this past weekend. A mounted tape player was stolen from an unlocked car. There are no suspects at this time.

These two incidents are among several reported for the weekend of October 4th.

A student suffered injuries after driving his bicycle into the path of a car in "D" lot. The victim was taken to New Hanover Memorial Hospital and was treated for cuts on the face.

Campus Police referred three male students to the Dean of Students after a person reported seeing the students urinating behind Galloway Hall. Campus Police also referred a female student to the Dean when she refused to pour out her beer upon request.

Campus Police report an unknown person cracked the front windshield of a vehicle parked in "D" lot.

An unknown person damaged state property in the 5th floor bathroom of Galloway Hall. The person ripped the mirror and toilet paper racks from the wall.

Senate Kills Amendment

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

A proposal to tighten attendance at Student Government Association meetings failed at the Sept. 29 meeting in Union Room 100. The amendment, made by Senator Lee King, was proposed after the Sept. 22 meeting in which the Senate failed to establish quorum, even after several members left the meeting in an attempt to find the absentees.

Those not present for the Sept. 22 meeting were Amy Loge, Gina Smith, Karla Alston, Max Perkins, Stephen Signorelli, Terri Paul, Shannon Wooten, David King, Ray Loftus, Dawn Clodfelter, Patrick Toal, Ron Padgett, and Bob Garlow.

Of those not present at that meeting, King, Loftus, Padgett, Signorelli, and Garlow were also absent Sept. 29. Representative Perkins had announced his resignation prior to the meeting.

In other business at the Sept. 29 meeting, St. Clair Ready was elected to the undergraduate position on the University Union Board. Danny Belcher was elected as the Residence Life member.

Selected parts of the amendment put before the Senate Sept. 29

Add: Attendance is required at all meetings. The penalty for unexcused absences will be as follows:

- Two unexcused absences during one term of office are grounds for a reprimand by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

- Three unexcused absences during one term in office are grounds for censure.

- Four unexcused absences during one term of office are grounds for impeachment by the Senate.

- In order to obtain an excused absence a written excuse must be submitted to the office of the Vice President by 12:00 p.m. the day of the Senate meeting. Two excused absences will constitute one unexcused absence.

- The judiciary committee will be responsible for keeping up with absences and presenting periodic reports to the Senate.

First Male Assistant

Riggs Joins Wellness Center

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

A new Physician's Assistant has joined the staff of the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center.

"For the first time, we have a male Physician's Assistant," said Catherine Vangellow, Physician's Assistant and Director of the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center.

Allan R. Riggs, the new Physician's Assistant, started working at the Health and Wellness Center last week. Riggs replaces nurse practitioner Gina Colclough, who went to work as an Operations Manager for the Research Triangle Institute in Washington, D.C.

Riggs worked in Family Practice for three years in Whitesboro, Virginia, when he noticed the opening for a physician's assistant at UNCW in a North Carolina job newsletter.

The UNCW physician's assistant position looked interesting, so I applied for it, Riggs said.

He completed his schooling as a physician's assistant at the University of Kentucky in 1977. Prior to receiving his certification as a physician's assistant, Riggs earned a Bachelor of Science in Biology from Wake Forest in Winston-Salem and a Master of Science in Microbiology from the University of Kentucky.

In August 1986, Riggs received a retroactive Bachelor of Health Science Degree from the University of Kentucky.

The Physician's Assistant Program at the University of Kentucky is 24 months long, Riggs said. Three years of college-96 credit hours are required in the two-year program.

The program is not as rigorous as medical school. "One year of the program is devoted to basic medical science," Riggs said. "The second year is devoted to clinical rotations."

"The second year is similar to the third or fourth year of medical school," he said.

"The Physician's Assistant concept was set up in the 1960's when there was a shortage of doctors," he said. "A physician's assistant is someone who is trained to handle primary health care problems."

Riggs is looking forward to working with the UNCW student population. "UNCW seems like a friendly campus," he said.

UNCW Student Dies of Shotgun Blast

A 22-year-old UNCW student died last Tuesday after sustaining a shotgun wound to the stomach. Detective R.L. Thomas of the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department is investigating the incident.

Brian Keith Averitt, known by his friends as "Guido", was at his home on White Road outside Wilmington on Sept. 30 when he was shot and killed. No further information is available at this time.

Averitt was well-liked by both faculty and his fellow students at UNCW. He was a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity and was an English major who enjoyed drama

National Wildlife Offers Fellowships

NEW FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM FOR 1987-88 ACADEMIC YEAR

The National Wildlife Federation (NWF) is pleased to announce changes in the Environmental Conservation Fellowship Program for the 1987-88 academic year. NWF has supported over 700 graduate students through its Fellowship Program since 1957. We are pleased to be able to continue this program of support with a number of significant changes in the program. The program will continue to be a source of support to students but the focus of the research funding will be concentrated on the continuing information needs of NWF.

In the past, NWF has received and reviewed hundreds of proposed graduate studies each year in order to select 15 to 20 topics of some direct relevance to its programs. The projects funded as a result of this process rarely provided research information of direct and demonstrable value to NWF conservation programs nor has NWF been able to provide adequate financial support to the student. The new program addresses these concerns by increasing the average size of the Fellowships up to $10,000 per annum and by seeking graduate student research proposals in response to specific topics identified by NWF.

Topics for which Fellowships will be awarded for the 1987-88 academic year include the following: Impacts of road building on public lands on wildlife species. The proposal should address habitat loss, increased accessibility of remote areas to people, and increased vulnerability of wildlife species as a result of the road building.

Review of impacts of development of riparian areas on wildlife species diversity.

Determination of economic values of wetlands for various functions and/or products in one or more of the following categories:

- a. Production of coastal fisheries
- b. Production of inland fisheries
- c. Flood reduction/control value of prairie wetlands
- d. Groundwater recharge values of playa lakes
- e. Values of different wetland types for recreation.

Review and analysis of mitigation and natural resource damage assessment standards and techniques now in use by state resource agencies of the United States.

Development of techniques to monitor pesticide contamination of resident and migratory wildlife.

Evaluation of methods and materials for in-service training for elementary and secondary teachers to teach environmental education. This proposal should compare teacher workshops to self-tutorial videos and direct mail distribution of environmental education materials as alternative methods of providing in-service training.

Evaluation of wildlife benefits of the Food Security Act (Farm Bill) of 1985. This study should look in particular at the conservation reserve, swampbuster, and sodbuster provisions of the Act.

Development of model legislation, land use plans, or zoning regulations to preserve wildlife habitat at the local (community) government level. A series of case study analyses of existing successful programs should be included in this study.

Review of cumulative impacts of small hydropower licensing proposals on fish and wildlife values. At present Federal Energy Regulatory Commission permits are issued or considered without an investigation of accumulated impacts to be expected from an array of such projects in a single drainage or river system.

Deadline: Dec. 15, 1986.

Award Announcement: March 1987

Fellowship Amount: Up to $10,000

Tips Offered To Students

Caffeine Use Can Affect Grades

Durham, N.C. --It seems that from time immemorial, college students have sworn by caffeine, declaring they depend on it to get through college. And, when they pull all-nighters especially, many students resort to large quantities of coffee, tea or colas to stay awake.

"Caffeine makes students feel more alert and awake," said James D. Lane, Ph.D., a medical research assistant professor in Duke University Medical Center's Department of Psychiatry.

Because of its widespread presence in beverages, chocolate and medications, caffeine is considered to be the most commonly used drug. It enters the bloodstream within minutes of ingestion and, initially, its effects are beneficial. A person feels less drowsy and fatigued and is able to think clearly, Lane said.

But, he said it can take four to six hours before half the amount is metabolized—caffeine's half-life. In women who use oral contraceptives, the half-life increases to 10 hours and in smokers decreases by an hour.

"Because of its half-life, students who drink small amounts throughout the day reach a point when its effects are counterproductive because the body has too much to handle," Lane said. "It adds up, and the consequence is that the caffeine reduces your ability to function by making you too anxious or restless."

If you are already under pressure because of an upcoming deadline or exam, you may become more panicky because caffeine increases the release of the stress hormones, epinephrine and morepinephrine, in your system thus amplifying your stress, he explained.

Situations that demand alertness lead students to drink more coffee during the day. "It's a vicious cycle. They stay up late studying, wake up groggy and drink coffee to get going," Lane said.

"Then, they try to get some sleep, but still have caffeine in their system. A student who is tossing and turning in bed may blame their insomnia on anxiety from schoolwork. It may be caffeine."

Other effects include stimulation of the cardiovascular system, increased rate of metabolism and diuretic action. In his studies, Lane has seen that although caffeine is not necessarily detrimental to the body, excessive amounts could exacerbate stress-related diseases such as high blood pressure, hypertension or ulcers. People at risk for these diseases should avoid caffeine, he said.

One-third of students drink one serving or less of a caffeinated beverage, and 13 percent drink more than five servings per day. Many of caffeine's effects appear soon after one cup of coffee, and since the average adult drinks two cups of coffee a day, nearly all of us are usually under caffeine's influence.

Caffeine is not addictive, Lane said, and although some people seem to be able to handle great amounts, too much in anyone's system can take a toll. Tests results of college students who drank one cup of coffee or more showed a tendency towards higher rates of anxiety and depression. Those who drank five cups or more also had lower grades.

Irritability, frequent mood changes, panic attacks and sleeping problems are side effects that can be reversed.

"But stopping suddenly means the onset of withdrawal—headaches, lethargy and being easily agitated—and a person will return to drinking coffee to relieve those symptoms," Lane said.

"It is better to taper off your consumption and choose to drink consciously," he said. "Many of us drink more caffeine than we realize." Students needing a study break, avoiding a task or meeting someone over a cup of coffee are usually reaching for a cup out of habit.

Here are some tips that Lane recommends for reducing your consumption:

*Mix decaffeinated coffee with regular coffee when brewing it. Gradually decrease the amount of regular coffee used.

*Switch to a smaller cup.

*Brew smaller amounts. If you make a full pot, you'll drink it because it's there and not because you really need it.

*If you just want a hot beverage or a cold soda, choose from the wide selection of decaffeinated sodas, coffees or teas that are available.

*Avoid drinking coffee in the evening to prevent disruption of your sleep/wake cycle. By getting the proper amount of sleep, you'll feel less tired the next day, thus reducing your need for that caffeine boost. It may take awhile before your cycle returns to normal.

*Read medication labels carefully. If you are taking aspirin or other medication before bedtime, you may want to avoid brands that include caffeine.

Lane said there is no need to stop drinking caffeinated beverages completely, but the benefits of reducing consumption may include improving academic performance or overall mood. You don't need to add to the stress you already feel from exams, papers and other pressures because of too much caffeine.

Lotus Class Offered

"Introduction to LOTUS 1-2-3" for certified public accountants, will be offered as part of a continuing education program sponsored by the department of accountancy of the Cameron School of Business Administration in association with UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

The one-day class, offering 8 CPE's will run from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on Thursday, October 30 in Room 100 of the University Union. Instructors Robert Appleton and Rebecca Sawyer will describe microcomputer basics, electronic worksheets, commands, data entry and calculations.

Enrollment is limited. Fee is $125 and registration deadline is October 16. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Wellnotes from The Student Health and Wellness Center

Let's face it... many of us are attracted by fast food... for lots of reasons.

A typical fast-food meal is loaded with protein, calories, fat and sodium. It is low in vitamins A and C and has only moderate amounts of iron.

A meal eaten at a fast food restaurant does not have to make or break a nutritious diet. Each fast food has good and bad points, and you can increase these positives just by following these tips.

1. Order the smallest-size burrito, burger or sandwich. Avoid the biggies... anything that sounds colossal, super or gargantuan. They can multiply your calories.

2. Share your meal with a friend or take half of your order home for another meal. (Remember to refrigerate it immediately to prevent spoilage.)

3. Bring fresh fruit from home for dessert. Fruit adds vitamins, minerals and fiber to your diet.

4. Skip the complete dinner and order a la carte. Take it home and pair it with steamed vegetables or a fresh green salad and low-calorie dressing.

5. When possible, remove the skin and coating from deep-fried foods. This saves about 100 calories. Better yet, skip fried foods altogether.

6. Order your sandwiches without mayonnaise, tartar sauce and other creamy dressings. They add up to 80 calories per tablespoon.

7. Stick to fresh, chopped vegetables at the salad bar. Avoid high-calorie toppings like croutons and foods marinated in rich dressings. Bring your own low-calorie salad dressing or use vinegar or lemon.

8. At breakfast, avoid extras like pastries, butter and syrup. Butter and syrup multiply the calories in a pancake meal. Skip the sausage patty to save about 200 calories. Biscuits have about 300 calories, about 100 to 175 calories more than an English muffin. Plain croissants have about 200 calories. Making them into a sandwich increases the calories to about 500.

9. Order a thin-crust cheese pizza. Add extra mushrooms, tomatoes, peppers and onions instead of sausage, pepperoni and olives.

10. Ask for sugar-free soft drinks, tea, coffee and low-fat milk instead of regular soft drinks and shakes. Milk has more calcium and less than half the calories of a shake.

Contest Asks Students To Imagine 2011

Honeywell offers $30,000 in prize money to winners of 1987 Futurist award competition. Honeywell launched its 5th annual Futurist Awards Competition, an essay contest that asks students to predict technology advancements 25 years from now.

Honeywell wants college students to imagine the year 2011 and write essays about the technological developments they foresee. This year's contest will offer 10 winners $3,000 each and the chance to work for Honeywell next summer.

Last year, 450 students, representing 325 colleges and universities in 47 states, entered the competition.

The contest is open to all full-time students at any accredited college in the U.S. Students are asked to leap 25 years in the future and write an essay predicting developments in one of six technological areas: electronic communications, energy, aerospace, computer science, manufacturing automation or office automation. A second essay must address the societal impact of the technological predictions. Each essay must be no longer than 1,500 words.

Students can receive contest rules by writing Futurist Rules, Honeywell Telemarketing Center, Honeywell Plaza MN122-4164, Minneapolis, MN 55408, or calling toll free 1-800-328-5111, ext. 1581. Request for entry material must be received by Dec. 31, 1986.

Completed essays must be postmarked no later than Jan. 31, 1987. In February, a panel of top Honeywell scientists and engineers will judge the essays on the basis of creativity, feasibility, clarity of expression and logic.

Winners will be announced in early March, and each of the 10 winners will receive a two-day, all-expense paid trip to Honeywell's headquarters in Minneapolis.

Honeywell is a Minneapolis-based international corporation that works together with customers to help them achieve their goals through the application of computers, communications and controls. The company has 94,000 employees worldwide, with 1985 revenue of $6.6 billion and net income of $281 million.

CFI Reports Loan Money Still Available

RALEIGH—Despite new federal regulations that have slowed the processing of financial aid applications for college students, an official at North Carolina's central lender for student loans says money still is available for the 1986-87 school year.

"We started with more than $66 million in available loan money," explains D. L. Paul, president of Raleigh-based College Foundation Inc. (CFI). "We will have adequate loan funds for North Carolina students at undergraduate and graduate levels throughout the academic year and also for summer school in 1987. The loans can be used at accredited colleges, universities, vocational and technical schools, in or out of state."

CFI's sole purpose is providing financial assistance specifically for North Carolina students.

New regulations from the Department of Education have required a vast increase in the amount of paperwork for college financial aid officers, often delaying the distribution of funds.

One regulation now requires campuses to verify at least half of the income statements of all aid applications. Another new requirement forces all students applying for a Guaranteed Student Loan to first apply for a Pell Grant, even if they don't qualify. Pell Grants are awarded to the neediest students, those whose parents earn less than $28,000 per year.

"In theory, the new regulations are good," Paul says. "They were designed to make sure only qualified students receive federal money. But the regulations have tremendously increased the paperwork of college financial aid officers. In addition, the timing of the new regulations has resulted in some students having to wait until they're in school to find out if they were approved for a loan."

"Many schools advised students to report as scheduled. Financial aid officers—and our offices—are still handling applications and questions."

"Once loan applications are received at CFI, we process them as quickly as possible," Paul adds. "We are very sensitive of the time factor involved for the students applying for loans."

Loan funds are provided annually by the state's full-service banks and are administered by CFI. Of the 63 North Carolina banks, 46—or 73 percent—either have participated or are participating in funding the educational loan program administered by CFI.

Chartered by Gov. Luther Hodges in 1955, CFI continues as the central lender for the NC Insured Student Loan Program and the NC PLUS Loan Program for parents.

The federally backed student loans are at eight percent interest. Most borrowers of student loans qualify for the federal government to pay the interest during enrollment and until repayment which begins six months after a student leaves college or drops below half-time enrollment.

"We encourage those students who still may need financial assistance during this school year to immediately contact CFI or college financial aid offices. Students and parents should apply for those loans as soon as possible," Paul notes.

CFI also administers the NC Students Incentive Grant Program and student financial assistance programs of various foundations, including the Brynhill Foundation, Byrum-Mansfield Memorial Fund and James E. and Mary Z. Bryan Foundation.

College Foundation Inc. is located at 1307 Glenwood Ave., Raleigh, NC 27605. The phone number is 919/821-4771.

New Vice-Chancellors Appointed

UNCW Chancellor William H. Wagoner has promoted three individuals to the positions of associate vice chancellor in the areas of business affairs, student affairs, and university advancement. They are J. Carl Dempsey, Richard Mullendore, and Tyrone Rowell.

J. Carl Dempsey has been promoted to Associate Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs. Dempsey joined UNCW in 1967 and has served as a faculty member, director of institutional research, assistant dean of student affairs, and assistant to the vice chancellor for business affairs.

Dempsey was instrumental in the formation of the UNCW Alumni Association, and has served as chairman, vice chairman and treasurer of the alumni board of directors. He received the B.A. degree from UNCW and the M. Ed. from N. C. State University. Richard Mullendore has been promoted to Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. Mullendore joined UNCW in 1984 as Dean of Students and is responsible for residence life, student orientation, international and non-traditional student assistance, campus discipline, and student withdrawal policies. He served as director of student services and athletics at The University of Charleston, Charleston, WV, before coming to UNCW. He received the B.A. degree from Bradley University, the M. S. from Southern Illinois University, and the Ph. D. from Michigan State University.

Tyrone Rowell has been promoted to Associate Vice Chancellor for University Advancement. He will continue to work to expand the level of private financial support at UNCW, assist in other development and public affairs functions, and will be involved in planning and carrying out special events for the University.

Rowell joined UNCW in 1974 as director of development, following his duties at Elon College as associate director of development, community relations director, and alumni director. He received the B.A. degree from Elon College and the M. A. from Appalachian State University.

Food, Juices, GARP Grabbed At LivWell

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Reporter

LivWell '86 really went over big in the food and juices department. All the "GARP"—a mixture of cheerios, raisins, coconuts, grapes, and M&M's, was gone by the time I made it to the tent at 12:15 p.m.

I did get some pineapple juice. There was cranberry juice cocktail, apple and orange juice also. I noticed that the juices had to be refilled two times in one hour!

Delicious stir fried veggies were cooked in a wok. Mrs. Katie Eilbert fried water chestnuts, onions, carrots, broccoli and cauliflower for 3-5 minutes in one teaspoon of oil. You could then dip the vegetable of your choice in soy sauce and have a delicious and nutritious snack.

In the spiritual section I met Ed Pickett, a vegetarian. He is on the Yogic Diet and some of the things he can eat are living sprouts, grain, nuts, honey, oil, fruit, natural cheeses, beans and tofu.

Most of the food we buy in the grocery store has been over processed, Pickett said. Since the increase in super markets and easy access to processed foods, the cancer rate in the United States has risen dramatically.

Pickett said our bodies have not yet evolved enough to be able to throw off all the unnecessary additives in these foods. "Read the ingredients label and never eat food with ingredients you can't pronounce or don't know what it is," he advised.

He also believes that processed foods will be the next major undertaking of the U.S. Surgeon General.

The Natural Way to Draw

Youth ages 10 and up interested in learning to draw, can enroll in "The Natural Way to Draw, part 2" being offered through the UNCW Office of Special Programs. Instructor Sybil Thearling will show students the "quick" and "extended" approaches to drawing, emphasizing light and shade, anatomy, composition, structure and design. The class will meet from 4:00-5:30 p.m. on Tuesdays, October 28-December 9 on the UNCW campus. The $24 fee will be discounted to $17 for registrations received before the October 21 deadline. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

CAMPUS CAPSULE

Beginning Bridge

Classes in Beginning Bridge will again be offered at the YWCA, 2815 S. College Road. The instructor for these classes is Dorothy Newton, an accomplished bridge player and a former New Hanover County school teacher. Classes will meet on Wednesdays, October 8 through December 10, from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon. Cost for 20 hours of instruction is $25 plus YWCA membership. For more information or to pre-register, please call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 S. College Road.

World Cultures Studies China

The Museum of World Cultures Club is presenting "Travel Abroad—Travel Experiences Program" for the fall of 1986.

The first lecture will be "China—The New Way." Bernard Bentley, member of the recent entourage to Dandong, China, Wilmington's New Sister City, will host the presentation and slide show.

The program will be held Oct. 15th from 7:30-9:00 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

After the presentation there will be a chaired discussion and question and answer session with the audience.

Admission to the program is free.

Future topics and speakers include "The Soviet Union," a presentation to be given by Dr. Ralph Brauer and "Peru - A Work Experience," to be given by an UNCW student.

For more information, call Paula Lapaire-Kamenish 395-3598

Japanese Class Scheduled

A beginning and intermediate class in the culture and language of Japan will be offered again at UNCW.

Fee for each session is $25. Registration deadline is Oct. 13. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

English Course Offered

A course on "English for Speakers of Other Languages" is being offered through the UNCW Office of Special Programs. The course is scheduled for Tuesday and Thursdays, Nov. 4-Dec. 16 from 9:30-11:30 a.m. on the UNCW campus. The $47 fee will be discounted to $40 for registrations received before the October 24 deadline.

Art Classes Set

An Oct. 21 registration deadline has been set for two adult art classes to be taught by Sybil Thearling through UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Preregistration Set

Preregistration dates for Spring Semester, 1987, will be Nov. 3-13, 1986. Please remember all outstanding debts to the University must be paid by October 20, 1986, in order to preregister for spring classes.

Quaker Meeting

A peaceful response to Quaker Meeting, no dress-up, collection or creed. Silent meditation and discussion. All welcome. Sundays 10 am at New Horizons School 3735 S. College Rd.

Learn to Assert Yourself

Part 2 of the course, "Asserting Yourself" will meet on Wednesday, Oct. 29-Dec. 10 from 7:15-8:45 p.m. in Room 106, Hoggard Hall. Registration deadline is Oct. 22. For more information call 395-3195.

Atlantis Accepting Submissions

The Atlantis, UNCW's student literary art magazine, is currently accepting submissions at the information desk of the University Union.

UNCW students are encouraged to submit poetry, short stories, essays, plays, artwork, photography, original music scores and any experimental works.

Deadline for fall submissions is October 27, at 5:00 p.m.

Much To Ask?

As noted in one of our front page stories, the Senate recently voted down an amendment put forth by Representative Lee King that would have, to use the author's words, "put teeth into an attendance policy".

Designed to get more members of our legislative body to attend the Monday meetings on a more regular basis, this amendment failed to pass.

Seems that several members of the SGA have barely attended any meetings at all this year. Now true, there have been explanations made by some of them for their absences, but should they have taken the job if they knew these things would happen?

Regarding King's proposed amendment, he is to be commended for persistence. In the closing minutes of this week's meeting, he announced that the legislation would be put on the floor in the next senate meeting for another try.

Some of the senators and representatives are in favor of the amendment, since they feel censure or possible impeachment of officials would provide an incentive to attend meetings on a regular basis.

Others feel that the attendance policy is out of line because they have a duty to students, not the senate.

Few if any of the members of these groups have missed more than one or two meetings. They wouldn't have to worry about the policy, because they are responsible enough to be at each meeting.

The third group, composed of those who had something better to do than go to a meeting that would take up part of the evening, and they really think that impeachment for missing four out of twelve meetings is too harsh.

This group could not be reached for comment. They weren't at the meeting.

The Origin of Swami Gitch

Since we introduced Swami Gitchigami, we have been besieged by calls and letters (so they were seven long letters) asking about his life prior to being a Seahawk Staffer. As Editor-in-Chief, I took it upon myself to explain.

Swami has not always been an avid Rolls-Royce collector. He actually comes from a very humble background. He was born many years ago in a flea bitten hovel in flea bitten Hovelsville a suburb of Toledo, Ohio.

The Swami led a hard life. His kindergarten teacher searched the students every morning for weapons. If you weren't carrying anything, they gave you one.

Swami Gitch had a real rough time all through school. Out of the 426 kids in his first grade class, only 25 graduated high school. Twelve of the 401 students left high jacked a 727 to Malibu and were never seen again.

The fate of the other students is not known, but it was noticed that most of the leaches at flea bitten Hovelsville High were very well fed.

After graduating at the top of his class ("only took me three years," he boasts. And that was just the eleventh grade), the Swami embarked on a trip across the country. Not by rail or by bus or motorcycle though; he fell asleep on a TWA luggage cart and ended up in Los Angeles.

Upon awakening, Swami noted with shock that he was no longer in friendly, flea bitten Hovelsville. He was now in the cruel repressive country known as California.

Hoping to drown his sorrows, the Swami wandered into a Singles/Gay/Biker/Sushi/Arab/Honky-tonk Bar where he sat down next to a tall long haired fellow who asked him what he was drinking.

"Yes," answered Swami. As the bartender was bringing their drinks, Swami asked his benefactor's name. The big hairy fellow grinned. "You can call me Abe," he said. "Abe?" queried Swami. "Short for Abominable. As in Snowman." Swami gasped.

"As in carry off women, dismember explorers, and be generally badnattered about being seen?" "We are really nice guys. Only a few of us have attitude problems."

They talked on into the night, and eventually, Abe convinced the Swami to expatriate to the ancestral home of the snowponies (nothing's worse than a liberated snowday in a leotard," said Abe), the uninhabited Lake Yetisparylots.

Women's Organization Responds to Rhodes

To the Editor:

As Co-chairperson of the University Women's Association and as a conscious human being, I feel it is my duty to respond to Mr. Rhodes' letter that appeared in the last issue of the Seahawk. I would first like to thank him for thinking about the subject long enough to reach some kind of conclusion; that is all we ask. However, I feel it is necessary to clear up any ambiguity resulting from Mr. Rhodes' letter.

The Women's Association obviously realizes that the women who posed for the calendar are not "mindless." This is a myth our organization is fighting against. However, is this not the conclusion reached by many after viewing such a calendar?

We realize also the DTD fraternity did not consciously set out to "degrade women everywhere." However, neither did they ask "what are the social implications of this act?" "What is the reflection on our University of such a calendar?" Yes, Mr. Rhodes, this is a "legitimate fund-raising endeavor." Again, are issues of social responsibility of no concern when a business practice makes money? All too often in our society, business practices are excused for profitable reasons.

As for the issue of consent, Mr. Rhodes, we realize participation in this calendar was not forced upon these women. Yet, is not society and the socialization process a powerful and coercive force? These women have been taught from earliest childhood that they must be beautiful in order to succeed. Calendars, such as the one sold by the DTD fraternity, are a mere reflection of this ideology. Exploitation of this nature is so embedded in our culture, it is often difficult to recognize. We ask why these issues be considered when planning a "legitimate fund-raising endeavor."

As for the male calendar, No, I would not call it sexist and degrading, but neither did I call the first calendar such. I will, however, protest this calendar on the same grounds as the first, on the basis of sexual exploitation. Yes, Mr. Rhodes, female and male bodies are beautiful, but we have no "business" exploiting them in such a way.

Mr. Rhodes has accused us of trying to impose our "minority views" and has compared us with the religious right! I will point out the religious right are speaking out on moral issues. We are speaking on social issues. We also are ashamed that this particular aspect of human rights is a "minority view." We are hoping to change that.

Mr. Rhodes also accuses us of "blowing a relatively insignificant topic out of proportion." Remember, readers, the same was once said about minority civil rights in our own country. Is not the exploitation of humans for profitable gain blown grossly out of proportion?

Thank you.

Feminist Reponds To King

Dear Mr. King,

Because you are so young, I must forgive some of your rash comments about the feminist movement; they come through the mouth of a child. Feminism has been alive and well for over a century and continues to be a driving force in today's world. Feminists have conceived of a free world with dignity for all human beings. Are these ideals truly dead? Then I must mourn the death of the human spirit.

Although fighting for human dignity may involve many burdens, I have not found, personally, that a sexless philosophy is one of those burdens.

Perhaps you, Mr. King, wish to reap the rewards of the feminist movement (increased prosperity, leisure time, emotional freedom, etc.) but would kill feminism off before you are forced to wield a toilet brush or don a apron. And if you are of the opinion that women have brains, Mr. King, please do not aim most of your criticism below the belt.

Sincerely,
Rosemary Moore

Student Security a Bit Gung Ho in the Citation Department

One night this past week, one of our staff members was returning from a volleyball game at Hanover Gymnasium when he noticed a member of the Student Security (who hand out parking tickets) writing citation after citation for vehicles which had no parking stickers - people visiting our campus to attend an athletic event.

When the staffer asked what was going on, the officer replied that when the new stickers came into use this semester, all parking was to be enforced twenty-four hours a day, regardless of circumstances.

Now, a visitor doesn't have to pay the $15 fine imposed for parking violations, but they do have to visit the Parking Office and explain to those helpful, easy-to-get-along-with ladies why you parked in a space you weren't supposed to while you were buying your tickets to the basketball game. If the explanation is satisfactory, then you do not have to pay the parking ticket.

The Seahawk staff is all for obeying the law, but when a person doesn't want to attend a basketball game because there are only so many 24-hour guest spaces near the gym - and he has already paid $50 for a season ticket - it seems there is something wrong with the system.

Brian Keith Averitt
3/24/64 - 9/30/86

To the brothers of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Brian Averitt was a true gentleman in many of his own ways. In his absence, we all remember how special a person he was to us. He was a good student. He worked hard and excelled in drama, English and writing. Brian Averitt made a difference. As a fraternity brother he brought his own individuality and ideas to our Chapter. He was sincere, considerate and honest, and he made long-lasting friendships with all that he met.

Brian had a special way of noticing people. He encouraged them and made them feel important. He put a part of himself into all of us. Now much more than ever, it is showing through. We will miss his loyalty, his character, the way he smiled and how he made us laugh. He made us think about others and about ourselves.

Brother Brian Averitt made a very important difference. For all of us who loved his company, his difference will flourish and remain among us... forever.

Riverfest Draws 50,000

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Riverfest was a great outdoor party, but it was more than that. The outdoor concerts, booths and beer gardens drew large crowds despite the heat Saturday and Sunday.

There was a festival atmosphere as people strolled along Water Street — clowns, jugglers, bands, much noise, food and drink vendors everywhere.

The USS Stark and the USCG Northwind dominated the center of the Riverfest area with their formidable size and ship-shape appearance. Both ships were open to the public for tours on Saturday and Sunday.

I was lucky enough to be invited to ride the USS Stark into port when it first arrived last Wednesday. We media members were treated to first-class hospitality from the moment we boarded.

We rode from the State Port on a tugboat, the Southport, which was to stand by as the Stark came in case the Navy ship needed assistance.

We climbed a ladder from the tug to the deck of the Stark high above (quite an experience) with the help of some sailors. The Executive Officer showed us into the Officers' Wardroom for refreshments and a chance to meet and interview the other officers of the ship.

The wardroom was really plush, and there were sailors assigned to serve us. It was real luxury.

Then an officer took us for a tour of the ship. It was interesting, but climbing all those ladders was a challenge.

The Stark carries a Harpoon missile system and fifteen of the $1 million rockets.

The Stark can carry two SH-60 helicopters, armed with anti-submarine torpedo. A 76mm rapid fire cannon is mounted toward the stern of the ship.

The Stark is a frigate, one of the smallest of the four classes of naval vessels.

As we came into port, the New Hanover High School Band was on deck to play for the Stark as it came in — flags, pom poms and all. It was an exciting and colorful pageant.

After our tour, we returned to the wardroom where we met the captain, a most hospitable gentleman who has over thirty years in the Navy.

Just before an official welcoming ceremony took place on deck, the officers of the Northwind came aboard at this point to meet those of the Stark. It seemed a very congenial group.

On deck, The Mayor welcomed the Stark and presented a picture of the Wilmington waterfront to the captain.

The captain gave the mayor a plaque commemorating the occasion.

After the speechifying, we left the Stark, looking forward to an enjoyable Riverfest weekend.

On Saturday night we heard the Marine Second Division Band perform at Riverfront Park. They were excellent as they played patriotic favorites such as Stars and Stripes Forever and The 1812 Overture.

The concert ended with a beautiful fireworks display over the river. It was a super evening.

All in all, between the good food, good times and good drink, we thought Riverfest to be a super, super weekend.

Food, drink, music and fun made the weekend one of the best in Riverfest's history

By Anne Simpson

Staff Writer

The restaurants and bars of the riverfront area provided their best hospitality for the people who came to Riverfest.

A great place to have lunch was the Pilot House at Chandler's Wharf. Situated in an old house on the river, the Pilot House provides a view of the river as well as good atmosphere with their good food. Elijah's next door has the same river view, and both restaurants have bars.

Roy's Riverboat Landing was a busy and crowded place Saturday night, with both upstairs and downstairs bars filled, and the balconies full of patrons watching the riverfront scene.

Providing authentic German atmosphere, food and drink, the Nuss Strass Cafe in The Cotton Exchange was a pleasant place to stop for a break and some refreshment. They have a special Octoberfest beer available this month only.

Also in the Cotton Exchange is Paddy's Hollow, providing food and drink as well as entertainment in its bar on weekends. It has a pleasant, pub-like atmosphere.

Cronies, at Second and Princess Streets was also full on Riverfest weekend evenings. Cronies has live entertainment on Friday and Saturday nights.

Those enjoying Riverfest had a wide choice of places to stop for refreshment.

Local Artists Form Group To Promote Live Music

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The desire for a guild that would promote live music and serve as a center of information for area musicians promoted guitarist/songwriter Randy Drew and several others to form the Cape Fear Musician's Association in September of 1984. The current president of the CFMA (who was also a member of that small group) is classical guitarist Rob Nathanson, the instructor of guitar here at UNCW.

The CFMA has dedicated itself to the fulfillment of three specific purposes in the Cape Fear area, including the promotion of live music, the fraternalism between musicians and education about the needs of musicians and their employers.

The musicians who are involved in the CFMA are interested in maintaining a spirit of camaraderie and still benefitting from the obvious advantages to be gained from learning from each other and working together towards a common goal—the promotion of live music.

Since its inception, the CFMA has co-sponsored and promoted 32 concerts, participated in an Arts Council promotional brochure, published a directory for its membership and run workshops on such subjects such as music theory and writing.

The association also publishes a monthly newsletter for its membership and musician/band listings for employers.

The membership of the CFMA is comprised of an assortment of music lovers who are, for the most part, professional performers, educators and technicians.

Made up of people from all age groups specializing in virtually every type of music, the membership also consists of non-performing artists and non-musicians who seek to simply promote the art itself.

Members of the organization boast an array of diverse backgrounds, with specialties ranging from the composition and instruction of classical music to studio recording to performance in rock and roll bands.

The broad spectrum of musical styles, experiences, achievements and ages encompassed by the membership allows for a diversified exchange of information and ideas all around the board.

Whether the style of music be folk, pop, jazz, rock, classical, gospel, country and western or easy listening, the CFMA membership has dedicated itself to the promotion of all type of live music in the Cape Fear area.

The CFMA has enabled area musicians to have a greater communication with their peers and establish a reference roster of their particular specialties.

Musicians who are simply looking for groups (or vice versa) simply contact the organization and contact others listed in the directory to "put the word out."

The CFMA also serves as a liaison between musicians and the public that they entertain. By making itself known in the community, the association has established itself as an effective link between the artists and their patrons.

As a referral service available to arts organizations, arts and leisure publications, employers and promoters, the CFMA has made it much easier for musicians to "get the word out" about what is happening on the local and regional music scene.

CFMA meetings are held on the second Monday of every month at Roy's in The Riverboat Landing—located at the corner of Market and Water Streets in downtown Wilmington.

The meeting, which is convened at 7:30 p.m., is usually followed by a jam session for whomever is interested in participating.

Other musical activities of interest to the association members are included in the monthly newsletter, as are listings of the member's upcoming gigs and special achievements.

Membership in the association is obtained by filling out an application and paying annual fees. Membership is five dollars-a-year for students and $10-a-year for all others.

The next meeting of the Cape Fear Musician's Association will be held at the Riverboat Landing on Monday, October 13, at 7:30 p.m.. Any individuals who are interested in joining the association are encouraged to attend.

On Oct. 14, the University Program Board will present "Barber and Seville." Jim Barber is a talented young performer who is turning heads with an unforgettable show that audiences are applauding as truly original and refreshingly funny. His unique skills blend comedy and music into a novel stage act that is drawing raves everywhere. The show will be presented in the Residence Life Activities Center at 8 p.m. Admission will be $1.00.

UPB Offers Bargain Price Entertainment

Many college students head a break once in a while from studying and have need to get out and have some fun.

Unfortunately, one of the problems with being a student is a lack of available funds for getting out and having fun. The University Program Board realizes this.

The UPB has scheduled several all-time favorite movies for this semester's "Fall Flicks '86". While most are several years old (Abbott and Costello meet the Dummy, The Marx Brothers, and Dr. Strangelove all date from before most of us were born) none cost more than a dollar and many are free.

The UPB has given many students who have neither cable nor a video cassette player to see classic films from the thirties to the eighties. Movies like Incredible Journey, Rebel Without a Cause, and Easy Rider have made Sunday and Tuesday nights on campus just a little less dreary.

The traditional showing of the cult hit The Rocky Horror Picture Show every spring has packed Union Room 100 beyond overflowing more than once.

So take a break from studying, grab a friend, and give yourself an affordable treat thanks to the University Program Board.

SUBMIT TO THE ATLANTIS

What do you get when a group of UNCW students throw their creative talents together?

The Atlantis!

The Atlantis is a UNCW publication that pools together a variety of creative works by the students. The Atlantis accepts poetry, prose, cartoons, photos, artwork, and anything that exemplifies the creative counterparts of the UNCW community. Steve Hill, the editor of The Atlantis, and the Atlantis staff welcome all submissions from the UNCW student body.

Entries can be submitted at the information booth downstairs in the university union.

The ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR of the Seahawk is seeking correspondents from the fields of the visual arts, music, literature, radio, and writing to serve as liaisons between those groups/establishments in those fields of interest and the UNCW community.

In particular, we need people who are willing and able to help us coordinate fuller coverage of the Arts in the Cape Fear region as they apply to those fields of study and entertainment.

Help us keep you informed! Interested students should contact Tamara Drew at the Seahawk, Room 205 University Union - 395-3789/3229.

Sister Bessie leads the Lesters in prayer in Tobacco Road.

SRO Gets Down and Dirty on "Tobacco Road"

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

University Theatre's first offering of the season, Tobacco Road, is a study in sordidness, telling the story of "pe" white trash" in the backwoods of Georgia during the Great Depression.

The main characters' ambitions and desires are as pathetic as their grammar: Jeeter Lester, head of the shabby household and father of at least 17, wants to plant a crop of cotton; his wife Ada wants a stylish dress to be buried in; Dude, their youngest son, wants a new car with a horn; Sister Bessie, the self-styled preacher, wants Dude; Lov wants his neurotic bride Pearl; and Pearl just wants to be left alone.

The plot leaves no stone unturned to be disgusting: Lov lusts openly after Ellie May, whose face is disfigured; Jeeter has apparently molested Pearl, who was actually fathered by the landlord...and on and on, ad nauseam.

It is fitting that the outhouse figures so prominently in the set of this show, and that activities conducted therein are such an important part of the action.

The message of the play has much to do with poverty of the spirit as well as material poverty. The Lesters have nothing, not even principles or dignity.

For the most part, the University Theatre players did a good job with the show, although Dan Wargo sounded a bit more educated than Jeeter would have.

Dude (Daniel Riggs) was fittingly "triflin'" and Ada (Marjorie Megivern) was appropriately pathetic. Donna Calleson was super as the lusty evangelist Sister Bessie; in fact, all the performances were convincing. The pace was good and smooth, never losing the audience's interest.

The set was excellent — real dirt, yet, and everything so shabby. Lighting was not obtrusive but complimented the show.

Altogether, Tobacco Road was a fine show and does credit to its cast and crew.

"Love's Labor's Lost" an Evening Well Spent

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Last Thursday night I had the pleasure of seeing an entertaining comedy, Shakespeare's "Love's Labour's Lost," presented at Thalian Hall by the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival.

"Love's Labour's Lost" is one of Shakespeare's lighter plays, reminding one of a sit-com with its twists of plot and stereotypical characters.

The situation is this: the king of Navarre and his three friends swear off social life, leisure, feminine companionship and other fun stuff, to make Navarre a high-brow culture center.

A pompous Spaniard at the court promptly breaks training with a buxom dairymaid, then the Princess of France arrives with her three lovely friends to visit the King.

The King and her three cronies fall in love with the princess and her young ladies and decide to ditch their aesthetic vows.

Humorous devices include love letters delivered to the wrong ladies, disguises, mistaken identities, and a slipshod pageant arranged by the Spaniard.

The N. C. Shakespeare Festival put its own mark on the bard's venerable work with much visual humor not in the script—like Jaquenetta-the-dairymaid's shake-rattle-and-roll dance which Will S. probably never dreamed of putting in his play—not the way cast member Tanya Belov did it, anyway.

And Dull the Constable was overlaid a bit with his deadpan, disdainful expression.

The one set used was a realistic one of Greek columns, steps and plants. The costumes were mid-19th century style (doesn't anyone do Shakespeare in Shakespearean-era costumes any more?).

I can't help but compare this production to one of a similar Shakespearean play, "As You Like It" staged by the Royal Shakespearean Theatre in London. In that production the set was surrealistic, the costumes were modern, and the style was low-key—none of the at times heavy slapstick used by the N. C. group.

I must say, the makeup was the best I have ever seen in any stage production. And the costumes weren't bad either, and were at least less jarring than the modern costumes used by the British company. The set looked quite good, and what's wrong with a little realism in sets?

The pace was good and my attention never lagged. It was a real professional production with no discernable lapses to distract.

It was a pretty good evening's entertainment, anyway.

On Stage...

LIVE JAMS TO CATCH THIS WEEK:

The Manhattan Transfer-style sounds of MOONWINDS will be floating through the air this Thursday night at Bananas. The band will be performing a variety of pop-jazz sounds, including original material from Randy Drew's recently released "WAVES" album. Catch this six piece multi-vocal band from 8:30 til 12:30.

SHANNON WYATT is a foxy female blues singer/guitarist who has been charming audiences throughout the region. She will be appearing live at Eve's Restaurant this Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday nights.

The Riverboat Landing will host violinist/fiddle player KEN WATSON as a special guest during the weekend shows. Watson was a featured artist on Lynnyrd Skynyrd's "Give Me Back My Bullets" album and has also performed with jazz greats Charlie Spivak and Jack Teagarden. His special appearance with The Jack Olsen Trio promises a weekend of great entertainment. There is a $2 entertainment fee.

D'Jango's will host the jazz sounds of PSALMS this weekend. The group features the outstanding vocal talents of Charlene Bradley and the keyboard mastery of her husband, Stephen. One of the hottest around, PSALMS is definitely a group worth checking out.

Honor Society Begins Selection

The UNCW Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society for distinguished students in all academic fields, has begun its evaluation of student records for consideration of election to the Society. The Society's By-Laws allow a student to be considered for membership with a 3.75 GPA for Juniors with 74 hours or more completed, a 3.68 GPA for Seniors with 89 to 105 hours, and a 3.60 GPA for Seniors with more than 103 hours completed.

The National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi was founded in 1897 at the University of Maine. Men and women in all academic disciplines are eligible for membership, on the basis of scholarship, integrity, and character. The Society's motto is "Let the love of learning rule mankind." There are almost 300 chapters of the Society, established at leading colleges and universities throughout the country.

The UNCW Chapter of the Society was established in 1980. The fact that an institution has to prove its excellence before a chapter of Phi Kappa Phi can be chartered makes membership in this Society a valuable asset to the graduating student. The Society is convinced that recognizing persons of good character who have excelled in an academic area will stimulate tohers toward this achievement. The Chapter's officers for the current year are Dr. Larry Usilton, President; Dr. Lewis Nance, Secretary-Treasurer; and Dr. Charles West, Public Relations Officer.

Elections to the Society are made each semester, after analysis of the University's academic records to determine eligible outstanding students. Final decision is made by the student and faculty members of the UNCW Chapter. A formal initiation ceremony will be held in the Spring, shortly before graduation, with the date to be announced.

To Pay Student Aid

House Bill Oks Funding

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) - The average American college student should be pleased with the long-delayed but crucial Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1986, even if students didn't get everything the college lobby in Washington wanted, the U.S. Student Association (USSA) says. "Basically, it's a good reauthorization bill," says Kathy Ozer, director of USSA's lobbying efforts. "The bill shows sensitivity to the students' needs on campus, and is somewhat reflective of those concerns."

The $10.2 billion bill, which was supposed to be passed in early 1985, finally emerged from a House-Senate conference committee only last week.

The new legislation effectively gives Congress the authority to fund all federal college programs - from student aid to campus housing - and sets rules that will govern the programs for the next five years.

As the old Higher Education Act of 1980 came up for renewal, both Education Secretary William Bennett and the Heritage Foundation, a think tank with close ties to the administration, said they hoped to make the 1985 renewal process a deep reassessment - and a pruning - of government's role in higher education.

Distractions by other budget and policy concerns, however, the administration never got around to submitting its proposals for the new law, which updates the 1980 reauthorization act.

The versions passed by the House and the Senate during the summer had some 700 differences on issues like how students might qualify for student aid through the rest of the decade.

The conference committee finished ironing out the differences last week. Now the House and the Senate will vote on the compromise version, and, if they approve it, send it to President Reagan for enactment by Oct. 1.

"We didn't get everything we wanted, and we still have some things in it we didn't want," says USSA's Mary Preston. "For example, we still have the origination fee for Guaranteed Student Loans."

The five percent fee, which, according to Preston, covers "administrative costs," is taken out of GSLs immediately, so students get only 95 percent of the money. However, Preston adds, students still have to pay interest on that money "as if they had gotten 100 percent" of the GSL.

Ozer says the bill also takes into account the plight of part-time students and the need for financial aid which, she notes, is something never before done.

The compromise version does let part-time and less-than-half-time students qualify for Pell Grants and other forms of federal aid, and is a "major victory" for lobbyists, Ozer adds.

Preston adds the measure especially will help "displaced" homemakers and unemployed still workers who are forced to take just one class at a time.

In recent years, Preston says, the federal government had "penalized" those students "by telling them they were too poor" to get money for school.

Other observers say a new two-year deferment for borrowers unable to repay student loans under some circumstances may even help drive the default rate down.

Dallas Martin of the National Association of Student Aid Administrators and influential college lobbyist in Washington who largely wrote the Higher Education Act of 1980 himself - says the "good" compromise version may indicate the end of the days of colleges taking their lumps in Congress.

"I think people are increasingly concerned about higher education," he says. "In practice, education declined in support the past five or six years."

A member of the conference committee agrees.

"What this (reauthorization) bill means to American college students is, basically, that programs for college assistance - particularly to the lower and middle income student - will be there," says Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., chair of the Senate Education, Arts and Humanities committee.

"The emphasis, more than ever before, is on Pell Grants and Guaranteed Student Loans," he adds, noting while aid may not be easier to get, the committee "managed to hold our ground at roughly level funding."

Because inflation is so low now, Stafford explains, the committee recommended a clause to accommodate any additional monies which become available without changing the reauthorization bill itself.

"Help will be there for the students," he vows.

Both Stafford and Ozer expect the bill to pass quickly through Congress, and Stafford says Reagan will sign the measure before Oct. 1. The old reauthorization bill expires on that day.

Most College Students Are Type-A Personality

Does waiting in line at supermarkets and restaurants make you angry-even if you have no particular reason to be in a hurry?

When an elevator is slow to arrive, do you blame others for delaying it on purpose?

Do you have trouble delegating work to others, and when you do, are you constantly looking over their shoulders to make sure it is done correctly?

If you are always in a hurry, very ambitious and easily moved to hostility and anger, you are probably a Type A personality, which is not uncommon among college students, according to Redford B. Williams, professor of psychiatry and medicine at Duke University Medical Center.

There is reason to be concerned. Studies show that hard-driving Type A students are at greater risk of contracting heart disease in later years than their more easygoing Type B counterparts, Williams said.

"There is no evidence that completing chores quickly or being ambitious and work-oriented will lead to increased heart risk," he said. "Getting things done in a hurry and being competitive on the job obviously have lots of benefits. Rather, the villains in this type of personality are hostility and anger--becoming frustrated with others a lot.

"If you find yourself thinking that other people are selfish, that they can't be depended upon, that they are out for themselves and don't care about you, then you may be exhibiting the hostility aspect of the Type A personality."

Type A students need to learn to recognize their feelings of hostility and then practice trusting others more, Williams said.

"Are you always looking over your roommate's shoulder to see if he is cooking the spaghetti right?" he said. "Don't. The world is not going to end if the spaghetti is overcooked. Letting others take charge can be very liberating."

Instead of badgering the checkout clerk at the supermarket to work faster, channel your energy into more positive channels. After all, there's no point in getting upset over something that you can't do anything about.

If you know you have to wait in line, take along a book, a chess game or a pizza. "You need to develop strategies to occupy yourself when these enforced delays strike," Williams said.

A sense of humor helps alleviate tense situations, too, he noted. "Make jokes about standing in line. Sometimes it's funny just noticing the agitation of all the other Type A's."

If you're taking a plane, don't demand a window seat when the ticket agent says none is available. Say, "Oh, just any seat is fine," designating smoking or non-smoking.

"It's good practice," Williams said. "And often, you'll find that others are more accommodating when they realize that you're so nice to get along with."

Environmental factors are believed to play a major role in shaping the Type A personality, he added.

Youngsters who grow up to become Type A's probably did not receive as much positive reinforcement from their parents as did the youngsters who grow up to become Type B's, he said.

Parents of Type A students were always saying, "Can't you do better?" For example, when the Type A brought home his elementary school report card with four "A's" and one "B," his parents said, "Do you think you can bring that 'A' up next semester?" The parents of the Type B student said, "That's a wonderful report card."

In Duke studies, more men than women college students revealed Type A characteristics. "That doesn't mean that Type A men undergraduates should go around worrying about having a heart attack," Williams said.

"Most heart attacks don't occur until much later in life. So there is time for the Type A college student to modify his personality."

Paying The High Cost Of Tuition

Most Incomes Rise With College Costs

Despite rising tuitions, middle income families find it no harder to afford to send their children to college now than they did ten years ago, a report by the American Enterprise Institute says.

Other experts remain unconvinced.

After studying families with 18-19 year-old college bound students, AETI researcher Terry Harle concludes incomes have risen in step with rising college costs during the last decade.

A four-year public college required 9.5 percent of an income in 1973-74," he notes. Today, that same school requires 9.7 %.

Independent four-year colleges did grow relatively more expensive.

"In 1973-74, it was 19.2 percent (of a middle-class family's income). Now it's 21.8%," he says.

Two year public colleges, by contrast, claim 7.7% of the average family's income now, versus 8% in 1975.

But Dr. A. Dallas Martin, head of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, maintains colleges consume about the same portion of family income only because colleges themselves are keeping tuition low, and hurting themselves in the process.

"Tuition costs are rising faster than the average annual rate of inflation in part because, over a long period of high inflation, colleges tried to keep tuition as low as possible," Martin says.

Then the colleges (fall) behind (meeting their expenses), so they defer things like faculty raises and building repairs or they don't buy needed lab equipment or books for the library.

"Finally, the schools can't go on without replacing equipment," Martin continues. "And they have to raise salaries or the faculty might bolt. They have to repair the building or the roof may cave in, and there goes the entire investment."

Halstead reports faculty purchasing power has declined 20% since 1974.

"1984 hit at absolute bottom (of the drop in real salary), he says. "Each year, salaries increased less than the Consumer Price Index."

"It will take another five years, at least, to catch up and probably more like 8-9 years," Halstead says.

The only way to push real faculty earning power back up and to maintain campuses physically is to raise tuition, meaning the college will consume larger portion of the family income into the future, Martin says.

The "catastrophic" trend of rising tuitions account for additional student aid requests.

Some Schools Offer 'Prepaid' Tuition

(CPS) -- Starting this month, students at two-year Southwestern Michigan College can get some of their tuition money back if they can't transfer their SMC credits to a four-year college.

In Boston in early September, business officials announced a plan to help local high school grads pay to go to Massachusetts colleges. Ohio legislators are now weighing a plan for some top students to attend Ohio colleges for free.

In recent weeks, too, an estimated 16 colleges around the country started offering "tuition futures," in which parents can prepay tuition years in advance of their kids' actually enrolling at the school and, in return, get a guarantee that tuition won't rise.

Increasing numbers of colleges this fall, in short, are using tuition discounts, waivers, "futures" and payment schemes more common to car dealerships than campuses to attract students.

"Colleges can no longer sit back and wait for students to come to campuses," explains Steve Pelleiter, director of public affairs for the Council of Independent Colleges.

"Although many colleges were initially reluctant to market (themselves four or five years ago), they are now taking a pragmatic approach," he says.

"Colleges cannot afford to drag their feet."

But while schools did start upgrading their images with new logos, greater emphasis on "marketable" degree programs and even recruiting videotapes to help draw students to them, the use of financing schemes is new.

A huge number of colleges are offering students and parents financing schemes this fall that feature credit cards, deferred payment plans and payment installment programs, reports Meredith Ludwig of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU).

Most in the field credit Duquesne University in Pittsburgh.

with coming up with the "tuition futures" plan that has caught on at least 17 colleges this fall.

For a one-time payment this year of $4,450, parents can buy four years worth of tuition at Duquesne - room and board are extra - for a child who would enroll as a freshman in 2003.

West Virginia students this fall can spread the cost of attending WVU over eight - or ten-month periods. Students do pay an extra $40 annual fee to get on the deferred payment plan, which includes an insurance policy that pays off the university if the student or the students' parents should die before the tuition bill is paid in full.

To ensure that enrollment stays up in 1990, Wichita State is awarding 85 qualified ninth graders scholarships of $5,400 each, guaranteeing them four years worth of tuition and fees at the university.

Southwestern University in Texas is offering to loan parents half of their kids' annual college expenses, and then take ten years to repay it.

To combat what he calls a "brain drain" of students leaving the state to go to college, Ohio gubernatorial candidate James Rhodes wants to offer Ohio's best high school grads free tuition if they'll agree to go to a state college.

Ludwig of AASCU is unsure just how effectively such financing schemes actually recruit new students and keep "old" students attending classes, but a variety of observers are dubious about their value.

Bard College in New York, for example, rejected a finance plan on the grounds students should be more interested in the classes the school offers.

Others point out that college quality can change - for the worse - between the time a parent pays for it and a child actually enrolls.

But the colleges themselves seem happy with the new plans. Calvin College in Michigan says it's sold some 300 "gift certificates" that can be used to help pay for semesters in the future.

Some other kinds of creative marketing schemes also have reaped awards for schools.

In Maryland, Anne Arundel Community College students pass out brochures and recruit the students in local shopping malls, and have helped increase enrollment by 16 percent.

Atlantic Community College sends recruiters into Atlantic City streets and pool halls to recruit prospective minority students.

The College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minn., increased enrollment 25 percent and even won advertising awards for a November, 1985, ad featuring a photo of hundreds of Nazi soldiers and officers saluting Adolph Hitler. The headline reads: "All those in favor of eliminating higher education, raise your right hand."

The ad explains that during World War II a number of prominent German Catholic social thinkers fleeing fascism took up residence at the college.

"We wanted to emphasize the quality of a liberal arts education and the number of excellent faculty members that came here from Nazi Germany," says Diane Disse, St. Thomas' marketing director.

But not all marketing plans work.

St. Vincent College in Latrobe, Pa., last spring spent $15,000 on a marketing campaign to attract students who fly their own planes by capitalizing on its proximity to the Westmoreland County Airport.

But, poor visibility and threatening skies kept all but two prospective freshmen from the first "fly in for a visit" day.

The four-year Catholic liberal arts college has no aerobatics program.

To Some Students College Is A Bad Pain In The Head

Durham, N.C. -- Headaches may occur more frequently among college students than the rest of the population, according to a Duke University Medical Center neurologist, who offers advice about how to prevent and cure headaches.

"Stress causes the majority of headaches, and college students are among the most susceptible part of the population because they are often harder workers, more compulsive, more intense and over-achieving," said Dr. Marvin Rozezar, Duke assistant professor of neurology. "The people working hard to make it to the top are the ones getting the headaches."

Eating right and getting enough sleep are the best ways to prevent a headache.

A nap or an over-the-counter pain reliever is the best way to get rid of a headache.

"Isolated headaches that occur infrequently are hard to prevent, and it's probably not worth the effort," Rozezar said. "If you have frequent headaches, maybe you should change your lifestyle."

Sometimes it's simply a matter of finding out what triggers the headache and avoiding it. If you get a headache after eating chocolate, then cut out the chocolate, he advised.

"On days I miss lunch, it's automatic--I get a headache," he said. "If I eat lunch, I don't have that problem."

If headaches occur often enough to interrupt your life, and the usual remedies don't help, it may be necessary to see a doctor.

"Any headache that lasts more than 24 hours should cause alarm and result in medical attention," he said.

It is also a good idea to seek medical attention for headaches that:

*Last over 24 hours in an accelerating pattern, increasing in frequency over the months and weeks.

*Consistently begin in the morning and are associated with head movement.

*Are accompanied by any neurological dysfunction such as visual disturbance, weakness, numbness, memory loss, passing out or seizures.

*Occur for more than a few days following a head injury.

Ninety-eight percent of headaches are caused by stress and worry. The rest are caused by allergic reactions to food, inflamed sinuses, head injuries and brain tumors, he said.

There are two kinds of headaches: vascular, in which the blood vessels in the head go into spasm, dilating and throbbing; and tension, in which the muscles attached to the head contract.

Most migraine and hangover headaches are the vascular type, and most others are the tension type.

Rozezar said the "migraine personality" is typically an "ultra-compulsive, perfectionist, over-achieving, perfect-citizen type who never misses a chance to do his duty and acts in a perfectly acceptable way."

Although there is a strong tendency for several members of the same family to get migraines, environment probably plays a stronger role than heredity, he said.

"No one has ever found a headache gene," he said.

"Many migraines are likely a personality trait," he said. "If you grew up in a family where the reaction pattern was to say 'I have a headache,' you may react that way also."

Political Science Club Has Busy Schedule

The UNCW Political Science Club is off and running. Weekly meetings are scheduled for Mondays at 5:30 p.m. in the lobby of the University Union.

The Annual Political Science Fall Social and Picnic was held on September 28 at Empire Park with about 40 students and instructors attending. Softball, touch football, basketball, tennis and frisbee were among the activities as well as too much food.

Plans for the fall semester include several speakers of interest at the Randall Library: Oct. 16 - Frank Block, Candidate for N. C. Senate; Oct. 22 - Danny Long, candidate for New Hanover County Sheriff; Oct. 23 - N. C. Senator Franklin Williams; and U.S. Congressman Charlie Rose on Oct. 27.

Other candidates and speakers of merit are being contacted for October, November and December engagements.

On Sept. 29 and Oct. 1 the Political Science Club engaged the New Hanover County Board of Elections, which provided two registrars on each day to register students and faculty to vote and to provide information on Absentee Ballots and on how to register in one's home district.

More than forty people were duly registered and 18 were changed their addresses on those days.

Other activities include a joint spring '87 celebration of the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution with the UNCW History Club; the Annual Spring Semester Social and Picnic in conjunction with the Pi Sigma Alpha Political Science Honor Society, and the continuing series of noted local regional and national speakers of note.

Dues are $3 per semester, and membership is open to any students at UNCW with interest in the science of politics.

AVANT Achievement

Announces Awards

Tri-Corp International has just announced the establishment of the AVANT Achievement Awards for Junior and senior accounting students. These awards are being made available to encourage and promote the success of students studying to enter the field of accounting.

The AVANT CPA Review System is the first and most widely used educational computer software system targeted specifically toward the candidate reviewing for the CPA exam. The AVANT System is currently in use successfully in major universities, accounting firms and throughout the corporate world.

The AVANT Achievement Awards consist of five AVANT

Systems and five cash scholarships awarded each semester. Junior and senior accounting students will be invited to author the correct and incorrect answer explanations to four randomly chosen multiple choice questions from previous CPA exams. Those students whose questions are selected will not only receive the AVANT Achievement Award, but they will appear as contributing student editors in the next edition of the AVANT CPA Review System.

For further information contact Joy Richterkessing, AVANT Achievement Awards, P.O. Box 22509, Kansas City, Mo. 64113 or call 1-800-255-0551.

Summer School in Austria

The University of New Orleans will sponsor its 12th annual session of UNO-INNSBRUCK, an International Summer School program in Innsbruck, Austria. This educational/travel experience will involve over 250 students and some 30 faculty and staff for the summer of 1987.

"UNO's popular Alpine Summer School attracted students from 35 different American universities and colleges and several foreign countries for the summer of '86," says Carl Wagner, Associate Director of the Office of International Study Programs at UNO. "As a result, UNO-INNSBRUCK is now one of the largest overseas summer schools offered by an American university."

Applicants are already lining up for the 1987 session. Part of the secret may be that more than 70 courses in many different academic subject areas are offered in this magnificent and scenic Alpine Innsbruck setting in the "Heart of Central Europe". While participants can earn up to ten semester hours of credit, their classrooms are surrounded by the towering Tyrolean Alps, whose peaks are always snow-capped.

Naturally, courses offered with UNO-INNSBRUCK focus on the cultural, historic, social and economic issues of Europe. But, during the 1987 session courses in business and science will also be taught. All instruction is in English, and faculty from the University of New Orleans, guest professors from other American universities and from the University of Innsbruck will participate. All college credits earned are fully transferable. A very special feature of the 1987 program will be Colorado Governor Richard Lamm who will teach several history courses concerning the great issues of today that Western nations must face.

Stephanie Rondelli, a student participant in the 1986 UNO-Innsbruck program, had this to say about her European experience.

"If someone were to ask me to name the most memorable experience of my life all I would have to say is 'Innsbruck'. When I think of my summer in Innsbruck, I think of the mountains that were outside my dorm window and how wonderful it was to wake up to them every morning."

"The people of Austria have to be some of the friendliest people I have ever met. Their willingness to talk to you about their culture and history was extremely refreshing. The weekend travel opportunities while in Innsbruck are stupendous. Vienna, Munich and Venice were among my favorites. Overall, the program offered me many opportunities to enhance by educational experience - in the classroom as well as out of the classroom."

In addition to college age students like Stephanie, the UNO-Innsbruck program is increasingly popular with adult learners who may enroll for either credit or audit.

During the session, students are housed in the Studentenhaus at the 300 year-old University of Innsbruck. The school is a five-minute walk from the many inns, cafes, and beer gardens in the "Old Town" of Innsbruck. Three-day weekends offer ample time for students to travel, hike in the Alps, or ski on the nearby glaciers.

Uno-Innsbruck-1987 will convene with gala opening ceremonies on June 28th and end on Aug. 8th. An optional three-week tour of Western Europe and a one month work/study castle restoration program in Belgium are available to interested students.

Registration is already underway. Enrollment in the program is limited, so interested applicants should apply as soon as possible. Information and a full color brochure describing the program in detail can be had by writing to Uno-Innsbruck-1987, c/o International Study Programs, Box 1315-UNO, New Orleans, LA 70148 or, you can call (504) 286-7116.

Last Week's Solution

Horrorscopes

With Swami Gitchigami

Ed. Note - The Swami suffered a major trauma last week when we informed him that he was in error concerning the eclipse. He explained to us that he had been engaged in an exercise in deepening of thought traces through spirits when he should have been consulting his reading beads and Farmer's Almanac as to the correct timing of the eclipse. He deeply regrets any Gemini that missed being very relaxed because they were too busy howling at the moon and playing old Johnny Mathis tunes. All the Swami had to say about this serious mistake was, quote, "Oops."

The editors regret this mistake, and the Swami has assured us upon threat of being forced to watch "Brady Bunch" reruns for twenty-four hours straight.

GEMINI-You have the power to make wonderful dreams come to life. Link up with an Aries this week. Aries have some new dreams that you can help materialize. The world needs you. Godspeed.

LEO-Last week, your horoscope was not told. I, Swami G., was unable to interpret what several odd star-uniformations were trying to tell me about your last week. Swami was worried that there might have been a bad storm ahead for Leos, that is why nothing was said. This weeks reading is accurate though, since the said celestial oddities have straightened themselves out. The noble lion is up for a deeply romantic week.

Bishop To Speak On Apartheid

WILMINGTON - Bishop Ruben L. Speaks, presiding bishop of the 8th District of the A.M.E. Zion Church, Salisbury, N.C., and a member of the UNCW Board of Trustees, will speak in the Lecture Series sponsored by the UNCW philosophy and religion department Oct. 7 at 8 p.m., in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall. His topic is "Apartheid and Beyond: the Challenge to the West."

Speaks was born in Lake Providence, Louisiana, graduated from Drake University, and received master's degrees from both Drew Theological Seminary and Temple University. He did postgraduate work at both Duke University and Union Theological in Manhattan. While teaching at Hood Theological Seminary in Salisbury in 1972, he was elected the 76th bishop of the A.M.E. Zion Church, and for eight years served as the presiding bishop of West Africa.

Speaks is the author of five books, including The Church & Black Liberation and God in an Age of Scarcity. Among honors received, he was awarded the Republic of Liberia's highest citation, "Knight of African Redemption." He is married to the former Janie Griffin of Salisbury, and they have three children and four grandchildren.

Speaks will be calling upon his years of experience in Africa in discussing the controversial question of the use of sanctions against the apartheid government of South Africa, and what prospects the future may hold for that tortured nation. The free lecture is open to the public and will include a discussion period.

Sports Talk

with
MATT SHANKLIN, EDITOR

A Weekend in Blue Heaven

This past weekend I had an experience I will never forget. It was such a traumatic experience, I figured I would tell you about it. The experience was.....a Carolina football game in Chapel Hill.

As I arrived at the campus of UNC with a friend Friday, I was struck by the sheer beauty of it. As we drove, trying to find our friends dorm, we came within sight of the Dean Smith Student Activities Center. As the setting sun shined on the dome as if it was an old man's bald head, I realized the true impact the weekend would have on me and the different things I would encounter.

We made it to our friends dorm and unpacked. After showering, we left for dinner and some pre-game rallies (another name for parties). On the way out of the dorm, I saw what must be typical for a Carolina weekend, a girl sitting out on the ledge, doing her homework by flashlight. I guess she wanted the killer moon tan or something.

We were taken to dinner at the Rathskeller on Franklin Street. As we sat down, I felt as if I was thirty years in the past. The tradition around me was so pervasive. Everything about me seemed to have some history behind it.

As the waiter (who was beyond courteous) took our order, I was told to order the lasagna, salad, and iced tea. The tea, I was told, is the best in the world!

We got our salads and iced tea. I could only feel as if I was being watched by our Carolina friends. Getting this feeling, I felt obliged to say that the tea was the best thing I had tasted (although a Michelob would have better hit the spot). Our lasagna finally showed up and it was in a bowl. Now I don't know about you, but the lasagna I'm used to having (ARA style) doesn't really go in a bowl. As I prodded all the cheese in it, I realized I would have to decide between using a fork and a spoon. The lasagna was a little on the runny side with plenty of cheese. After much consideration, I decide on the fork since everyone else was using it. I guess it is a Carolina tradition.

The lasagna was great, but I got the feeling that you couldn't appear satisfied with your lasagna unless your shirt looked like a hamburger chain employee's face. It seemed as if every time you fought to get a fork full of cheese, you couldn't help but fling sauce on your shirt.

After leaving a very good meal at the Rat, we left for the parties at frat court. There were tons of people at the party and plenty of alcohol, despite the new drinking law. The party was great except that no one mingled or danced. They just stood there, drank and watched. The Carolina folk which attended the party had a worst taste in beer too. The people I know here at UNCW drink high class brew compared to what was being consumed at UNC. I saw nothing but people carrying cases of Goebels beer around. As a beer expert, I wouldn't feed Goebels to my ferret.

The band, the Unusals from ECU (you would think they would have a local band, but that is another story) played some good tunes that would have made the UNCW faithful get those happy feet. Despite this lack of enthusiasm (hopefully due to the fact of their intoxication) the party was good. With a few more people, a Twinwood party would have outlasted it (or underclassed it).

With the pre-game events for the night closing down, we headed back to Morrison Dorm for some much needed rest.

As we came up the hill from Kenan Stadium, we couldn't help but notice the parking attendant guarding a lot for Ram's club members at 3:00 a.m. Knowing I would have the privilege of experiencing the Ram's club the next day, I could only think of how exclusive it was.

As we got ready for the game the next morning, we heard the Carolina band practicing some TV tunes. Definitely the kind of music I like to hear. At halftime, the band was so entertaining, I felt like dancing to the Mr. Ed theme.

As I got ready for the game, I felt I was underdressing for the event. All I had ever heard about Carolina was how well they dressed. After thinking about it, I decided I looked fine and that I would rather be comfortable (something I learned from being here at UNCW) than impressive. As it turned out, the Carolina tradition was beaten by the heat and most everyone used common sense and dressed comfortably.

We proceeded to the Ram's club, which I still imagined as exclusive, to mingle and snack in the very hospitable confines of the club which is located in Kenan Field House at the one end of the stadium. As we mingled in the crowd, my image of the Ram's club disappeared as I ran into one of my old girlfriends. I could only wonder, "How the hell did she get in here."

My friends quickly diverted my astonishment to the one feature of the club that makes it apart of Blue Heaven, the balcony looking out onto the field. From this vantage point, you could see Carolina and Georgia Tech warming up. I thought to myself, if your going to see a game, do it first class. The Ram's club despite the small incident fit the bill perfectly.

After the affairs of the Ram's club, we went to our seats located on the Carolina side, but down near the end zone. For free student seats, I couldn't complain and at least we would shaded by the upper deck.

As the Carolina players began to get ready to come out on to the field, I notice something very peculiar, a golf cart in front of the players. As they rushed out onto the field, I couldn't help but laugh when I realized Head Coach Dick Crum was in the cart. The reason for this was because Crum had his leg broken when he was involved in a collision on the side lines a few weeks ago.

After an exciting first half, which saw Carolina jump out to a 14-3 halftime advantage behind the passing of quarterback Jonathan Hall and running of Derrick Fenner, Crum received a chauffeur for the trip back to the locker room. I can only wonder what would have happened had Carolina been losing at the half....Crum having to walk back to the locker room, maybe even without his crutches!

As the game progressed, I decided to get in on the cheers. Every time I heard around the cheers, were being centered towards N.C. State. All I turned was "Go to hell State!!!" That game isn't until Oct. 18. I got the feeling that Carolina could lose to State, win the national title and the season would still be a disappointment due to the loss to State.

I also encountered a cheer by the Mike man that had to do something about getting up. I thought Carolina folk were purer than that. I did enjoy the cheer to Woody Durham who is a institution in Blue Heaven. That showed alot of class.

With Carolina losing 20-14 with three minutes remaining, the fans seemed to sense that Carolina would eventually win and started to leave for the post-game parties. The Carolina players must have felt this extreme confidence as they took the ball and marched down the field for the winning touchdowns. After scoring the winning touchdown, the fans went wild and seemed to throw everything they could get their hands on. At least at Carolina, there isn't a penalty for such actions as there always seems to be at UNCW basketball games.

Strict NCAA Drug-testing Program Put in Place

from The NCAA News

With the identification of two International Olympic Committee-approved laboratories, the NCAA's drug-testing program-identified as the most demanding testing program of any sports organization in the nation-is now in place and ready for implementation this fall.

The Association's drug-testing and drug-education programs were announced officially September 24 in a press conference in Washington, D.C.

"While the drug-testing program was adopted overwhelmingly by the NCAA membership at the Convention last January, we waited to announce the details until arrangements were in place with the laboratories," NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers said.

"We are in the process of executing agreements with the University of California, Los Angeles, drug-testing laboratory in the UCLA Medical Center and with the National Institute for Scientific Research at the University of Quebec, Montreal," Byers said. "Both are approved by the International Olympic Committee and both handled testing for the 1976 and 1984 Summer Olympic Games, as well as subsequent Olympic-related testing."

"Both are state-of-the-art drug-testing laboratories with extensive experience and have full knowledge, from an international viewpoint," Byers said, "as to the latest developments in banned drug compounds."

Byers commended the assistance provided to the NCAA by Dr. Don H. Catlin, director of the UCLA laboratory, and Dr. Robert Dugal, director of the Quebec laboratory. Dr. Dugal also is a member of the international Olympic medical commission responsible for international certification of laboratories. He was present at the September 24 press conference.

Byers said the reason the drug-testing program was so broad in scope is that "it is directed to the health and welfare of the student-athlete and directed to assuring equitable and fair competition for national honors."

"It is designed to give the necessary support for a student-athlete to resist peer pressure to try drugs and competitive pressure to use drugs," he stated.

The NCAA will begin screening athletes in the Association's 1986-87 championships, possibly beginning with the cross country championships in November. The program will cost about $950,000 to implement in its first year, and the NCAA has earmarked up to $2 million for laboratory development that will expand drug-testing capabilities.

At the same time, the Association will spend $430,000 on a drug-education program that will send videotapes and other materials to schools and youth groups.

Byers emphasized that the NCAA is not a latecomer to the battle against drug abuse in athletics. "We have had an active, ongoing drug-education program since the early 1970s, and we have developed and distributed numerous copies of drug-education booklets, posters and similar materials in the past dozen years."

He noted that the Association provided the funding for a Michigan State University study of the drug problem in athletics in 1984 and began developing the current NCAA drug-testing program that same year.

"The NCAA membership has been cognizant of the problem and began taking significant steps to deal with it well before the current national attention to the issue," he said.

Concerning civil-rights questions that have been raised, Byers said the drug-testing judgments will be subject to appeal, and there "is a question whether competition in intercollegiate sports is a constitutionally protected right."

"This program is legally defensible," he said, "because it is intended to protect the health and the welfare of the student-athlete and to assure equitable competition in NCAA championships and NCAA-certified postseason football games. The practical application of those objectives clearly relates to and is consistent with the purposes of this Association."

Byers also cited the fact that the program is strongly supported by the great majority of NCAA member institutions.

Athletes will be asked to sign a consent decree before taking the tests, and any athlete who refuses will be ruled ineligible. The tests would be performed only in relation to championship rounds and postseason football games and not during regular-season competition in the respective sports.

"It is a consent arrangement whereby each year, the student-athlete declares his ability to meet the eligibility requirements of the NCAA," Byers said.

Daniel Hanley, M.D., one of the supervisors of the drug-testing program, said there virtually will be no chance of mistakes because of an extensive security system.

Athletes will be tested for dozens of substances, including illegal drugs like cocaine and marijuana, as well as such things as steroids, extensive amounts of caffeine and other stimulants, said Ruth M. Berkey, NCAA assistant executive director, whose staff is responsible for the detailed administration of the program under the policies of the NCAA Special Post-season Drug-Testing Committee.

She said urine samples may be taken both before and after contests. If an athlete tests positive for any of the banned substances-most of which are not controlled under criminal law-eligibility could be withdrawn. If the test comes after a championship game, a winning team with an athlete testing positive could forfeit the game, Byers said.

The NCAA will not disclose publicly the names of athletes found to test positive.

The testing eventually will include all NCAA-sanctioned intercollegiate sports, the executive director said.

"I firmly believe," Byers said, "that this is one of the most constructive things that the NCAA can do for intercollegiate athletics, and if you will, for the college and school community."

"With Bylaw 5-1(j)-widely known as Proposition 48-a very important message was sent throughout the college community and the high schools in one area that needed reform-academics."

"There appears to be pervasive use of drugs running through the school and college community. It's true that Len Bias' unfortunate death focused on athletics, but society's past ambivalence toward the problem-and in many areas a liberal campus attitude toward drugs-are the critically important elements in all of this."

"I believe that this drug-testing program sends a clear and important message all the way down the line and is one of the most constructive things that we can do in joining society's broad crusade and the government's crusade to stem the tide of the use of drugs."

"We can man the borders, we can seal South American fields and destroy the poppy plants, but we have to reduce consumption. This program is a major weapon, in my judgment, in attacking the use and consumption of drugs."

Volleyball Wins Big

by Matt Shanklin

UNC Wilmington defeated Baptist College 15-5, 15-10, 11-15, and 16-14 in collegiate volleyball action.

The Lady Seahawks were led by sophomore hitters Dede Devoly and Lisa Mills as they beat a Baptist squad that entered the match ranked 10th in the NCAA Division 1 South Region.

UNCW raises its record to 5-2, with this win and a victory over Campbell College.

UNCW's next match is October 11th at the UNC-Asheville Invitational.

Water Polo gains needed experience

from Staff Reports

Wilmington, N.C.-UNCW's water polo team set out to gain some "much needed" experience this weekend at the first round of the Southern League Varsity Tournament at George Washington University. And they got it.

Coach Marc Ellington's squad went 1-5 on the weekend, but the UNCW coach wasn't displeased.

"Our lack of experience caught up with us after the first couple of games," he said. "One of the reasons for the trip was to gain experience. We competed much better as the weekend progressed."

Friday night (12-1), the Seahawks defeated Mary Washington in their opening match Saturday, 25-5. Their game successive losses to George Washington (14-5), Richmond (20-5), Washington and Lee (14-5) and Lynchburg (13-11).

Ellington's squad travels to Washington & Lee Oct. 18-19 to compete in the second round of the Southern League Tournament.

CAA Announces TV Schedule

from Staff Reports

The Colonial Athletic Association has finalized its 1986-87 men's basketball television schedule, which includes 21 games on Home Team Sports and four national appearances by defending conference champion Navy.

Home Team Sports, a regional cable network, will carry 14 regular-season games and the entire 1987 Colonial Tournament from Hampton, Virginia. The regular-season slate includes eight conference matches and six with non-conference opponents. HTS will attempt to syndicate its Colonial schedule on other regional cable networks across the country.

Navy's national appearances include one each on ABC and CBS, and two on ESPN. Navy will carry the Midshipmen's January 25 game at Kentucky; CBS will telecast the February 7 game against Miami, and ESPN will show Navy in the Hall of Fame classic on November 22 and in the UNLV Running Rebel Classic, December 27-29.

The 1986-87 season is the Colonial's third on Home Team Sports, based in Washington D.C. HTS is carried by 74 cable systems in six states: Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Women Golfers Finish 10th

from Staff Reports

Wilmington, N. C. - UNC Wilmington's women's golf team finished in 10th place at the Beacon Woods Invitational Golf Tournament, but that doesn't tell the whole story.

Coach Lea Dudley's young team competed against excellent competition in the 54-hole event and emerged with valuable experience for the future.

"I was really pleased with the way we played," said Dudley. "We're making some freshman-type reactions in some freshman-type situations. But in other places, we're showing some real maturity."

Miami of Fla. won the 12-team tourney with a score of 873. The Hurricanes were followed by South Florida (898), Indiana (903), Georgia (908), Florida International (913), Wake Forest (927), Minnesota (929), Iowa State (959), Kansas (963), UNC Wilmington (977), Central Florida (985), and Seton (1,091).

Sandy Chester, who led the field after the first round, finished with a 72-76-77-225 total. She was followed by Diane Ross at 81-81-83-245, Melinda Dobson at 80-88-82-250, Mary Thomas at 86-86-85-257 and Regina Harkins at 94-89-96-279.

Tracy Kerdyk of Miami was medalist with a three-round total of 214.

UNCW's next appearance comes Thursday when the Lady Seahawks compete in the Duke University Invitational at Durham, N.C.

Netters Tune Up For CAA Tourney

from Staff Reports

Wilmington, N.C. UNCW men's tennis team tuned up for this weekend's Colonial Athletic Association Men's Tennis Tournament by serving as host of the Riverfest Invitational over the weekend.

Defending champion East Carolina won for the second straight year with 26 points. The Pirates topped Coastal Carolina (21), Campbell (18), Francis Marion (14) and UNCW (11).

"We played like I expected," said Larry Honeycutt, UNCW's tennis coach. "The competition was good and I was just trying to get the right people in the right positions."

Wilmington, N.C. - Freshman Kris York continues to raise eyebrows in only her first season with the UNCW women's cross country team. The Jenks, Ok., native was runnerup in the UNC Charlotte Invitational Cross Country Meet Saturday as UNCW's women placed third in the 15-team event.

UNCW's men, meanwhile, placed eighth in the meet. The Sun Belt Conference's Old Dominion won both divisions, scoring 15 points in the men's category and 27 points on the women's side.

"We're coming around," said UNCW Cross Country Coach Dave Agosta of his team's progress. "We're improving each race drastically. We ran in horrible conditions with the heat and wind Saturday, and still had pretty good times."

Soccer Team Looks for Better Second Half

by D. Curtis Nichols

These days it seems as if there is nothing positive to say when discussing the UNCW soccer team. The Hawks lost a heartbreaker, in overtime 3-2, to the Pirates of ECU but they did score two goals ending a school record five straight shutouts.

UNCW opened the scoring early in the first half when David Cresswell received a pass from Steve Allnutt. This goal not only gave the Seahawks the early lead but ended the scoring drought.

ECU fought back to tie the game at 1-1. This scored stood until the second half.

Rod Lill gave the Seahawks the lead again with a goal midway through the second half. Wade Adams was credited with an assist. At this point it appeared as if the Hawks were going to be able to hang on win the game. With less than a minute left in the game

ECU's Jamie Riebel broke the defense and scored his second goal of the game.

In overtime the Pirates won on a goal by Palmer Gross.

The loss dropped the Seahawks to 2-6-1 overall record and 0-4-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association.

Coach Jackie Blackmore commented after the game, "We had so many chances against ECU that we didn't cash in on. If we had played with the same intensity that we did in the James Madison and Navy matches, we would have won."

The game against the Pirates marked the half way point of the season. After the first half of the season the soccer team has only managed nine goals and two victories in nine outings. Blackmore promises a shakeup in the line up in an attempt to create some offense.

"We're going to take some chances and move some personnel around," said Blackmore.

So far this season the Seahawks' offense has been outscored 23-9. The scoring leader at this juncture in the season is Junior David Cresswell. He has three goals and two assists for a team leading eight points.

The Seahawks return to action Friday October 10 against Atlantic Christian College. After Friday's game against Atlantic Christian College the UNCW booters have only six games remaining on their schedule with four being home games.

Basketball tryouts will be held on Oct. 15, 1986. Anyone trying out must have proof of a current, unlimited activity physical examination. Records on file with the Student Health Service will be adequate. You must stop by the training room prior to Oct. 15th to fill out a Medical History form.

Among other UNCW runners, Missy Hall placed 6th (20:31), Sarah Harris 16th (21:49), Beeda Lea 44th (24:25) and Sheila Viola 47th (24:58).

Mike Fitzgerald of Georgia

State was the top male finisher with a time of 25:50 on the 5-mile course. David Simmons was UNCW's top runner for the second straight meet, covering the distance in 27:31.

UNCW's other male finishers were Layne Fuller 34th (28:18), Chris Daniel 42nd (28:21), Phil Meeks 47th (28:48), Monte Powell 55th (30:20), Michael O'Brian 63rd (30:39), Jeff Mimms 76th (31:29) and Brian Pawlak 72nd (31:52).

Seahawk Athlete of the Week

Wilmington, N.C. - Golfer Sandy Chester has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the UNCW sports information office.

Chester, a junior from Syracuse, N.Y., placed in the top 100 in the Beacon Woods Invitational Golf Tournament at Bayonet Point, Fl. She posted rounds of 72, 76, and 77 for a three-round total of 225, eleven shots off the pace set by Miami's (Fla.) Tracy Kerdyk.

"I think she thoroughly deserves this award as she played against the best in the nation and beat them," said Head Coach Lea Dudley. "I suspect that she will continue to blossom as she gains more experience as the season progresses."

Chester led the tournament after the first day with her even par round of 72, but couldn't maintain the pace set by Kerdyk. The Lady Seahawks placed 10th out of a very strong 12 team field.

Chester, who aspires to play on the LPGA tour after graduation, won the Longwood Invitational earlier this season.

Last week, soccer player Donnie Lewis was the Athlete-of-the-Week.

Tuttle gains CAA Honors

from Staff Reports

John Tuttle, a sophomore forward from William and Mary has been named Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) player of the week by the CAA headquarters in Richmond, Tuttle, from Fairfax, VA, played a leading role in William and Mary's success at the MetLife Classic held last weekend in Norfolk, VA. The Tribe won both of its games - 2-0 over Cal State Fullerton 9/26 and 1-0 over

La Salle 9/23 - and Tuttle was named to the all-tournament team.

He had a goal and assist - his first points of the season - against Cal-State. Against La Salle it was a foul on Tuttle that led to Ricky Dahan's penalty-kick goal.

The victories improved William and Mary's record to 8-2 with seven straight wins, one shy of the school record. Tuttle was an all-CAA performer last season.

A Weekend in Blue Heaven

This past weekend I had an experience I will never forget. It was such a dramatic experience, I figured I would tell you about it. The experience was..... Carolina football game in Chapel Hill.

As I arrived at the campus of UNC with a friend Friday, I was struck by the sheer beauty of it. As we drove, trying to find our friends dorm, we came within sight of the Dean Smith Student Activities Center. As the setting sun shined on the dome as if it was an old man's bald head, I realized the true impact the weekend would have on me and the different things I would encounter.

We made it to our friends dorm and unpacked. After showering, we left for dinner and some pre-game rallies (another name for parties). On the way out of the dorm, I saw what must be typical for a Carolina weekend, a girl sitting out on the ledge, doing her homework by flashlight. I guess she wanted the killer moon tan or something.

We were taken to dinner at the Rahnkeller on Franklin Street. As we sat down, I felt as if I was thirty years in the past. The tradition around me was so pervasive. Everything about me seemed to have some history behind it.

As the waiter (who was beyond courteous) took our order, I was told to order the lasagna, salad, and iced tea. The tea, I was told, is the best in the world!

We got our salads and iced tea, I could only feel as if I was being watched by our Carolina friends. Getting this feeling, I felt obliged to say that the tea was the best thing I had tasted (although a Michelob would have better hit the spot). Our lasagna finally showed up and it was in a bowl. Now I don't know about you, but the lasagna I'm used to having (ARA style) doesn't really go in a bowl. As I prodded all the cheese in it, I realized I would have to decide between using a fork and a spoon. The lasagna was a little on the runny side with plenty of cheese. After much consideration, I decide on the fork since everyone else was using it. I guess it is a Carolina tradition.

The lasagna was great, but I got the feeling that you couldn't appear satisfied with your lasagna unless your shirt looked like a hamburger chain employee's face. It seemed as if every time you fought to get a fork full of cheese, you couldn't help but fling sauce on your shirt.

After leaving a very good meal at the Rat, we left for the parties at frat court. There were tons of people at the party and plenty of alcohol, despite the new drinking law. The party was great except that no one mingled or danced. They just stood there, drank and watched. The Carolina folk which attended, the party had a worst taste in beer too. The people I know here at UNC drink high class brew compared to what was being consumed at UNC. I saw nothing, but people carrying cases of Goebels beer around. As a beer expert, I wouldn't feed Goebels to my ferret.

The band, the Unusals from ECU (you would think they would have a local band, but that is another story) played some good tunes that would have made the UNCW faithful get those happy feet. Despite this lack of enthusiasm (hopefully due to the fact of their intoxication) the party was good. With a few more people, a Twinwood party would have outlasted it (or underlasted it).

With the pre-game events for the night closing down, we headed back to Morrison Dorm for some much needed rest.

As we came up the hill from Kenan Stadium, we couldn't help but notice the parking attendant guarding a lot for Ram's club members at 3:00 a.m. Knowing I would have the privilege of experiencing the Ram's club the next day, I could only think of how exclusive it was.

As we got ready for the game the next morning, we heard the Carolina band practicing some TV tunes. Definitely the kind of music I like to hear. At halftime, the band was so entertaining, I felt like dancing to the Mr. Ed theme.

As I got ready for the game, I felt I was underdressing for the event. All I had ever heard about Carolina was how well they dressed. After thinking about it, I decided I looked fine and that I would rather be comfortable (something I learned from being here at UNCW) than impressive. As it turned out, the Carolina tradition was beaten by the heat and most everyone used common sense and dressed comfortably.

We proceeded to the Ram's club, which I still imagined as exclusive, to mingle and snack in the very hospitable confines of the club which is located in Kenan Field House at the one end of the stadium. As we mingled in the crowd, my image of the Ram's club disappeared as I ran into one of my old girlfriends. I could only wonder, "How the hell did she get in here."

My friends quickly diverted my astonishment to the one feature of the club that makes it apart of Blue Heaven, the balcony looking out onto the field. From this vantage point, you could see Carolina and Georgia Tech warming up. I thought to myself, if your going to see a game, do it first class. The Ram's club despite the small incident fit the bill perfectly.

After the affairs of the Ram's club, we went to our seats located on the Carolina side, but down near the end zone. For free student seats, I couldn't complain and at least we would be shaded by the upper deck.

As the Carolina players began to get ready to come out on to the field, I notice something very peculiar, a golf cart in front of the players. As they rushed out onto the field, I couldn't help but laugh when I realized Head Coach Dick Crum was in the cart. The reason for this was because Crum had his leg broken when he was involved in a collision on the side lines a few weeks ago.

After an exciting first half, which saw Carolina jump out to a 14-3 halftime advantage behind the passing of quarterback Jonathan Hall and running of Derrick Penner, Crum received a chauffeur for the trip back to the locker room. I can only wonder what would have happened had Carolina been losing at the half....Crum having to walk back to the locker room, maybe even without his crutches!

As the game progressed, I decided to get in on the cheers. Every time I turned around, the cheers were being centered towards N.C. State. All I heard was "Go to hell State!!!" That game isn't until Oct. 18. I got the feeling that Carolina could lose to State, win the national title and the season would still be a disappointment due to the loss to State.

I also encountered a cheer by the Mike man that had to do something about getting up. I thought Carolina folk were purer than that. I did enjoy the cheer to Woody Durham who is a institution in Blue Heaven. That showed a lot of class.

With Carolina losing 20-14 with three minutes remaining, the fans seemed to sense that Carolina would eventually win and started to leave for the post-game parties. The Carolina players must have felt this extreme confidence as they took the ball and marched down the field for the winning touchdown. After scoring the winning touchdown, the fans went wild and seemed to throw everything they could get their hands on. At least at Carolina, there isn't a penalty for such actions as there always seems to be at UNCW basketball games.

Strict NCAA Drug-testing Program Put in Place

from The NCAA News

With the identification of two International Olympic Committee-approved laboratories, the NCAA's drug-testing program-identified as the most demanding testing program of any sports organization in the nation-is now in place and ready for implementation this fall.

The Association's drug-testing and drug-education programs were announced officially September 24 in a press conference in Washington, D.C.

"While the drug-testing program was adopted overwhelmingly by the NCAA membership at the Convention last January, we waited to announce the details until arrangements were in place with the laboratories," NCAA Executive Director Walter Byers said.

"We are in the process of executing agreements with the University of California, Los Angeles, drug-testing laboratory in the UCLA Medical Center and with the National Institute for Scientific Research at the University of Quebec, Montreal," Byers said. "Both are approved by the International Olympic Committee and both handled testing for the 1976 and 1984 Summer Olympic Games, as well as subsequent Olympic-related testing."

"Both are state-of-the-art drug-testing laboratories with extensive experience and have full knowledge, from an international viewpoint," Byers said, "as to the latest developments in banned drug compounds."

Byers commended the assistance provided to the NCAA by Dr. Don H. Catlin, director of the UCLA laboratory, and Dr. Robert Dugal, director of the Quebec laboratory. Dr. Dugal also is a member of the International Olympic medical commission responsible for international certification of laboratories. He was present at the September 24 press conference.

Byers said the reason the drug-testing program was so broad in scope is that "it is directed to the health and welfare of the student-athlete and directed to assuring equitable and fair competition for national honors."

"It is designed to give the necessary support for a student-athlete to resist peer pressure to try drugs and competitive pressure to use drugs," he stated.

The NCAA will begin screening athletes in the Association's 1986-87 championships, possibly beginning with the cross country championships in November. The program will cost about $950,000 to implement in its first year, and the NCAA has earmarked up to $2 million for laboratory development that will expand drug-testing capabilities.

At the same time, the Association will spend $430,000 on a drug-education program that will send videotapes and other materials to schools and youth groups.

Byers emphasized that the NCAA is not a latecomer to the battle against drug abuse in athletics. "We have had an active, ongoing drug-education program since the early 1970s, and we have developed and distributed numerous copies of drug-education booklets, posters and similar materials in the past dozen years."

He noted that the Association provided the funding for a Michigan State University study of the drug problem in athletics in 1984 and began developing the current NCAA drug-testing program that same year.

"The NCAA membership has been cognizant of the problem and began taking significant steps to deal with it well before the current national attention to the issue," he said.

Concerning civil-rights questions that have been raised, Byers said the drug-testing judgments will be subject to appeal, and there "is a question whether competition in intercollegiate sports is a constitutionally protected right."

"This program is legally defensible," he said, "because it is intended to protect the health and the welfare of the student-athlete and to assure equitable competition in NCAA championships and NCAA-certified postseason football games. The practical application of those objectives clearly relates to and is consistent with the purposes of this Association."

Byers also cited the fact that the program is strongly supported by the great majority of NCAA member institutions.

Athletes will be asked to sign a consent decree before taking the tests, and any athlete who refuses will be ruled ineligible. The tests would be performed only in relation to championship rounds and postseason football games and not during regular-season competition in the respective sports.

"It is a consent arrangement whereby each year, the student-athlete declares his ability to meet the eligibility requirements of the NCAA," Byers said.

Daniel Hanley, M.D., one of the supervisors of the drug-testing program, said there virtually will be no chance of mistakes because of an extensive security system.

Athletes will be tested for dozens of substances, including illegal drugs like cocaine and marijuana, as well as such things as steroids, extensive amounts of caffeine and other stimulants, said Ruth M. Berkey, NCAA assistant executive director, whose staff is responsible for the detailed administration of the program under the policies of the NCAA Special Post-season Drug-Testing Committee.

She said urine samples may be taken both before and after contests. If an athlete tests positive for any of the banned substances-most of which are not controlled under criminal laws-eligibility could be withdrawn. If the test comes after a championship game, a winning team with an athlete testing positive could forfeit the game, Byers said.

The NCAA will not disclose publicly the names of athletes found to test positive.

The testing eventually will include all NCAA-sanctioned intercollegiate sports, the executive director said.

"I firmly believe," Byers said, "that this is one of the most constructive things that the NCAA can do for intercollegiate athletics, and if you will, for the college and school community."

"With Bylaw 5-1-(j)-widely known as Proposition 48-a very important message was sent throughout the college community and the high schools in one area that needed reform-academics."

"There appears to be pervasive use of drugs running through the school and college community. It's true that Len Bias' unfortunate death focused on athletics, but society's past ambivalence toward the problem-and in many areas a liberal campus attitude toward drugs-are the critically important elements in all of this."

"I believe that this drug-testing program sends a clear and important message all the way down the line and is one of the most constructive things that we can do in joining society's broad crusade and the government's crusade to stem the tide of the use of drugs."

"We can man the borders, we can raid South American fields and destroy the poppy plants, but we have to reduce consumption. This program is a major weapon, in my judgment, in attacking the use and consumption of drugs."

Volleyball Wins Big

by Matt Shanklin

UNC Wilmington defeated Baptist College 15-5, 15-10, 11-5, and 16-14 in collegiate volleyball action.

The Lady Seahawks were led by sophomore hitters Dede Devoly and Lisa Mills as they beat a Baptist squad that entered the match ranked 10th in the NCAA Division 1 South Region.

UNCW raises its record to 5-2, with this win and a victory over Campbell College.

UNCW's next match is October 11th at the UNC-Asheville Invitational.

Water Polo gains needed experience

from Staff Reports

Wilmington, N.C. - UNCW's water polo team set out to gain some much needed experience this weekend at the first round of the Southern League Varsity Tournament at George Washington University. And they got it.

Coach Marc Ellington's squad went 1-5 on the weekend, but the UNCW coach wasn't displeased.

"Our lack of experience caught up with us after the first couple of games," he said. "One of the reasons for the trip was to gain experience. We completed much better as the weekend progressed."

After losing to Richmond Friday night (19-1), the Seahawks defeated Mary Washington in their opening match Saturday, 25-5. Then came successive losses to George Washington (14-5), Richmond (20-5), Washington and Lee (14-5) and Lynchburg (13-11).

After one of the most exciting games in recent years, we took off for the post-game parties at K&J and K.A. After a couple hours of celebrating, we headed back for some rest.

We came back out later, only to find very little going on except a lot of people talking or recovering. Discouraged, we went to Burger King on Franklin Street. It felt like home to see skateboarders riding around the historic street. While we munched, we had the pleasure of seeing three Georgia Tech fans kicked out of the place by the Burger King police. The crime...sticking their pickles off their hamburgers onto a picture of the sacred Chapel Hill wall. With nothing else exciting to do and worn out from all the activities, we left to get some needed yet unwanted rest.

About 1:30 a.m., the fire alarm went off. It sounded more like a telephone ringing. Being a professional of the Galloway fire alarms, we handled it by staying in the dorm. Probably not smart in many minds, but most of us know what it is like to go through a college fire alarm.

As we got ready to leave Sunday morning, the Carolina mistique showed its ugly head again as it seemed that their were as many people in Davis Library as there were in Kenan stadium Saturday.

As I left Carolina after my first visit, I couldn't help but realize that I had become apart of the long history of this wonderful campus. I express my thanks to the people that showed me such a great time in Blue Heaven. I had so much fun, I am going to the N.C. State game on the 18th.

As much fun as I had, it was sure great to have the sand under my feet, the sun shining on my head, and all the beautiful women of UNCW walking around on campus when arrived back on Sunday afternoon. Blue Heaven is one thing, but I would have a hard time trading the Green & Gold Heaven I have here.

Mike Fitzgerald of Georgia

State was the top male finisher with a time of 25:50 on the 5-mile course. David Simmons was UNCW's top runner for the second straight meet, covering the distance in 27:31.

UNCW's other male finishers were Layne Fuller 34th (28:18), Chris Daniel 42nd (28:21), Phil Meeks 47th (28:48), Monte Powell 55th (30:20), Michael O'Brian 63rd (30:39), Jeff Mimms 76th (31:29) and Brian Pawlak 72nd (31:52).

Soccer Team Looks for Better Second Half

by D. Curtis Nichols

These days it seems as if there is nothing positive to say when discussing the UNCW soccer team. The Hawks lost a heartbreaker, in overtime 3-2, to the Pirates of ECU, but they did score two goals ending a school record five straight shutouts.

UNCW opened the scoring early in the first half when David Cresswell received a pass from Steve Allnutt. This goal not only gave the Seahawks the early lead but ended the scoring drought.

ECU fought back to tie the game at 1-1. This scored stood until the second half.

Rod Lill gave the Seahawks the lead again with a goal midway through the second half. Wade Adams was credited with an assist. At this point it appeared as if the Hawks were going to be able to hang on win the game. With less than a minute left in the game

ECU's Jamie Riebel broke the defense and scored his second goal of the game.

In overtime the Pirates won on a goal by Palmer Gross.

The loss dropped the Seahawks to 2-6-1 overall record and 0-4-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association.

Coach Jackie Blackmore commented after the game, "We had so many chances against ECU that we didn't cash in on. If we had played with the same intensity that we did in the James Madison and Navy matches, we would have won."

The game against the Pirates marked the half way point of the soccer season. After the first half of the season the soccer team has only managed nine goals and two victories in nine outings. Blackmore promises a shakeup in the line up in an attempt to create some offense.

"We're going to take some chances and move some personnel around," said Blackmore.

So far this season the Seahawks' offense has been outscored 23-9. The scoring leader at this juncture in the season is Junior David Cresswell. He has three goals and two assists for a team leading eight points.

The Seahawks return to action Friday October 10 against Atlantic Christian College. After Friday's game against Atlantic Christian College the UNCW booters have only six games remaining on their schedule with four being home games.

Basketball tryouts will be held on Oct. 15, 1986. Anyone trying out must have proof of a current, unlimited activity physical examination. Records on file with the Student Health Service will be adequate. You must stop by the training room prior to Oct. 15th to fill out a Medical History form.

Seahawk Athlete of the Week

Sandy Chester

Wilmington, N.C. - Golfer Sandy Chester has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the UNCW sports information office.

Chester, a junior from Syracuse, NY, placed in the top 100 in the Beacon Woods Invitational Golf Tournament at Bayonet Point, Fl. She posted rounds of 72, 76, and 77 for a three-round total of 225, eleven shots off the pace set by Miami's (Fla.) Tracy Kerdyk.

"I think she thoroughly deserves this award as she played against the best in the nation and beat them," said Head Coach Lea Dudley. "I suspect that she will continue to blossom as she gains more experience as the season progresses."

Chester led the tournament after the first day with her even par

round of 72, but couldn't maintain the pace set by Kerdyk. The Lady Seahawks placed 10th out of a very strong 12 team field.

Chester, who aspires to play on the LPGA tour after graduation, won the Longwood Invitational earlier this season.

Last week, soccer player Donnie Lewis was the Athlete-of-the-Week.

Coming Events

- 10/10 Soccer at Atlantic Christian
- 10/10 Women's Golf at Duke Inv.
- 10/11 Volleyball at UNC-Asheville Inv.
- 10/11 Cross Country vs. East Carolina/Methodist (at Fayetteville, N.C.)

Netters Tune Up For CAA Tourney

from Staff Reports

Wilmington, N.C. UNCW men's tennis team tuned up for this weekend's Colonial Athletic Association Men's Tennis Tournament by serving as host of the Riverfest Invitational over the weekend.

Defending champion East Carolina won for the second straight year with 26 points. The Pirates topped Coastal Carolina (21), Campbell (18), Francis Marion (14) and UNCW (11).

"We played like I expected," said Larry Honeycutt, UNCW's tennis coach. "The competition was good and I was just trying to get the right people in the right positions."

"We finished last. I didn't like it, but it showed me the things we need to work on. Overall, I was well pleased with the way we played."

UNCW's top performers in the weekend event were No. 1 player Terry Gratz and No. 3 Ron Lawrence.

Gratz split four singles matches, defeating ECU's Dan Lamont (10-8) and Coastal's Ashok Pinakoron (10-8) and losing to Campbell's Tim Reynolds (10-5) and Francis Marion's Phil Lewis (10-8). Gratz did not play doubles because of poor health.

Lawrence, meanwhile, went 2-2 in singles and 1-3 in doubles. Lawrence downed Coastal's Andy Morse (10-5) and Francis Marion's Keith Young (10-2).

Tuttle gains CAA Honors

from Staff Reports

John Tuttle, a sophomore forward from William and Mary has been named Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) player of the week by the CAA headquarters in Richmond. Tuttle, from Fairfax, VA, played a leading role in William and Mary's success at the MetLife Classic held last weekend in Norfolk, VA. The Tribe won both of its games - 2-0 over Cal State Fullerton 9/26 and 1-0 over

La Salle 9/28 - and Tuttle was named to the all-tournament team.

He had a goal an assist - his first points of the season - against Cal-State. Against La Salle it was a foul on Tuttle that led to Ricky Dahan's penalty-kick goal.

The victories improved William and Mary's record to 8-2 with seven straight wins, one shy of the school record. Tuttle was an all-CAA performer last season.

'Papa Don't Preach'..... at least not at UNCW

Students Uninformed About Birth Control

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Writer

"Papa, don't preach" Madonna sings to her father as she tells him she's pregnant.

And Papa doesn't preach to UNCW women. Of approximately 3,000 young women who attended UNCW last year, 133 of them requested pregnancy tests from the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center, said Catherine Vangelow, Physician's Assistant and Director of the Student Health and Wellness Center.

Of the 133 women who requested pregnancy tests last year, 31 of them tested positive, Ms. Vangelow said. A total of 99-100% of the women had abortions.

The only type of birth control those young women were using was "crossing their fingers and hoping," a method that seems to be a much too common practice among sexually active young people, Ms. Vangelow said.

Recent statistics released by the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center state that since the beginning of the Fall 86 Semester, 26 women have requested pregnancy tests at the Health and Wellness Center.

Seven of those women have tested positive. Most of the young women seeking birth control advice from health clinics have already been sexually active for months with no protection.

Ms. Vangelow stressed the need to start programs teaching birth control in high school. "The ever-present pressure to conform to a group norm leads to increased sexual activity in teenagers and young adults."

"Young adults need to be taught to make decisions and realize what the consequences will be," Ms. Vangelow said. She feels high schools are not doing enough to teach students to make their own decisions when it comes to sexual activity and birth control methods.

Several methods of birth control are available to young adults. The Student Health and Wellness Center will write out a prescription to young women for birth control pills after the completion of an oral examination, Ms. Vangelow said.

The Health and Wellness Center performed 384 oral contraceptive examinations last year. The low dose birth control pill is the safest and the most effective for young women, Ms. Vangelow said. Women who go in for an examination for birth control pills must attend a seminar on human sexuality, she said.

The only type of birth control those young women were using were "crossing their fingers and hoping," said Catherine Vangelow, Physician's Assistant and Director of the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center.

The centerpiece of the human sexuality seminar is a video on sexual responsibility. The video, titled Young Men and Sexual Responsibility, is produced by the University of Minnesota's School of Public Health, she said.

Susie Duluca and Stella Dunn are coordinators of the human sexuality seminar. The seminar is held almost every Wednesday at 2 p.m. in the Health and Wellness Center and a Physician's Assistant is always present throughout the seminar.

The video is different from most videos of its kind because the commentator speaks to the audience as an adult who is having sex and not as a teenager who shouldn't. The video also is presented from the male perspective.

Following the presentation of the video, contraceptive devices are displayed and a question and answer session follows.

Group Helps Young Mothers

By Joseph B. Allen
Staff Writer

A young single woman who discovers that she's pregnant usually has no emotional support system that she can fall back on.

The added burden of loneliness can greatly add to the tensions and fears that a young woman experiences when she discovers that she's pregnant.

All too often women between the ages of 15-24 often face the nine months of pregnancy without the help and support of family and friends.

"There are approximately 1200 single pregnancies in New Hanover County a year," said Mary K. Mason, a registered nurse and founder of Mother's Helper.

"Mother's Helper was founded a year and a half ago because there was a need to help young girls who have little or no support," said Mrs. Mason.

"Many of the women who volunteer to be Mother's Helpers have had single or problem pregnancies," she said.

When a young woman makes her first call to Mother's Helper's, her first name only is asked, along with her phone number.

"If she is married, we'll still help her," Mrs. Mason said.

"Stress plays a real important part of a single pregnancy," she said. "The pregnancy is a real crisis for the girl."

The primary needs of the young woman are discussed during the first phone call.

Afterwards a volunteer Mother's Helper is assigned to help the young woman during the remainder of her pregnancy and for three months after birth.

The Mother's Helper assigned to the young woman has 72 hours to get in contact with her. An effort is made to closely match the two in personality and ages.

"It's hard to access someone over the phone," Mrs. Mason said. "But we usually come close."

In addition to providing her charge with emotional support, the Mother's Helper will go with the pregnant woman when she tells her parents, if asked to.

"There are app. 1200 single pregnancies in New Hanover County each year," said Mary Mason, founder of Mother's Helper.

"Mother's Helper emphasizes proper prenatal care," Mrs. Mason said. "There is a high infant mortality rate and premature birthrate in New Hanover County," she said.

There is also a high ratio of low birth weights in the county, she said.

"We are real successful in getting healthy babies," Ms. Mason said.

The Mother's Helper will take the young woman to the doctor and will tell her just about everything she wants to know about pregnancy, she said.

The Mother's Helper will accompany her charge to Lamaze classes, teach about the growth and development of the unborn baby and the physical aspects of pregnancy-morning sickness, mood changes and post-partum blues.

UNCW Stresses Alcohol Awareness

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

This week, students at UNCW will have the opportunity to find out more about a subject that affects everyone in one fashion or another - alcohol and alcohol abuse.

The Student Health and Wellness Center, in cooperation with BACCHUS and the Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity, will sponsor a number of events during Intercollegiate Alcohol Awareness week. Universities throughout the country will be participating in a massive attempt to get students more information on an activity that is becoming more and more popular every day on college campuses.

Off campus, some estimates show that alcohol is involved in more than half of all crimes committed in the United States alone. Alcohol is involved in anywhere from one-half to three-quarters of all traffic accidents involving fatalities. Alcoholism cost taxpayers an estimated $1.2 billion dollars every year in lost work time and in treatment of alcohol related diseases.

The purpose of Alcohol Awareness week is not to frighten or "bully" students into not drinking - studies conducted by the American College Health Services show that from 70-90% of all college students drink on a regular basis, and most said they would continue to do so.

The events scheduled are designed to inform students that there are alternatives to drinking, and that drinking can be a serious problem if not controlled. Drinking in itself is not the problem - heavy drinking on a regular basis causes the most concern.

How Alcohol Works

Alcohol is a drug, and the body reacts to it like a drug. Alcohol is a depressant and relieves inhibitions - that is why drunk "loosen up". Coordination and thoughts are disrupted.

The brain is not the only part of the body that can receive damage from alcohol.

"Binge Drinking" can and usually is a leading cause of heart disease, since the body is trying to rid its system of the alcohol and all parts are forced to work overtime - especially the heart and liver.

How Much is Too Much?

Drinking more than two drinks per day can, over a long period of time, cause irreversible heart and kidney problems, and long term usage of alcohol has been proven to be the leading cause of cirrhosis of the liver, which destroys the body's ability to remove poisons from the blood.

Drinking games such as "Quarters" should be avoided because they encourage rapid consumption of alcohol.

There is no hard and fast rule for how much is safe; there are too many variables, including body weight and mass, food, etc.

The Morning After The Night Before

When a person drinks too much and ends up with a hangover, the body is responding to the leftover poisons in its system (alcohol has no appreciable amounts of nutrients). The alcohol also accounts for the upset stomach, headache and the "leave me alone" feeling.

The best cure for a hangover is time. It takes the average person about an hour and a half to metabolize a single average ounce and a half mixed drink, six ounces of wine, or one beer.

Career Day Today

Four Arrested at Student Union

FROM STAFF REPORTS

WILMINGTON - More than 50 employers from Southeastern North Carolina and other parts of the country will take part in UNCW Career Day 86 at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Wednesday, October 22, in Hanover Hall Gymnasium. Students, faculty, staff and interested alumni are invited to visit Hanover Hall, view the displays, and talk to representatives of business, industry, the Armed Forces and other governmental agencies.

The purpose of Career Day is "to give students and faculty of all academic disciplines the opportunity to learn about potential employment opportunities, career preparation needs, and employment projections and trends," explained James Braye, associate director of the student development center, career planning and placement.

"While Career Day is of immediate interest to seniors, we hope to attract juniors, sophomores, and even freshmen. Career exploration and information can never be too much or too soon," Braye said. "I can assure you that students will profit from this experience."

Students should attend in their school clothes. "Bring nothing but your career hopes, dreams, aspirations and inquiring mind," he said.

The career planning and placement center, located in room 106 of the University Union, urges students to come by and find out about their other services.

"Last year through the Employment Security Office located here on campus, more than 900 jobs were found for our students and alumni. We have a formalized structure for placement now," said Braye.

"But not only do we help place students into that first job. We have a philosophy that through workshops on resume preparation and interview techniques and other services."

"We try to train students how to fish, we don't give them fish. That way they can continue to eat fish all their lives," Braye said.

The career planning and placement center is organizing UNCW Career Day 86 early in the academic year to coincide with the beginning of the college recruiting season when organizations start visiting the campus to hold job interviews with students.

While a campus-wide Career Day has not been held at UNCW since 1984, Braye said this is actually the eighth event of its kind to be held here. He plans to make it an annual fall event. The Cameron School of Business Administration has held "Business Career Day" in the University Union for the past several years in conjunction with its Business Week held every year in March.

"Response from organizations has been excellent," Braye said. "We had to move Career Day into Hanover Hall to have room for the more than 50 organizations scheduled to bring in their displays. In addition to businesses, industries, several governmental agencies, several graduate and professional schools are sending representatives."

Some new employers will be participating for the first time in a UNCW Career Day. They are Campbell Soup, Pitney Bowes, United Airlines, Russ Berrie from Rhode Island and the Hartford Insurance Company from Hartford, Conn.

Braye pointed out that the Career Day format is different from that of a Job Fair.

A male was apprehended and transported to New Hanover Magistrate's office for possession of a controlled substance Saturday night in the Student Union.

A UNCW officer reported smelling marijuana smoke in the Student Union. The officer then observed the male lighting and inhaling marijuana in a corn cob pipe. The male was attending a dance held in Room 100 in the Union.

Campus Police arrested another male at the dance for possession of a controlled substance. Sgt. Jackie Robinson reported the person having less than one ounce of marijuana.

Officer Bonnie Hamilton issued two citations during the dance Saturday night. One individual was arrested for consuming and possessing an alcoholic beverage while under 21 years of age. Another person was arrested for consuming an alcoholic beverage in a public area.

Police Investigate Felony

Campus Police reported a breaking and entering of several coin operated machines in the Student Union during Fall Break. Unknown persons entered the Student Union by breaking into the building's rear door. Police are still investigating the crime.

Also during Fall break, Campus police arrested a male for driving while impaired. The male was placed in New Hanover County Jail.

Chief Discovers Weapon
Chief Johnson found a model 120, 12 gauge pump shotgun during a fire inspection in Hewlett Hall last week. Johnson noticed the gun lying underneath a student's bed. The owner of the gun was issued a citation by Campus Police and referred to the Assistant Dean of Students.

Bicycle and Decal Larceny Remains Popular

Seven bicycles and four parking decals were stolen since October 6. Stolen bicycles and stolen parking decals are the most occurring crimes reported on campus.

The number of stolen decals reported has decreased since the first of the semester. Chief Joe Johnson reports that many stolen decals are being recovered.

"We know the stolen decal numbers and are looking for them on parked cars," Johnson revealed.

University Police officers acting on an anonymous tip confiscated five marijuana plants on campus Oct. 14. Captain William Dawson and Crime Prevention Officer Regina Dawson are investigating.

The four mature plants and one seedling were discovered approximately 200 meters east of Parking Lot "Q" in a wooded area. The plants were found in three different locations, and the seedling was being cultivated in a flower pot.

Dawson estimated the younger plant was three to four weeks short of maturity. The other plants were mature and ready for harvesting.

The area where the marijuana was found is posted and is not open to the general public. Some classes and athletic teams occasionally use the area, but Dawson said that unauthorized students found in any of the wooded areas would be "informed of their infraction and asked to leave."

Senate Passes Policy

The UNCW Senate heard Danny Long, candidate for New Hanover County Sheriff, as its guest speaker.

Mr. Long spoke on the need to put more deputies on patrol and to improve services provided by the Sheriff's Department.

In other business, SGA treasurer Beth Riffe presented the SGA budget to the Senate as a matter of information to answer any questions that had been asked about SGA spending.

Ms. Riffe said that she wanted to present the budget to the Senate because there had been some questions raised by The Hawke, an underground newspaper that has printed controversial stories concerning the SGA's spending on several occasions.

In a total somersault from the last meeting's voting, the Senate approved the attendance policy authored by Lee King.

Under this policy, four unexcused absences by a member will be grounds for impeachment. King commented that four senators had already missed every Senate meeting thus far this year.

In other business, it was announced that Fire Disco, a local entertainment group, has been banned from appearing on this campus by the University Union Board. The reason cited was that many law violations occur whenever Fire Disco appears.

Four students were arrested during Fire Disco's performance this past weekend.

Clam Chowder Splash

The Montage originators held a fund-raising party, the "Clam Chowder Splash" last Saturday night, Oct. 18 in the courtyard of Ligon B. Flynn's architectural offices on South Front Street.

Mimes, dancers, and jazz musicians entertained potential patrons as well as those working on Montage. This was the last major fund-raising event for Montage, formerly called the St. Thomas Celebration of the Arts. There was good clam chowder, good music and good entertainment in a lovely setting with a full moon that showed up right on cue.

Montage '87 includes many performances and art events, notably the Vienna Boys Choir on Jan. 21, the NC Dance Theater Jan. 24, jazz great Lionel Hampton on Jan. 25 and the N. C. Symphony Jan. 26. Also, Katharina Wolpe, a visiting professor at UNCW will present a recital on Jan. 23.

Oklahoma!

The classic musical "Oklahoma!" will open at Thalian Hall this week. "Oklahoma!" is presented by Opera House Productions and will play Wednesday, Oct. 22 through Sunday, Oct. 26, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and $8 and are available at the Thalian Hall Box Office.

Many Students Depressed

By Melinda Law
Staff Writer

A person's college years are supposed to be the most exciting and fulfilled times of their lives.

These years are also times of questions, doubts, and depression. For seniors, they may fear their new life that is ahead of them. For juniors and sophomores, their doubts may lie in finding a major and sticking with it.

Freshmen live in a new environment and have to adjust to a new way of life. For some of these college students, stress and depression is a part of their everyday lives. What most of us do not understand is how common these fears are.

"The students develop stress from a number of circumstances, which range from academics and career decisions, to relationships, roommates and parental problems. All of these situations add up for the college student and can easily cause depression," said Diane McKinstry, psychologist and Director of the Student Development Center.

A student can be depressed and never ask for help.

There are symptoms of depression that anyone can look for. One of the most obvious symptoms is a student's behavioral change.

They may lose interest in things that they used to enjoy doing. They withdraw from people, become irritable and dissatisfied with almost everything. Another symptom of depression is an individual's feelings about himself.

This person may show depression physically, such as crying, insomnia, changes in eating habits, and fatigue. Professional help is available for anyone who is experiencing these symptoms.

Any UNCW student may seek help at the student health and wellness center and receive counseling.

If the psychologist sees the need for further help, he or she may refer one to another doctor or may prescribe medication dealing specifically with that problem. Diane McKinstry quoted that last year, 10% of the student body received counseling from the health center. 30% of those students were depressed.

If one does not feel that professional psychological counseling is needed, then there are other options available. The leading option is to discuss your problems openly and honestly. Talk to a close friend and one that can be trusted.

Another excellent way of ANNIHILATING stress is to exercise. This relieves frustrations that may be built up inside. Escaping the source of stress is a third option that helps to get a handle on the stress related problem.

By doing this, one avoids any upsetting confrontation that makes one feel uncomfortable and upset. All of these are not solutions, they are just helpful hints to make ones life more pleasurable and hopefully stress-free.

Student depression can be harmful at times if it is not talked about and treated. There are people who care and are willing to give their time and efforts to listen and help.

They just need you to come to them.

English Course

Offered

A course on "English for Speakers of Other Languages" is being offered through the UNCW Office of Special Programs. The course is scheduled for Tuesday and Thursdays, Nov. 4-Dec. 16 from 9:30-11:30 a.m. on the UNCW campus. The $47 fee will be discounted to $40 for registrations received before the October 24 deadline.

Preregistration

Set

Preregistration dates for Spring Semester, 1987, will be Nov. 3-13, 1986. Please remember all outstanding debts to the University must be paid by October 30, 1986, in order to preregister for spring classes.

The party begins.

I can drive when I drink.

2 drinks later.

I can drive when I drink

After 4 drinks.

I can drive when I drink

After 5 drinks.

I can drive when I drink

7 drinks in all.

I can drive when I drink

The more you drink, the more coordination you lose. That's a fact, plain and simple.

It's also a fact that 12 ounces of beer, 5 ounces of wine and 1 1/4 ounces of spirits all have the same alcohol content. And consumed in excess, all can affect you. Still, people drink too much and then go out and expect to handle a car.

When you drink too much, you can't handle a car. You can't even handle a pen.

Contraceptive Use Growing

by Devi Sen and Courtney Sanders
Editor's Note: All methods and effectiveness information was taken from Student Health Service documents and interviews.

Contraception has come out of the closet. It's no longer a half-embarrassed trip to a drugstore late one Friday night. Why?

Pharmacist John Woodard Jr. of Sutton's Drugstore said college students are not as embarrassed as they used to be. Students now are more educated and less willing to contribute to unwanted pregnancy.

Instead, it has become the latest rage in commercial advertising. Not only have the advertisements and billboards for Trojan condoms started to appear across the United States, but they are seen in Rolling Stone magazine as well as cable television's USA network. Locally, Chapel Hill's drugstores have been selling condoms and lubricating jellies in front of the counters. Birth control pills and diaphragms, however, still are sold only through prescription.

The Student Health Service has had a program since 1973 which has dealt with students learning more about contraceptive measures and trying to buy birth control pills.

Betsy Wing, a counselor for Contraceptive Health Education Clinic, said: "What it (CHEC) is, is general background information they (students) need to make a decision on a method. . . It's a way to lay everything out and let them examine their choices in a non-judgmental situation."

Wing said, "It's fairly standard now if a student calls up Student Health and wants to go on the pill. But each student who calls for an appointment is strongly urged to talk to a CHEC counselor and go through the process of finding out about other options."

"We never say there's one better method than another," she said. Since it is a non-judgmental informational session, each student is encouraged to pick a particular form of birth control based on past sexual experiences and preferences. "There's always a chance (of pregnancy) when you're sexually active, but 90 out of every 100 couples will achieve a pregnancy out of a year if they don't use anything," she said.

No form of birth control is 100 percent effective, Wing said, and any of the methods could be a problem for a student due to factors such as the individual student's lifestyle, motivation to use the particular method and amount of support the student receives from a partner.

"We're only seeing a small number of people compared to the actual number of there who need us," she said. The primary reason why most students do not go to Student Health for help was the confidentiality issue, Wing said. Most students are apprehensive that someone would find out they were on birth control and therefore avoid SHS and go to off-campus services, she said.

Of the forms of birth control, the only sure one is abstinence. Using abstinence, there are no worries about unplanned pregnancies or sexually transmitted diseases. However, it can be frustrating.

"Abstinence is a perfectly valid method of birth control," Wing said. "It's a conscious choice not to get involved."

Oral contraceptive pills, otherwise known as "the pill," is another method. If used correctly it is 99.7 percent effective. However, there could be some side effects such as weight gain, nausea and tenderness around the breast. Although SHS keeps no statistics on it, Wing said she thought the majority of female students using birth control used the Pill.

"So many women are looking toward the Pill," Wing said. "Women still feel it (birth control) is their responsibility."

Woodard said the Pill was also the most popular contraceptive because of its convenience and effectiveness. Another method is known as the Intrauterine Device. It is a plastic device inserted into the woman's body which, if checked regularly and replaced every three years, is 95 percent effective. Some problems which may arise from using this method are cuts within the uterus and a pelvic inflammatory disease. The device could result in sterility or a need for a hysterectomy.

A diaphragm, however, is a relatively safe method of birth control. When used correctly, it is 97 percent effective and has no serious side effects. A woman's ability to conceive is not affected. "Girls afraid to take the pill use a diaphragm," Woodard said.

Along the same lines, cervical caps also are 97 percent effective if inserted correctly, but they are more difficult to use than diaphragms. Both methods cannot be used alone. They must be used in conjunction with spermicide.

Another method of birth control is the sponge. It is a relatively new method and therefore, there have been no studies of any long term side effects. Woodard said there was a possibility of toxic shock syndrome. Wing said although SHS tended to be on the cautious side, "there is a lot of conflicting data about the sponge. Actually, it is about 98 percent effective."

Condoms, a form of birth control for males, have an actual effectiveness between 75 and 85 percent. They do, however, help prevent sexually-transmitted diseases and also let males participate in birth control. Wing said condoms should never be used as the lone method of birth control. Condoms which are used in conjunction with foams are said to be 95 percent effective.

Area drugstores, such as Revco, Rite-Aid or Sutton's, do sell these contraceptives. SHS also sells them.

When used in unison, condoms and spermicides and vaginal suppositories are 95% effective in preventing pregnancies.

The human sexuality seminar lasts about one hour and the video is available for showing to any faculty or other organizations interested in viewing it, Ms. Vangelow said.

Women who go to the Health and Wellness Center thinking they're pregnant get a chance to talk to a physician's assistant. During their talk with the physician's assistant, they explain the reasons why they think they are pregnant.

The next step in determining pregnancy is obtaining and testing a sample of the morning's first urine. A hormone that is produced during pregnancy is more concentrated in the first urine of the morning.

Following the urine sample, the results of the test are talked about and a pelvic examination is performed.

If the pregnancy test is positive, all options are discussed. A packet of information about all the options—carrying the baby to full term and keeping the baby or giving him away for adoption, marriage and abortion—and a letter from the campus minister, Bob Hayward, is given to the student, Ms. Vangelow said.

But most girls have already made up their minds when they arrive at the clinic, she said.

Mother's Helper There with a Helping Hand

The Mother's Helper will also provide instructions on breast-feeding, show how to feed, bathe, change diapers, first aid, and provide information on physical, mental and sexual abuse, and child neglect. One of the main goals of Mother's Helper is to prevent problems with child abuse and neglect and problems with drugs and alcohol.

Another major goal of the organization is education.

"We encourage dropouts to go back to school," Mrs. Mason said. The volunteer will work the young woman's school counselor in helping her achieve her goals.

Mother's Helper also has a lending library of books on pregnancy, childbirth and child care.

The volunteer also provides the young woman with easy-to-read pamphlets on pregnancy, childbirth and child care and will go over the material free. A Mother's Helper will usually meet once a week with the young woman she is helping.

A woman can also call up her Mother's Helper anytime to ask a question or to talk, Mrs. Mason said.

Most volunteers who are Mother's Helpers have young children, she said. "The Mother's Helper provides a role model for the new young mother," she said.

Even after the baby is three months old, the Mother's Helper and new mother remain in contact. "After usually 11 months of being together, the two are good friends," Mrs. Mason said.

Mother's Helper has a 24-hour hotline and can be reached at 392-4685.

both the mother and child, as well as items needed for the baby—crib, diapers, toys, etc.,

"Children's clothes are real expensive," Mrs. Mason said. "The average price for an outfit for a baby can exceed over $25, she said.

In order to combat the high price of children's clothes, a Mother's Helper will take the young woman in her care to yard sales where a complete baby outfit can be picked up for as little as $50. The organization also provides a Father's Helper for young men who learn that their girlfriends are pregnant.

"Just counseling is provided to the fathers," Mrs. Mason said. "And we do help the fathers find a job if they need one," she said.

"But most of the men who are involved drop out of the picture within three months of learning about their girlfriends' pregnancy," she said.

The young woman also receives assistance in childbirth by the Mother's Helper.

The volunteer continues to help the young mother for three months after birth, Mrs. Mason said. "During this time the Mother's Helper is real careful in watching for signs of child neglect and abuse," she said.

Career Day Offers Opportunities

"The purpose of Career Day is not for job interviewing nor actual hiring of students," he said. "Rather, visiting employer representatives will be provided a table for displays, posters, and brochures. Visitors walk through, stop at tables which interest them, and obtain information. Important contacts have been made at career days which have led to future recruitment and hiring."

In addition to meeting potential employees, employers benefit from the opportunity to promote their organizations, their products and services. Some employers consider this a prelude to the actual hiring process. Braye said that others visit out of an interest in assisting students to learn more about career options as well as to demonstrate interest in and support for UNCW.

"It is our hope that when these organizations observe our beautiful campus and our well prepared students, they will become regular visitors to our campus recruiting programs and will hire UNCW students," Braye said.

"One hire in an organization may well lead to others," he said, noting that on a recent recruiting visit to UNCW by Bell Laboratories Research from New Jersey, the recruiter raved about two UNCW students hired last year. "They will continue looking for similar employees."

Braye also pointed out that EDS, from Atlanta, GA., Ross Perot's company on which the book and film On Wings of Eagles were based, came here to recruit in September and they will be back in the spring. "EDS has hired a number of UNCW students during the past few years and these employees are performing well."

UNCW Career Day is an all-campus event. Cooperating with career planning and placement are university advancement, student affairs, Sigma Alpha Beta (the honorary business fraternity), the health, physical education and recreation department, and the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

Bryan Asks Students

Check Your Mailbox

The university is trying to get in touch with a number of students who aren't getting the message. This, according to Dr. William Bryan, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, is the result of students failing to check their mailboxes.

Bryan said that many students don't seem to realize that all official mail sent to the students is sent to their mailboxes. Students who fail to check their boxes for long periods of time can miss important messages from the university, such as billing and, most recently, immunization notices.

In the case of billing notices,

Bryan said if the student doesn't respond to the university, he or she can't preregister for the next semester.

More important are the immunization notices. About 80 students who have not responded to the university's request for their immunization records, are in danger of being administratively withdrawn.

Dr. Bryan believes that some of those 80 people simply haven't looked in their boxes and don't know that the university is trying to reach them.

This process takes place in the liver, and it is virtually impossible to speed up. Eating before or during drinking can help decrease the effects on the system. However, total absorption, the amount of alcohol taken into the system, remains the same.

What Makes An Alcoholic?

Many people claim that since they only drink beer or wine, they cannot become alcoholics. This has been proven to be untrue - most students on college campuses who develop drinking problems drink more non-fortified beverages than liquor.

There are numerous signs that someone may be an alcoholic. These may or may not apply to the individual in question, but most common are the need to have a drink (or to get drunk) and becoming defensive when confronted with the possibility of a drinking problem. Recognizing these signs is important in preventing alcohol abuse.

Accountancy Course Offered

WILMINGTON—Individual attention, quality instruction, and timely topics are being stressed in two courses being offered for certified public accountants by the department of accountancy and the Office of Special Programs at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Pat Kelley, a partner in the Athens, Georgia CPA firm of James W. Kelley and Associates, will teach "Individual Income Tax Returns" and "Corporate Income Tax Returns." These both will be pretty basic courses and in light of the new tax reform law I will incorporate many of the revisions for planning purposes," explained Kelley. "Both are targeted to people from entry level on up who are looking for an understanding of just basics and/or felt they need to update their skills in view of the 86 tax reform act."

Kelley holds a master of accounting in taxation from the University of Georgia, serves on the AICPA's national faculty and has taught accounting and tax courses nationwide.

The individual tax return workshop is scheduled for Monday, November 24 from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Fee is $115 and registration deadline has been extended to November 17. Enrollment is limited to allow time for individual attention. Topics will include filing status, personal and dependency exemptions, income items, sales and exchanges of property, vacation homes, hobby losses, installment sales and alimony and child support. The corporate tax workshop, to run on Friday, December 19 from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on the UNCW campus, will focus on the principles of corporate income taxation and preparing corporate tax returns with minimal supervision. Major topics include differences between corporate financial and income tax accounting, preparation of schedule M-1 including workpaper techniques, capital gains and losses, depreciation and amortization, investment credit and recapture. Fee is $115 and registration deadline is December 12. Enrollment is limited.

Each course also offers 8 units of Continuing Professional Education credits. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs (919) 395-3195.

THE SEAHAWK

The Final Word

After weeks of being sieged by telephone calls, anonymous letters (which we don't print) and being questioned repeatedly in classes, we of the Seahawk would like to make one statement, and one statement alone, concerning the underground newspaper The Hawke.

The Hawke is the product of the disgruntled former editor of the Seahawk newspaper, Ms. Lynn Franklin, whose family has banded together in an attempt to discredit the Seahawk, the Student Government Association, and anyone else on this campus who doesn't agree with them.

You may ask what evidence we have of this. The Hampstead post office box used as an address is in the name of Mona Franklin, sister of the former editor and a former Seahawk staffer. Bill Franklin, father of the former Seahawk staff members, is a distributor and representative of the Hawke.

The editor of the Hawke, who goes by the name of Emille Hunter, looked an awful lot like Lynn's mother, that from someone who has known the family for years and informed me of this last week as we watched the story done by WECH Channel 6.

A full back page advertisement which the Seahawk has a contract to run each week disappeared one Friday and turned up in that week's edition of the Hawke. An employee of Kroger's who wished to remain unidentified told a Seahawk staffer that the same young lady who got the ad all last year had picked it up, saying that she was with the campus newspaper.

The Hawke's syndicated columnist, Bill Carter, does not exist, according to the Los Angeles Times Syndicate which keeps up with such things. True, he may be a freelance writer, not associated with any syndicate, but that is highly unlikely.

The Hawke has most recently attacked the Chancellor, William Wagoner; Susie Goodrum and Allen Dudley have grown almost callous to the weekly attacks on them - all made in the name of slander by the Hawke.

And the list goes on. In an aforementioned television interview, Ms. Franklin said that while the Hawke had been called a "National Enquirer" type of newspaper, she thought the students preferred that sort of thing to what had been published in the past.

Apparently, WECH failed to present the Hawke in the light they wanted to be shown in, so now they claim conspiracy.

This past week's edition of the Hawke claimed that WECH Channel 6 was conspiring with the "free" press on campus and the SGA to shut down the only "free" press on campus.

This is interesting to know, since The Hawke contacted WECH to see about going on the air and telling the world what a lousy newspaper the Seahawk is. The person going by the name of Emille Hunter was interviewed on camera, but she would only appear in silhouette.

No member of the Seahawk staff hid their identity in any way from the camera. We have nothing to hide.

The Hawke claims to be a Campus Newspaper, and an "Independent Voice of the Students", but none of the people who sign their names as staff writers are students of this University, according to the admissions office, who really should know if these people exist.

The only two exceptions to this rule are Danielle Woods and Lynn Franklin, who were the only other applicants for the job as editor of the Seahawk newspaper this year. Neither was appointed.

People have been asking us what we plan to do about the false allegations made against this staff, and you are reading the answer right now. This column. We are not prepared to comment further at this point in time.

The Seahawk has absolutely no quarrel with competition - real, honest competition, as in another newspaper on campus. Two other schools in the UNC system have several newspapers.

A newspaper is one thing - its sources can be verified, its personnel are ethical, and it is not allowed to be the tool of any part of a university which may censor or corrupt it.

Nor is a real newspaper allowed to be the tool of an angry, disgruntled person who averaged over one thousand dollars a month from being editor of the Seahawk and who is unhappy at losing her job.

You will undoubtedly see a scathing, firebreathing issue of the Hawke in the next few days, saying that the Seahawk, the SGA, the Advancement Office, Chancellor Wagoner, and the CIA have all been plotting against the members of the Hawke staff, and that the Seahawk staff is rife with corruption, conspiracy, and other such carry-ons. But that's okay.

You, our readers, are intelligent enough to see the difference between a newspaper and the vehicle used by an angry young lady in an attempt to get revenge on anyone she thinks has done her wrong.

"The Pox Of the Eighties"

At the end of 1985, approximately 15,000 Americans were afflicted by the deadly disease AIDS.

During the next few years the spread of AIDS is expected to increase to tens of thousands of people in the United States alone.

AIDS is no longer the dreaded disease of homosexuals, drug users, hemophiliacs and the unlucky few.

AIDS is a disease that can strike anyone who does not take safety precautions before sexual activity.

Naturally, a killer disease that can strike anyone has instilled a lot of fear into people.

A chance is being offered on Oct. 30-31 to learn more about AIDS. Richard P. Keeling, Director of Student Health at the University of Virginia, will be speaking to various groups on campus about AIDS.

Many students, though, still won't respond to this opportunity. This is beyond a tragedy - this is a matter of life and death for more than "just a few queers and dopers".

AIDS is creeping into heterosexual society; the "Pox of the Eighties", as the London Times so coarsely put it, is slowly becoming the worst fear of a society that has only recently become unshamed of their sexuality.

Sexual activity is not the problem. A lack of clean sexual practices, general hygiene and reasonable adult caution are the problems.

AIDS knows no boundaries, has no respect for popularity or social status or wealth. The disease doesn't care why you should not contract it, nor does it really care.

Nor is there sight of a cure for several years. That is why we should fear "The Pox of the Eighties."

First Some Students...

Dear Editor,

In response to your editorial of Sept. 24, we, friends of Stephen Praisner, object to the tactless nature of the statement "the only ones who will remember Stephen six months from now will be those who can make a dollar from his unfortunate death." It is obvious that authors of this editorial never knew Stephen, and has no idea of the impact of Stephen's death on those who were close to him. While it is true that we "will slowly slip back into a normal routine," there are moments in life that cannot or will not be forgotten. Our memories of Stephen will far outlast those whose only interest in Stephen is making money.

We feel that an apology is in order for the tastelessness and insensitivity of this editorial. We can only hope that future editorials in the students' newspaper are more sensitive to the needs of the students.

Eric McDonnell, Sharon Rock, Dan Schweitzer

When a newspaper prints the story of a death, it is necessary that the paper be cold and seemingly callous. That is the only way facts can be put forth in an objective manner.

If the three signers of the above letter would care to read on, they would see the last line of this editorial, except for his family. Standard editorial style refers only to a person's immediate relatives, otherwise it would be necessary to say a person is missed by his instructors, roommates, friends, neighbors, bus driver, etc.

And Now Some Professors

You are correct in the assumption that the editor did not know Stephen. However, we believe that while Stephen wouldn't want to be forgotten, neither would he want his friends, the people he loved, or anyone else to mourn forever.

A recent issue of the UNCW Seahawk carried on its Op-Ed page an article by Richard Viguerie which purported to challenge the scientific evidence supporting the theory of organic evolution. While we certainly respect (and even applaud) the courage of the editorial staff for choosing to run a potentially controversial piece, we nonetheless must object to the manner in which the article appeared and the failure to exercise accepted journalistic responsibility.

Who is Richard Viguerie? What is the source of this article? Why did the editors choose to run it? Did the editors attempt to verify the scientific accuracy of the article? Were alternative viewpoints solicited? Responsible editors provide their readers with answers to these kinds of questions. The Seahawk editors did not.

As it turns out, Richard Viguerie is an arch-conservative ideologue (and former Reagan fundraiser), who has made a profession of pushing right-wing causes. His repertoire ranges from opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment to support of prayer in public schools. He is qualified by training or experience to comment on the validity of evolutionary theory? Hardly. Did the editors investigate Viguerie's qualifications? Did they ask themselves why a political operative such as Viguerie might be inclined to pen such an article? Perhaps the editors should re-read Viguerie's concluding paragraph, for it is here that we gain some insight into his hidden agenda. He tells us of a Greenville (Tennessee) judge who is presiding over a case brought by seven families who are suing "to stop the state from indoctrinating their children with Darwin's theory of evolution to the exclusion of other ideas about the origin of life." AH! It appears that Viguerie is arguing for the so-called "equal time" doctrine by which "creation scientists" hope to force school teachers to include the biblical account of creation in their science classes.

Hmm! Is it possible that Viguerie isn't entirely objective? If not, do the editors have a responsibility, and we hope they will exercise it in the future.

Perhaps the Biology department is less than objective in their writing? If the good doctors had cared to look to the right of that story, they would have seen that the Seahawk disclaims any and all columns that are signed by the author. The only exceptions to this rule are those on the editorial page which are just that - the editorial statement of this newspaper.

In the future it might behoove the Biology Department to come down off of their pedestal and contact the Seahawk staff before they go a-tailing to the advisor. — Ed.

Rainbow's End

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

A CITY ON THE EDGE OF FOREVER

The Cydonia region on Mars may play host to what may be the most extraordinary feature in the solar system.

The twin Viking Orbiters had a dual mission in 1976. The two orbiters were to locate safe touchdown sites for the two Viking Landers and then proceed with photographing the entire Martian surface.

During the initial and quite intensive reconnaissance of the Martian surface by the first of the Viking Orbiters to reach Mars, the orbiter took what is being dubbed by some as the "discovery frame."

Within the "discovery frame" is a mile-long representation of a human face: the so-called "Face on Mars."

The frame of the "Face on Mars" was taken on the late Martian summer afternoon (approximately 6:00 p.m. "local" time) on July 25, 1976, when the sun was low in the northwestern sky - only about 10 degrees above the Martian horizon.

All the shadows in the "discovery frame" are long. The "Face on Mars" could have been a trick of light and shadow.

Since no further picture of the "Face on Mars" could be found in the photographic data relayed from the Viking Orbiters, the face was put aside as a product of an overactive imagination.

At least until 1979. In 1979, two computer specialists rediscovered the image of the "Face on Mars" in NASA's photo files and discovered a second photo of the face taken 35 days later and when the sun was at a much higher angle of 30 degrees.

Saying the "Face on Mars" was a trick of light and shadow got harder to do.

The greatest problem in accepting the "Face on Mars" as the first bona-fide sign of an extra-terrestrial civilization is that the face bears a close resemblance to a human face.

The search is on for evidence of an extra-terrestrial civilization by searching the radio wave-lengths of the galaxy. The "Face on Mars" does not fit in with the stereotype of non-human aliens.

Earth, not Mars, is where we think explorers from another solar system would go.

And the "Face on Mars" is not alone. A city is supposed to be nearby the "Face on Mars."

In the exact center of the city on the Cydonia region supposedly lies a curious set of four small-five sided pyramids. The four pyramids are set parallel to each at 90 degree angles. A fifth pyramid lies exactly in the center of the grouping of the four pyramids.

A sign of an forgotten extra-terrestrial city?

Or perhaps, and more likely, the sign of natural geologic and atmospheric forces on Mars.

The answer will probably be discovered with the Mars Geologic Mission in the 1990's. The new orbiter will most likely be directed to examine the Cydonia region in detail and another look at the so-called Martian face and city.

Until then, the lost cities of Mars will continue stand forever on the edge of human imagination.

Tongue in Cheek

With Jefferson Weaver

Most people have no idea about how complicated it is to put together a newspaper. All they ever see is the finished product, or maybe an occasional reporter and/or photographer with a bound look on his or her face as they hunt for a story about the Benevolent Kingdom, Rasmus, Stringer's Voter's League and Friday Night Video Club.

You see, this paper does not just come together; nor does it just sort of print itself.

Let me explain how this works. The reporter covers a story, brings his or her notes in, types it up, and then gives it to the typesetter. These wonderful young ladies then enter the story into the computers, whom we affectionately call Lisa, Mac 1, and Mac 2.

Which ever editor the story applies to the sits down, reads, revises, or ditches the story, and sends the story from the little Macintoshes through Lisa into Fred. Fred prints the story in set columns like you see on the page. Fred is a really guy to have around. We love Fred. Without Fred we could not exist.

A word about Fred. Fred was originally named Laserwriter, because that is what Fred is. However, Lisa started getting lonely, being cooped up in that boring Seahawk office all night long, with no one to talk to except this guy in a tan plastic suit whose name is Laserwriter.

Ladies, if a guy walked up to you in a bar and said, "Hi, my name is Laserwriter" how long would it take you to notice he didn't exist? At that time, Lisa and the little Macs did not speak the same language. The two smaller computers would chatter on and on all night, and Lisa would sigh and settle down for another lonely night. And then one day, Lisa's life changed forever.

One of our computer wizards was playing with the machines during that dry period between Tuesday and Wednesday when the newspapers are being delivered. He suddenly found a file named "Laserwriter Name", opened it, and Lisa's life was what we call the first time she was a little megalomaniac. A prompt on the screen read "What do you want to name the Laserwriter?"

The wizard cocked his peaked star and moon hat to one side, and dropped into deep thought. What to name the Laserwriter?

A pencil fell from his perch over his ear and hit three keys - "FRE".

Wiz touched "D", and Lisa was swept off her feet.

Lisa and Fred hit it off immediately. For the first time since he was installed, Lisa had someone she could talk to, communicate with, take to picnics.

Like any other couple, Lisa and Fred do have their own problems. Those squabbles always take place right at press time, after everyone is tired and sweaty and just wants to shut down and say good night.

That is when things get complicated.

Lisa won't speak to Fred. Fred won't speak to Lisa. The little Macs get tired and start crying because they're hungry and want to go to bed. We have to start telling Fred what Lisa said to him and vice versa. For instance.

FRED: You tell her she can go print with an Imagewriter for all I care.

Editor: Fred says that you can print with the Imagewriter.
LISA: You tell him that I don't even speak the same language as that saved off son of a bye. If Fred would just do Old English lettering, then I would have no argument with him.

Editor: Lisa says that -
FRED: I heard what she said! Lisa, I thought you didn't like Old English.

LISA: But Fred, I've told you over and over that I love Old English lettering!

FRED: Lisa!
LISA: Fred!

And once again the happy couple go back to work, and everyone lives happily ever after.

Of course, I forgot about another very important member of the office family.

She isn't as fancy or versatile as Lisa, and her printing isn't as neat and precise. There are times, though, when she is the only functioning machine in the office.

Her name is Sweetheart, and she is a Remington Rand electric typewriter.

After Reagan - Then What?

Richard Viguerie Syndicated Columnist

WASHINGTON, VIRGINIA—Even the Daniloff affair has a silver lining.

True, it was the worst foreign policy defeat ever suffered by President Reagan (except perhaps for the vote on South Africa sanctions). But it may have helped the conservative cause in the long run, by encouraging Republican presidential candidates to distance themselves from George Shultz and his State Department—and, in a sense, from Ronald Reagan himself.

That is no slur against the President. After eight years of any president, the American people characteristically want something, and someone, new. And by '88 they most assuredly will want something different from soft-on-the-Soviets policies that they have rejected in three consecutive presidential campaigns.

As the next election approaches, Republican candidates will be eager to show themselves to be people of new ideas, unbound by mistakes of the past and independent from President Reagan (no matter how high his popularity). The Daniloff deal, so transparent and so fundamentally disturbing, gives them an opening, because it runs counter to everything that Ronald Reagan has stood for. They can attack the Daniloff/Zakharov swap, the snap summit, and the arms control agreements that follow. . . and they can take the position of being more Reaganite than Reagan.

If that sounds far-fetched, consider two lessons that presidential candidates should know by heart:

1) Back in 1968, Vice President Hubert Humphrey privately opposed much of President Johnson's policy on Vietnam. Yet he was bound to LBJ by personal loyalty, which was, to Johnson, the highest value. For months — even after he was himself nominated for President — Humphrey was unwilling to publicly separate himself from Johnson. Johnson's unpopularity had forced him to abandon his plans to run for reelection, and it threatened to scuttle Humphrey's hopes as well. In some polls Humphrey ran third, behind Richard Nixon and George Wallace.

Then, in a speech in Salt Lake City, Humphrey broke with Johnson and formulated his own policy on Vietnam. He ended the campaign in a virtual dead heat with Nixon. Had he split from LBJ earlier, he might very well have won.

2) In 1976, Ronald Reagan challenged the incumbent President, Gerald Ford. Reagan declined to attack Ford, citing the so-called Eleventh Commandment ("Thou shalt not speak ill of a fellow Republican"). As a result, he lost primaries in New Hampshire and Florida that he had been expected to win, and by the time the North Carolina primary approached, he was on the verge of dropping out of the race.

Then his strategy shifted. He went "on the tube," slashing away at détente, at U.S. military weakness, at the planned giveaway of the Panama Canal. . . and especially at Ford's Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger. Reagan won North Carolina and came within an eyelash of beating Ford for the nomination. Had he attacked Ford and Kissinger earlier, he probably would have won.

Lesson One is: You must prove that you are your own man. Lesson Two is: You don't unseat an incumbent or their apparent without attacking the policies he supports.

The race for the '88 GOP nomination boils down to George Bush versus Everybody Else. But Bush's claim on the nomination is based almost entirely on the personal loyalty he has shown Ronald Reagan. As far as the public understands, the Vice President jumps when the President says jump. Witness his performance as a Reagan cheerleader during the 1984 campaign: there was absolutely no sign of deviation between him and his boss.

Bush is caught in a trap. If he moves away from the President, he threatens the one attribute that makes him the frontrunner. If he remains slavishly loyal, he is vulnerable to fire from other candidates who can tie him to mistakes of the Ford/Kissinger/Shultz wing of the GOP.

My prediction is that conservatives will become increasingly critical of the weakness they perceive in the Administration's foreign policy. They have given up trying to explain why Ronald Reagan, of all people, would succumb to the lure of détente, though theories range from the President's over-reliance on Shultz to Nancy's alleged dream of a Nobel Peace Prize for her husband. They have stopped agonizing over their disappointment, and they have begun to act independent of the White House and the State Department on issues ranging from the ABM treaty and SALT to Strategic Defense ("Star Wars").

When Jack Kemp, Jeane Kirkpatrick and other conservatives distanced themselves from the Daniloff mess, it wasn't just backseat grumbling. It was an important stage in the battle for succession, and the beginning of the post-Reagan era.

Stillpoint

How critically important it is that we develop our capacity to be self-reflective. Being able to mentally stand back and look at ourselves and the way we operate our lives day by day is the best thing we have to be able to improve our lives.

So many of us seem to live a kind of stimulus/response lives. We are bombarded by stimuli from every angle — T.V., our friends and the activities they are pushing, our classwork, our own personal relationships and on and on. So much of the time we simply react to whatever comes into our field of perception and spend our whole lives day by day simply dealing with what is at hand. In other words, it is everything outside of us—professors, friends, society—that sets our agenda. The result is that when either wind up being frantically busy or simply freeze because we "can't do it." How often have we heard ourselves say "I'm so busy" and then reel off a list of meetings and responsibilities and tasks that fill up every waking moment of our day and many other moments when we would rather be sleeping.

If we are ever going to find any deep satisfaction in our lives, if we are ever going to know anything with peace within, then we must become more and more self-reflective. We need to look at ourselves and how it is that we live each day and what it is that we do and reflect on what those activities tell us that our values really are. We must reflect on our worries and our anxieties in order to discover what it is that we deeply seem to fear. We need to ask ourselves some significant questions like: "What do I really need for life to feel good to me?" "What kind of activities/relationships do I really find a deep sense of satisfaction?" "What do I believe in?" Perhaps the question with which we need to begin is simply, "What am I doing?" and, "What am I getting out of what I am doing?"

Questions such as the above will help us to stand back from ourselves and begin to determine that the satisfactions that exist and where they are rooted. Such awareness is the key to change.

If you were to reflect on the people in your world whom you deeply admire, I bet that you would discover that they operate out of the deeply internalized focus of control and set of values that they work intentionally to act out of.

No one says it's easy or happens quickly. Reflection often leads to the desire for change which leads to real struggles. We often find ourselves having to give up the known and familiar and safe for the unknown and risky and unsettled. I think that the possibilities that come from a reflective life are incredibly rich and worth almost any kind of risk.

Are you very, very busy? Perhaps that business is the way you hide from having to deal with yourself. Think about it. Stakes are high. The resources to help you begin or continue to look reflectively within yourselves are all around you on this campus and this community. Go, go, go, or think, reflect, decide, and act. The choice is yours. You're already making it.

Student Leaning to the Right

OVERLIN, OH.—The nation's college students are more conservative in their attitudes about a wide range of subjects than the generation which preceded them, according to the most penetrating survey of college student attitudes ever undertaken.

Student Watch '86, conducted by Simmons Market Research Bureau for the College Stores Research & Educational Foundation, provided for the first time an in-depth look at a separate and important force in America's social/political/economic picture—12.5 million students with over $20 billion in discretionary annual spending.

The Foundation that funded the $250,000 survey is the research arm of the National Association of College Stores, a trade association with more than 2,700 college store members and 1,000 associate members across the U.S., Canada and other countries.

Based on responses from 4,349 randomly selected students who answered a 29-page questionnaire, this picture of general attitudes emerged from America's college and university campuses:

Sixty-nine percent of the students said religion was important to varying degrees in their lives, and 26% said they attended religious services at least once a week; 51% attend at least once a month.

The survey also provided an insight into financial habits of students, including the fact that 48% live off campus, and in effect run households.

Asked about tobacco use, 56% believe that cigarettes are harmful and 48% indicated they would not even date someone who smokes.

On drugs, 84% think cocaine is harmful and 62% believe marijuana use is also unwise, but only 10% feel that way about alcohol.

On other topics, 73% favor the death penalty, and 69% think abortion should be legal.

Respondents expressed their political views and alignment; 37% considered themselves Republicans, 31% independents, and only 28% listed themselves as Democrats.

Doctors, scientists, and professors are highly respected by students. But reporters, government workers, and politicians had better mind their "public image," because 60%, 47%, and 70%, respectively, of students had little or no trust in these professions.

Fifty percent of the respondents get more than half of their discretionary income from their own earnings, and 58% of those said they earned over $2,000 last year, while 25% earned over $5,000.

When it comes to discretionary spending, 61% said they had $100 per month or more to spend. Nineteen percent in that group has between $150-249 and another 19% spend $250 or more.

Largest dollar expenditures by students during the school year were at the college store, with a median of $248.61.

Ninety-six percent said they spent more money on clothing during the past school year than on any other category, with a median expenditure of $187.40. Four percent of all discretionary income was spent on health and beauty aids.

In other survey highlights, 56% have and use bank credit cards, 41% have borrowed money to attend college, and 86% have savings accounts. College students are owners of high-priced items as well: Sixteen percent have a new car, 39% purchased a used car; 78% own a television set, 66% a stereo system; 36% a 35mm camera and 17% a computer.

ROTC Hosts Drill Meet

The First Annual Southeastern North Carolina ROTC Drill Meet took place Saturday Oct. 18 beside Hanner Gymnasium. The event was hosted by the UNCW Seahawk Battalion (ROTC). This was the first time the event had schools from other than the Wilmington area in its four year history. Laney, Hoggard, and

New Hanover Memorial High Schools were represented, as well as Pender and West Brunswick schools. The events were judged by members of the New Hanover County Retired Officers Association. Categories included Squad and Platoon Drill with and without weapons, and Color Guard Drill.

A squad consists of 7-15 people and four squads make up a platoon. Laney High School won the overall competition with Hoggard coming in second. The First Place trophy is rotated every year, with the winning team keeping the cup at their respective school until the next meet.

NEW FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM FOR 1987-88 ACADEMIC YEAR

The National Wildlife Federation (NWF) is pleased to announce changes in the Environmental Conservation Fellowship Program for the 1987-88 academic year. NWF has supported over 700 graduate students through its Fellowship Program since 1957. We are pleased to be able to continue this program of support with a number of significant changes in the program. The program will continue to be a source of support to students but the focus of the research funding will be concentrated on the continuing information needs of NWF.

In the past, NWF has received and reviewed hundreds of proposed graduate studies each year in order to select 15 to 20 topics of some direct relevance to its programs. The projects funded as a result of this process rarely provided research information of direct and demonstrable value to NWF conservation programs nor has NWF been able to provide adequate financial support to the student. The new program addresses these concerns by increasing the average size of the Fellowships up to $10,000 per annum and by seeking graduate student research proposals in response to specific topics identified by NWF.

Topics for which Fellowships will be awarded for the 1987-88 academic year include the following:

Impacts of road building on public lands on wildlife species. The proposal should address habitat loss, increased accessibility of remote areas to people, and increased vulnerability of wildlife species as a result of the road building.

Review of impacts of development of riparian areas on wildlife species diversity.

Determination of economic values of wetlands for various functions and/or products in one or more of the following categories:

- Production of coastal fisheries
- Production of inland fisheries
- Flood reduction/control value of prairie wetlands
- Groundwater recharge values of playa lakes
- Values of different wetland types for recreation.

Review and analysis of mitigation and natural resource damage assessment standards and techniques now in use by state resource agencies of the United States.

Development of techniques to monitor pesticide contamination of resident and migratory wildlife.

Evaluation of methods and materials for in-service training for elementary and secondary teachers to teach environmental education. This proposal should compare teacher workshops to self-tutorial videos and direct mail distribution of environmental education materials as alternative methods of providing in-service training.

Evaluation of wildlife benefits of the Food Security Act (Farm Bill) of 1985. This study should look in particular at the conservation reserve, swampbuster, and sodbuster provisions of the Act.

Development of model legislation, land use plans, or zoning regulations to preserve wildlife habitat at the local (community) government level. A series of case study analyses of existing successful programs should be included in this study.

Review of cumulative impacts of small hydropower licensing proposals on fish and wildlife values. At present Federal Energy Regulatory Commission permits are issued or considered without an investigation of accumulated impacts to be expected from an array of such projects in a single drainage or river system.

Deadline: Dec. 15, 1986.

Jeeter Commissioned

Lt. Col. Ronald Martin commissioned Phoebe Ann Jeeter as a second lieutenant in the United States Army at 1:00 p.m., Oct. 8th in the University's ROTC office. Jeeter became a 2nd Lt. by attending ROTC Advanced camp in Fort Bragg this past summer where she completed extensive officer training. A ROTC cadet must pass the required military courses to be eligible to attend this Advanced Camp.

Twenty or more people observed this first commissioning exercise since UNCW ROTC acquired host status. Before acquiring host status, Campbell University was the headquarters for UNCW's ROTC program.

Stray Dog Needs Your Help

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

The search is on to catch a stray dog on campus and to give it a good home.

Since the beginning of September, a mostly white, medium-long haired sheep dog with brown and black splotches has been making the rounds of the UNCW campus, said Mrs. Jade Jones, who leading the search to catch the stray dog.

In her quest to catch the stray dog, Mrs. Jones has been coming over to campus regularly in the hopes of coaxing the dog over to her.

"I haven't been able to coax him over to me and the dog backs away from students who hold out their hands to him," Mrs. Jones said. "I believe he was abused," she said.

In addition to trying to coax the dog over to her, Mrs. Jones has been leaving food for him.

"He was sleeping on a sandy lot on campus every night," Mrs. Jones said.

Once she catches the dog, Mrs. Jones wants to give him a good home. "I have six dogs already, so I can't take him in," she said.

"The [Wilmington] Humane Society said that if the dog can be caught, they will find it a good home," she said.

Since Mrs. Jones has met with no success in trying to capture the dog, she is offering a reward of $20.00 to the person — anyone on campus — to the person who captures the dog.

Mrs. Jones's phone number is 791-4824.

Once the dog is captured, Mrs. Jones will inform the Wilmington Humane Society, so he can be picked up and to the process in finding him a home can begin.

But time is running out, Mrs. Jones cautions. "The weather is getting colder," she said.

"We've got to get the dog before it turns to much colder," she said.

The dog has been spotted sleeping in the northwest corner of Trask Coliseum.

Servetnick Moving to Massachusetts

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Ellen Servetnick, Assistant Director of the University Union for Student Activities, resigned as of Oct. 17, to accept a position in Framingham, Mass. She will be the Assistant Director of D. Justin McCarthy College Center at Framingham State College, where she will direct the student activity program there.

Ms. Servetnick says she has enjoyed her position here working with the University Program Board and all student clubs and organizations on campus. She has been the liaison from student affairs to student government as well as advisor to fraternities, sororities and all committees relevant to her position.

"I enjoy student contact and watching organizations grow and prosper...making a positive contribution to campus life," she says.

Her new job, she says, will be a challenge but an easy transition since she has worked with some of the people at Framingham State before.

She will get a chance to expand on her professional experience and opportunity to grow as a professional.

Ms. Servetnick described UNCW as an exciting place to work and said she will miss the students.

"They made me feel a part of the campus and a part of the students," she said. She added that she would miss her staff also, for whom she had warm praise.

"I will miss best the Greek organization," said Ms. Servetnick. "Going Greek on this campus is becoming the fashionable thing to do," she continues.

She gives much credit to UNCW's Greeks for developing good programs on campus.

When asked what she liked best about her job she said she most enjoyed the opportunity to develop a program in student activities and helping students to learn outside the classroom.

Ms. Servetnick said that she has enjoyed Wilmington.

"I'll miss them," she said. "Wilmington people are so warm and friendly."

She feels she was lucky to discover Wilmington at this stage because the city will grow and change in the future.

"But I am excited about being in a city again—or on the edge of one," she said, referring to Boston.

Ms. Servetnick has relatives in the Framingham area and so will feel somewhat at home there.

National Research Announces Grants

The National Research Council announces the 1987 Resident, Cooperative, and Postdoctoral Research Associateship Programs for research in the sciences and engineering to be conducted in behalf of 26 federal agencies or research institutions, whose laboratories are located throughout the United States. The programs provide Ph.D. scientists and engineers of unusual promise and ability with opportunities to perform research on problems largely of their own choosing yet compatible with the research interests of the supporting laboratory. Initiated in 1954, the Associateship Programs have contributed to the career development of over 4,000 scientists ranging from recent Ph.D. recipients to distinguished senior scientists.

Approximately 450 new full-time Associateships will be awarded on a competitive basis in 1987 for research in: chemistry, earth and atmospheric sciences; engineering and applied sciences; biological, health, behavioral sciences and biotechnology; mathematics; space and planetary sciences; and physics. Most of the programs are open to both U.S. and non-U.S. nationals, and to both recent Ph.D. degree recipients and senior investigators.

Awards are made for one or two years' senior applicants who have held the doctorate at least five years may request shorter tenure. Stipends for the 1987 program year will begin at $26,350 a year for recent Ph.D.s and be appropriately higher for senior Associates. A stipend supplement approximately $5,000 may be available to regular (not senior) awardees holding recognized doctoral degrees in those disciplines wherein the number of degrees conferred by US graduate schools is significantly below the current demand. In the 1986 program year these areas have been engineering, computer science, and space-related biomedical science.

Reimbursement is provided for allowable relocation costs and for limited professional travel during tenure. The host laboratory provides the Associate with programmatic assistance including facilities, support services, necessary equipment, and travel necessary for the conduct of the approved research program.

Applications to the National Research Council must be postmarked no later than January 15, 1987 (December 15 for NASA), April 15 and August 15, 1987. Initial awards will be announced in March and April (July and November for the two later competitions) followed by awards to alternates later.

Information on specific research opportunities and federal laboratories, as well as application materials, may be obtained from the Associateship Programs, Office of Scientific and Engineering Personnel, JH 608-DI, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418, (202) 334-2760

CAMPUS CAPSULE

The class will run on Thursdays, October 23 - November 14 from 7:30 - 9:00 p.m. on the UNCW campus. Fee is $13 and registration deadline is October 20. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Sunday, October 19, 1986, at 2:30 p.m., Wilmington Port Manager Phillip Jones will present a slide/lecture program, free of cost, on the North Carolina State Port at Wilmington.

Jones will provide a historical overview of the Wilmington port and a review of current operations. He will include in his discussion future projections for imports and exports, trade zones and containerized shipping. Jones will be available for questions following his presentation.

Jones has managed the North Carolina State Ports Authority in Wilmington for five years. He was formerly associated with port operations in Charleston, S.C.

WILMINGTON—The registration deadline for "French for Travelers" has been extended to October 20. The class, offered by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs, will cover the basics of the French language. Instructor is Posie Ewart.

The class will run on Mondays and Thursdays, October 27 - December 4 from 7:30-9:30 p.m. in Room 106, Hoggard Hall. The $40 fee will be discounted to $33 for registration prior to the deadline. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Parents and teachers of pre-schoolers can learn new, creative and educational activities to share with them through a course entitled, "Enrichment for Your Pre-Schooler," being offered through UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs. Instructor Sybil Thearling will explore inexpensive and stimulating projects including paper uses, pin wheels, block painting, mosaics, storytelling, helicopters, crayon with ink and card marking.

WILMINGTON—Garland and mistletoe, Christmas trees and holiday aromas are all part of a holiday tour of historic New Bern, offered through UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

The one-day excursion on Saturday, December 13 will be highlighted by a tour of 10 historic riverfront homes and churches and a visit to Tryon Palace, resplendent in authentic holiday decor.

Dr. Alan Watson, UNCW history professor, will prepare participants for the trip with an introductory study class on December 9 from 7:30-8:45 p.m. in Room 104, Morton Hall.

Included in the $52 fee is the preparatory class, transportation on a modern, fully-equipped bus and all activities and events, except meals. Buses will leave Wilmington at 8:00 a.m. and return by 9:30 p.m.

Registration deadline is November 21. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

A slide lecture entitled "The Art of Early Greece" will be presented at St. John's Museum of Art on Friday morning, October 24, at 11 a.m. by Wilmington painter Claude Howell. This is the second lecture in the Museum's art history series entitled "Art of the Ancient World". Lectures are held in St. John's Hughes Gallery at 114 Orange St.

For further information, contact the Education Department at 763-0281.

A 10 week course in Feature and Research Writing will be offered through the Community Arts Center. This "write to sell" course emphasizes interview techniques, research skills and development of interesting people and controversial topics.

The instructor, Marjorie Megivern, is currently the Associate Editor of The Brunswick Beacon Newspaper and recently co-authored the book "Portraits of Faith". She also has taught Creative Writing at Cape Fear Tech.

The course begins Wednesday, Oct. 15 and will be held on consecutive Wednesdays for 10 weeks thru Dec. 17. Evening hours are from 8-9 p.m. Cost is $30.00. For more information call the Community Arts Center 2nd and Orange St. at 341-7860.

Two literary contests are being held now: the University Poetry Contest and the University Short Story Contest.

Contestants may submit up to three poems to the poetry contest and one short story to the short story contest.

The deadline for both is Monday, Oct. 27 at 5 p.m. Submissions should be placed in Professor Charles Fort's mailbox in the English Dept., Morton Hall.

Attention — Seahawk Rowing Club forming for males and females. First meeting will be held at 5:00 p.m. in University Union Room 207. For more information call James at 392-0614.

Indonesian Week at UNCW

The University's Museum of World Cultures will sponsor an 'Indonesian Week' at UNCW, Jan. 26th through Jan. 30th. Programs on Indonesian food, music, dance, art, and fashion are several of the various events scheduled for the week. A performance by the Balinese Dancers and a visit by the Indonesian ambassador to the United States highlight this cultural event.

Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW, and acting director of the Museum of World Cultures welcomes everyone to participate in the preparation of 'Indonesian Week' by joining one of the following committees:

1. Finance (raise funds)
2. Host (arrange transportation, lodging, and meals for guests and guests)
3. Protocol
4. Set-up (flags, banners, decorations)
5. Public Relations (publicity)
6. Displays (museum cases)

7. Program (performance programs, advertising, invitations)
8. Special Events (help with a performance in Kenan)
9. Lecture (audio-visual set-up)
10. Food (ARA, coordinate food preparation)
11. Executive Coordinating committee

For those interested in 'Indonesian Week', contact Gerald Shinn at the Department of Philosophy and Religion, UNCW.

An array of sculpted works that cross the entire gamut of media and technique are currently on display throughout the Student Union, St. John's Museum of Art, and New Elements Gallery.

Over 130 assorted works make up the three dimensional display, which includes stone, wood, welded steel, fiber, cast metal, found materials, and neon.

The exhibition, which will continue through December 6, is jointly sponsored by Tri-State Sculptors, UNC-W, and St. John's Museum of Art. It is jointly supported by a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington, DC.

Burgwin-Wright Cornwallis Headquarters?

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

The Burgwin-Wright House on the southwest corner of Third and Market streets in downtown Wilmington is the focus of much ongoing historical speculation.

The center of the ongoing historical speculation is whether or not British General Lord George Cornwallis and his exhausted military staff and troops occupied the Burgwin-Wright House during their stay in Wilmington during the closing days of the American Revolutionary War.

While some students of the American Revolutionary War period doubt the scant legends and stories, offer conclusive evidence that General Cornwallis stayed, ate and slept in the Burgwin-Wright House, others; such as Margaret T. Hall, curator of the Burgwin-Wright House, believe the legends and stories passed on to generations of Wilmingtonians offer definite proof that Cornwallis did indeed occupy the house during his stay in Wilmington.

The legend of where Cornwallis slept begins on the day of April 7, 1781, when General Cornwallis, his exhausted military staff and troops limped into Wilmington after the Battle of Gifford Courthouse.

"Cornwallis was almost defeated at the Gifford Courthouse Battle," Mrs. Hall said. "Cornwallis retreated to Wilmington, that was already captured and occupied by British Major James Craig."

For Cornwallis, the end of the American Revolutionary War was near at hand as he marched his troops toward Wilmington where he believed supplies and a brief respite awaited him.

At first, Cornwallis directed his men at a slow pace to Wilmington, but was forced to add speed when he and his troops were attacked by American General Nathaniel Greene's unit. General Greene's unit was the unit that was almost defeated Cornwallis at the Gifford Courthouse.

When Greene learned of Cornwallis's march towards the Carolina coastline, he hurriedly decamped his company from the Ironworks and left his wounded troops behind at the Gifford Courthouse in the care of Quakers living in the area in order to lead the attack on Cornwallis.

The capture of a number of British soldiers was the most Greene accomplished in the positive aspect. His departure from the Gifford Courthouse to hunt Cornwallis weakened the American Revolutionary Army so much, that the American Army dare not risk another confrontation with the British Army until Green and his troops returned to the Gifford Courthouse.

Greene's hunt for Cornwallis caused the British General to suffer from a serious supply shortage.

The two armies marching back and forth across the coastline of North Carolina caused the land to become so ravaged, that the meager supplies of food, ammunition and medicine were barely enough for one army, let alone two.

Despite the return of Greene back to the Gifford Courthouse, Cornwallis still suffered from a serious supply shortage. When Cornwallis arrived in Cross Creek, North Carolina on April 6, 1781, he had expected that Major Craig had sent the supplies he was supposed to send from Wilmington up the Cape Fear River.

Snipers stationed along the Cape Fear River made it impossible for Major Craig to keep his promise of sending much needed supplies to Cornwallis's battle weary troops.

Cross Creek offered no food or supplies Cornwallis could impound and a smallpox outbreak forced him to give orders to continue on to Wilmington.

The next day on April 7, 1781, Cornwallis and his tired, hungry and dirty troops marched into Wilmington.

Wilmington offered Cornwallis eighteen days that he desperately needed in order to provide his troops with much needed rest, a chance to gather the badly needed supplies and a chance to formulate his next plan of action in the Revolutionary War.

Wilmington also offered the British General the opportunity to exercise one of the habits he practiced when he occupied a captured town. "Whenever Cornwallis occupied a captured town, he established his headquarters in the finest house in town," said Mrs. Hall.

"Although there is no documented proof that Cornwallis did stay in the [Burgwin-Wright] house, several handed-down stories make it obvious that he did stay here," Mrs. Hall said during an interview inside the restored Burgwin-Wright House.

There is also indirect evidence to support the claim made by Mrs. Hall and the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America in the State of North Carolina-whose headquarters is in the restored Burgwin-Wright House.

The indirect evidence comes in the form of John Burgwin, treasurer of the Colony of North Carolina under the Royal Governor Arthur Dobbs, who built the house in 1771.

The foundations of the house are massive stone walls of an old jail. "Burgwin, a merchant and plantation owner, was thought to be a British sympathizer who went to England when the Revolutionary War broke out," Mrs. Hall said.

"Burgwin was accused of being a spy for the British and his property was taken away from him," she said. "But in reality, he was a double agent for the fledgling colonies."

"Falsely secure in the knowledge that Burgwin was a faithful subject to the British Crown, it is more likely that Cornwallis would have chosen Burgwin's house for use as his temporary headquarters during his stay in Wilmington," Mrs. Hall suggested.

While Burgwin was in England pursuing his double life, Judge Joshua Grainger Wright and his family occupied the house when Cornwallis came into Wilmington and after.

Upon making his to house his temporary headquarters in Burgwin's house, "Cornwallis probably took the bottom floor of the two-story house for his headquarters," Mrs. Hall said.

The handed-down stories state that Cornwallis used the first floor of the house as his headquarters during his eighteen day stay in Wilmington.

Cornwallis was supposed to have used the den as his office where he formulated his plans and interrogated prisoners, who were kept in the dark, earth dungeon that was underneath the house-a left over from the old jail that was used as the foundations of the house.

During the evening hours it is possible that Cornwallis walked in the gardens surrounding the house, or dined with the Wright family, Mrs. Hall said. "The Wright family stayed upstairs throughout the time Cornwallis was in the house," she said.

Peculiar holes in floor leading out of the den where Cornwallis discussed the war with his military staff lend credibility to one story about events during Cornwallis's stay in the Burgwin-Wright House.

"The holes were supposedly made by Cornwallis's troops who cut meat on the floor by using their bayonets as knives," Mrs. Hall said.

Close examination by sight and touch does tend to confirm the fact that a sharp object or objects did strike the floor in almost a straight line at somepoint in the distant past.

Touching the fair-sized holes reveals the blunted edges of time and shoes that have worked closely together over a long period of time to ease the sharp edges and insides of the holes in the floor.

Since no documentation exists that firmly states that Cornwallis did indeed spend eighteen days in the Burgwin-Wright House, on April 7-25, 1781, doubt does exist on whether or not he did stay in the house, Mrs. Hall freely acknowledged.

And several people who had voiced their doubts in the past declined requests to be interviewed, it can only be assumed that the passed down stories are not the concrete proof that they seek in proving that Cornwallis did indeed stay in the Burgwin-Wright House.

Doubting Thomases may find the concrete evidence they seek in an unusual visit made to the Burgwin-Wright House by a direct descendant of Cornwallis.

"During the celebration of Yorktown in 1981, Mr. Michael Cornwallis from Eddingborough, England, was following in his illustrious ancestor's footsteps across Revolutionary War America," Mrs. Hall said. "Mr. Cornwallis was stopping at every house General Cornwallis stayed in during the war."

Mrs. Hall described Mr. Cornwallis as being "awfully nice" and obviously sincere in his belief that his ancestor stayed in the Burgwin-Wright House.

So sincere Mr. Cornwallis is in his belief that his ancestor did indeed stay in the Burgwin-Wright House, that he sent a picture of General Cornwallis that now hangs in the den the British General used as a workroom.

General Cornwallis's stay at the Burgwin-Wright House came to an end on April 25, 1781, when he left with his troops to return to the war the rebel colonies were winning. For Cornwallis the war was almost over with.

On October 19, 1781, he surrendered to American General George Washington at Yorktown, Virginia, thus bringing about the unofficial end of the American Revolutionary War.

"Cornwallis went on to become the Viceroy of India," Mrs. Hall said. "He suffered no discourse from the ill-fated attempt to squash the rebellious colonies."

"John Burgwin, who had his property confiscated during the war because he was thought to be a British sympathizer, had his property fully restored to him."

she said. "He sold his house to Judge Wright, who purchased the house in 1799."

"Some people will doubt that General Cornwallis stayed in the Burgwin-Wright House because the generations-old stories are not definite proof that he did stay in the house," Mrs. Hall said. "But with a little imagination, it is hard to doubt the stories of Cornwallis's stay in the house."

The FBI

Formed in 1908, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) has evolved into the principal federal investigative agency charged with investigating violations of federal statutes. The overall objective of the FBI is to have a significant impact on criminal activity, to investigate civil matters in which the federal government has an interest, and to provide the executive branch with information relating to national security.

FBI activities include investigations into organized crime, white-collar crime, public corruption, financial crime, fraud against the government, bribery, copyright matters, civil rights violations, bank robbery, extortion, kidnapping, skyjacking, terrorism, foreign counterintelligence, and fugitive and narcotics matters. The FBI also provides cooperative services to the nation's law enforcement community through the services of the FBI's training programs, Laboratory and Identification divisions, Uniform Crime Reporting Program, and the National Crime Information Center.

Special Agents of the FBI are principally involved in investigating violations against federal statutes under their jurisdiction, collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be an interested party, testifying in court, and performing other duties imposed by law or presidential directive. Special Agents also conduct training sessions for state and local law enforcement agencies and background investigations for other U.S. government agencies.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SPECIAL AGENT

The FBI is continually searching for qualified men and women to serve as Special Agents. Applicants must be U.S. citizens between the ages of twenty-three and thirty-five and be available for assignment anywhere in the FBI's jurisdiction. They must have a valid driver's license. Applicants must also be in excellent physical condition, capable of being trained in the use of firearms and defensive tactics.

Depending on their academic qualifications, applicants are placed in one of five entry programs: Engineering/Science, Accounting, Law, Language, and Diversified. Holders of bachelor's degrees in a variety of engineering and science disciplines can be considered for placement in the Engineering/Science Program. There is currently a special need for candidates with degrees in electrical engineering or computer sciences. Applicants to the Accounting Program should have a bachelor's degree in accounting and be qualified to sit for the CPA examination. Applicants to the Law Program must have a law degree from an accredited resident law school. Those interested in applying to the Language Program should have a bachelor's degree (in any discipline) and be fluent in a language for which the FBI has a need. Finally, applicants who can present a bachelor's degree and three years of full-time work experience or an advanced degree and two years of full-time work experience are eligible for placement in the Diversified Program.

FBI Special Agents are assigned to FBI Headquarters in Washington, D.C., or to one of fifty-nine field divisions throughout the United States. Special Agents begin at the GS-10 level on the government pay scale. The entry-level salary is $24,011; additional compensation for overtime after the completion of training brings the starting salary to $30,013. Agents are able to reach GS-15 in nonsupervisory positions in the field.

Engineers and Computer Scientists. Special Agents with backgrounds in engineering or computer science may work as active investigators or provide support to a technical function. This support, which includes work in all aspects of technical investigative aids, is meant to enhance the effectiveness of the investigators. The nature of the FBI's responsibilities requires that the FBI remain at the leading edge of technology. Assignments in this area are therefore often very challenging, and they frequently require innovativeness and resourcefulness.

Special Agents participate in a variety of investigative assignments during their first three years; after that point, they may be transferred to FBI Headquarters to participate in research and development in the Technical Services Division.

Other Graduates. Applicants with bachelor's master's, or doctoral degrees in a variety of disciplines may also qualify under the Engineering/Science Program. Acceptable fields of study include biological science, chemistry, computer systems, decision science, geology, information management sciences or systems, mathematics, metallurgy, pharmacology, pharmacy, and toxicology, as well as business concentrations, including accounting, analysis, and finance.

In addition, applicants who have expertise as firearms examiners, explosives examiners, document examiners, and fingerprint examiners may qualify under the Engineering/Science Program. Persons interested in these areas are required to submit complete transcripts and detailed resumes showing relevant experience.

TECHNICAL SUPPORT

There are a variety of technical support positions available in the Washington, D.C., area. Engineering support work includes the development and modification of equipment and the rendering of expert technical assistance to field offices involved in conducting investigations. These non-Agent technical support positions require a bachelor's degree in electrical or electronics engineering, computer science, or related technical fields. Salaries for these positions range from the GS-7 level to GS-14 depending upon the applicant's qualifications.

All applicants must be U.S. citizens and must pass a background investigation.

TRAINING

All newly appointed Special Agents take part in a 16-week training program at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Virginia. This program includes academic study, physical fitness training, and instruction in the use of firearms and defensive tactics. Special Agents and technical support employees also receive specialized in-service training at various times throughout their career.

THE ORGANIZATION AS EMPLOYER

The FBI seeks top-caliber, career-oriented candidates for both Special Agent and support positions. Employment in either of these areas brings with it a number of challenging and rewarding opportunities. In the course of a career with the FBI, an individual can make significant contributions to the welfare and security of the country in a vital and critical occupation.

In the course of a career with the FBI, an individual can make significant contributions to the welfare and security of the country in a vital and critical occupation.

APPLICATION AND INFORMATION

The FBI conducts a nationwide recruitment effort through various college and university placement offices. Utilizing a centralized hiring system, the FBI makes all appointments from FBI Headquarters in Washington, D.C. The application process includes testing, an interview, a background investigation, and a physical examination. For more information about the Special Agent position, or the technical support positions, contact the nearest FBI office's Applicant Coordinator.

FBI SPECIAL AGENT CAREERS

The FBI has initiated a search for qualified men and women for the position of Special Agent. Applicants must be U.S. citizens, available for assignment anywhere within the Bureau's jurisdiction, between the ages of 23 and 35, possess a valid driver's license, and in excellent physical condition allowing the use of firearms and defensive tactics. Other qualifications also exist. The five entry programs to qualify for Special Agent consideration are:

LAW: Resident law school degree with two years of undergraduate work at an accredited college or university.

ACCOUNTING: A baccalaureate degree with a major in accounting from an accredited college or university. Must have passed the uniform CPA exam or provide certification they are academically eligible to sit for the CPA exam.

LANGUAGE: Baccalaureate degree plus fluency in a language for which the Bureau has a need, especially Russian, Chinese, Polish, Spanish, Arabic, Sicilian or Armenian.

ENGINEERING/SCIENCE: A variety of baccalaureate degrees are acceptable with an emphasis on EE, ME, and CSEE degrees.

DIVERSIFIED: Baccalaureate degree in any discipline plus three years full-time work experience.

There are a variety of benefits in U.S. Government Service including retirement plan, group health and life insurance programs, sick and vacation pay and promotion. Entry level salary is $24,011 with additional compensation of $6,002 for overtime after completion of 15 week training school.

Wanted: Scoring

Bulletin.....Seahawks lack that scoring feeling. No video at 11:00.

That is exactly what the Seahawk soccer team has been missing all year long....the ability to punch the ball into the net. After 12 games this season, first-year Head Coach Jackie Blackmore can only wonder how an optimistic year has turned into a near nightmare.

The Hawks have scored just 12 goal in their 12 games this season. Their biggest scoring output was three scores. This is a rare occurrence as UNCW has done this just twice, in the opener against Baptist (a 3-0 win) and against Pembroke State in the second game of the season (a 3-2 win in overtime). UNCW has been outscored 26-12 this season and has lost 23-3 in their eighth game losing streak.

The season includes an eight game losing streak that consisted of seven shutouts, six of these in a row, breaking the school record for most consecutive shutouts. This dubious distinction was held by the 1969 squad.

The eighth game stink was snapped Monday when the Seahawks beat a Francis Marion team that has encountered similar problems as the Seahawks. The Hawks shut down the Patriot offense for a 2-0 victory. The win raised UNCW's record to 3-8-1 and 0-5-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA).

In the Francis Marion game, David Cresswell, the only scoring threat so far this season for Coach Blackmore, set up the first goal when his shot rocketed off Patriot goalkeeper Andrew Roxburg and Jose Serrano missed a shot into the empty net to give UNCW a much needed 1-0 lead. The score came 16:44 into the game and was Serrano's second goal of the year.

UNCW extended their lead at the 34:32 mark of the first half when gutsy Edgar Tomi (called "Shoe" by his teammates) hustled for a ball in the Patriot end, but was tackled by goalie Roxburg to prevent an open net shot. David Cresswell was then called upon to take the penalty kick which he promptly deposited in the right side of the net. This gave UNCW a 2-0 lead that would hold up and even their non-conference record at 3-3-0.

"It wasn't pretty, but it sure was nice," said Head Coach Blackmore. "That gets the monkey off our back. We were not mentally sharp and we had some mental mistakes that could have led to some goals."

Last Saturday, UNCW dropped a tough one to CAA rival Richmond.

The Seahawks took the early lead with a David Cresswell goal at 33:17 in the first half. But less than two minutes later, the Spiders tied it when freshman Tim Leahy beat goalie Donnie Lewis.

Richmond came out strong after half and jumped on the Seahawk defense. The result, a score by the Spider's midfielder Eric Jones and a 2-1 lead that UNCW couldn't overcome.

"I thought we gave pretty good effort," said Blackmore. "I thought they played a very controlled, team oriented game."

As for the result, the loss kept UNCW in the cellar of the extremely tough CAA, just one game behind East Carolina. ECU's only win in the conference is a 3-2 overtime triumph against Blackmore's troops.

During fall break, UNCW played a surprisingly tough Atlantic Christian team in Wilson, NC. Both teams played well, but suffered from a lack of scoring. After two full periods of play, neither had mounted a successful scoring chance.

They went into overtime and the Bulldogs struck quickly when Brian Annular broke a UNCW offside trap, raced downfield, and beat Donnie Lewis with the game-winner. UNCW couldn't come up with the equalizer and suffered a 1-0 loss.

"We continue to get caught up in the offside trap," Blackmore said with some distress. We have given up three big goals like that this season. We played very well. We played well enough to win by a three or four goal margin. We had our chances to score, but we just didn't finish. It seemed like we were getting good shots. They were just going straight to the keeper."

The keeper that thwarted the Seahawks all day was Frank Spinello as he tallied 17 saves to preserve the victory for Atlantic Christian.

"He made a couple of outstanding saves," Blackmore said of Spinello. You have to give him credit."

UNCW now has just four games remaining on the schedule. They will travel to Hartsville, SC to challenge the Coker Cobras Saturday before returning home to play two of their last three matches.

CAA FOOTNOTES.....It looks like overtime games are part of the CAA. George Mason and UNC Wilmington have both played four overtime games. For Mason, it ties a school record for most overtime games in a season. William & Mary both have three apiece....Mason has had all four overtimes in the last five games....Freshman Marc Peltic, making his first collegiate start, scored just 21 seconds into the match against 15th-ranked Duke in Durham. Duke scored later as GMU tied their Blue Devils at 1-1....James Madison held nationally ranked Virginia scoreless for 64 minutes, but the Cavaliers exploded in the final 25:42 to run to a 4-0 victory....East Carolina's Jamie Reibel leads the CAA in scoring with 21 total points. He has scored eight goals and has five assists....Martin Murphy, who replaced Mike Benita as a starter earlier this season is the CAA's leading goalie. He has allowed just two goals in 607 minutes of play and has two shutouts to his credit.

McPherson, 'Hawks, Open '86-87

from Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, N. C. - UNC Wilmington basketball took on a new look officially Wednesday when Head Coach Robert McPherson puts the Seahawks through their first practice at Trask Coliseum.

McPherson, who has coached basketball for 21 years, took over the UNCW program in April after a successful five-year stint at Sam Houston State University that saw him win nearly 70 percent (102-47) of his games with the Bearkats.

"Basketball is basketball, but the terminology may be a little different and they'll be some new wrinkles," the 45-year-old coach said of the first week of drills. UNCW began practice at 3:30 p.m. Last Wednesday in preparation for the Nov. 29 season opener at home against Army.

"We'll start the first day teaching our half court offense and man to man defense. We'll also start implementing our defensive philosophy and work on fundamentals."

McPherson inherits a team that returns four starters off last year's inherits a team that returns four starters off last year's 16-13 club. The Seahawks, with All-Colonial Athletic Association performer Brian Rowsom back for his senior year, are being picked to finish high in the CAA in 1986-87.

However, McPherson is taking first things first.

"Our main concern right now is with terminology," added McPherson. "After that adjustment, we'll be trying to find some combinations that we feel will play well together and be successful in a game-type situation."

"Everyone has to get accustomed to their new coaching philosophy. They're all starting off equal. All the players are starting off equal. All the players are starting out with a new coaching staff on a equal foot. We have some good kids returning and some good kids coming in."

Rowsom, who became the school's all-time leading rebounder in 1985-86, is back this fall and needs just 186 points to take over the all-time scoring lead. The 6-9, 220-pounder from Columbia, N.C., averaged 20.3 points and 9.5 rebounds in being picked to the Colonial's top team last season.

McPherson is anticipating an even better season from the talented senior.

"Brian's a quality player," said McPherson. "But we expect to have a couple of players capable of scoring. The defenses will sag on Brian, so we have to have kids who will step up and shoot the jumper."

If things go as planned, McPherson should not have any shortage of firepower this season. Returnees Sandy Anderson (9.3 ppg, 2.4 rpg), Greg Bender (9.0 ppg, 4.4 rpg), Charles Cherry (7.2 ppg, 5.9 rpg) and Mark Gary (4.6 ppg, 1.4 rpg) all return.

If that's not enough to fill the hoop, McPherson and his staff recruited five junior college players, with four hitting in double digits last season.

Guards Adam Porter (6-1, 180, So.) and Ricky Griffin (6-3, 200, So.) averaged 23.9 and 12.0 points respectively one year ago. Forwards Roy Walker (6-6, 195, Jr.) and Odell Bellinger (6-5, 185, So.) picked up 13.9 and 11.1 points, and center Jeff Brannen (6-7, 200, Jr.) averaged 9.0 points and 8.0 rebounds.

McPherson said, "My goal is to play the best we can every night out. If you're going to win a conference championship, you have to be really consistent and have depth. We'll have to play every night."

Consistent play is nothing new to McPherson. The veteran coach has enjoyed 20-win seasons in six of eight years as a collegiate mentor. He directed Sam Houston to a record-setting 27-6 record in 1986-86.

The Texas native says Navy is the team to beat in the conference this season, especially with the presence of senior center David Robinson.

"David Robinson is the best big player in the country, so you have to pick Navy first," said McPherson. "We have a very good basketball league and the conference is going to get tremendous exposure this season. I think four or five other teams will be good, too."

The most ambitious schedule in the school's history awaits UNCW's 1986-87 club. Along with home and away matchups with each Colonial opponent, the slate features first-ever matchups with Niagara, DePaul and Boston College. The Seahawks will also join host Indiana, Southern Illinois and East Carolina in the Indiana University Classic Dec. 12-13.

Pre-season drills are held daily at 3:30 p.m. at Trask Coliseum.

He Shoots; He Scores!

David Cresswell fires a shot past Francis Marion goalie Andrew Roxburg to give the Seahawks a 2-0 win. The win snapped UNCW's eight game losing streak.

Lady 'Hawks open practice

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

WILMINGTON, NC -- UNC Wilmington Head Coach Marilyn Christoph officially began preparing her troops for the 1986-87 basketball campaign when they opened practice in Trask Coliseum Wednesday.

Christoph, who starts her 11th year of collegiate coaching and eighth at UNCW, enters the '86-87 season with some question marks concerning height, depth, and leadership.

"I don't know exactly what to expect this year," said Christoph, who enters the season with 147-107 (.578) coaching record, 111-76 (.593) at UNCW. "We're going to have to play at such a high level to be competitive because the conference is just so tough."

Presenting the largest roadblocks in UNCW's path to the Colonial Athletic Association crown are James Madison, American and East Carolina. The Lady Dukes of IMU, the defending CAA champions, represent the biggest obstacle and American, who finished 20-7 last season, returns all five starters.

To compete in the CAA, Christoph must find leadership and depth. The loss of Sue Dean, Jenny Owen and Phyllis Edwards leaves some holes to fill for the veteran coach.

"We need to identify who will carry the load for us both on and off the court," said Christoph. "We'll also be looking for bench help and who exactly will do the job for us."

Returning for the Lady Hawks are four starters from last year's 15-13 squad. Christoph's club finished in fourth place one year ago with a 5-7 record.

Junior center Elizabeth Bell and junior wing Sisley Morse are likely starters this fall. Junior forward Sharon McDowell and senior guard Wanda Carroll also started last season and will be relied upon heavily this year.

The only question mark in the lineup is the point guard position. Christoph is counting on freshman Kerry Albright and sophomore Johnnie Smith to make key contributions.

Albright, who brings some fine credentials to UNCW from Bishop O'Connell High School in Arlington, VA, has a superb outside shot and excellent skills. Smith has the quickness that Christoph likes, but must cut down on her turnovers and gain some much needed confidence.

Christoph

"Whoever gets the job done for us and helps us be competitive will win the points guard position," Christoph said.

Since the Lady Seahawks don't open their schedule until Dec. 3, Christoph will gradually work her troops into the heart of their preseason practice.

"We'll take a day-by-day approach to practice," said Christoph. "We'll try to identify things to accomplish everyday and work from there. We plan on expounding on our strengths and not our weaknesses."

This fall, Christoph employed a very intensive weight training program. She plans to continue the program until Nov. 1.

"The girls have worked very hard in the program," Christoph said. "Their work habits have been great, and if they carry this into the season, it will be a good season. Hopefully, everything will fall into place for the opener."

The Lady Hawks open their season Dec. 3 in Trask Coliseum against Furman University. The balance of the 27-game schedule consists of home and away games with all conference members except Navy, which plays under the NCAA Division II banner and plays host to UNCW in Annapolis.

The non-conference schedule includes Furman, Western Carolina, UNC Asheville, Baptist, Campbell, North Carolina A&T and Delaware State. Both Western Carolina and Delaware State are new to the Lady Seahawk schedule.

"We're going to have to play at such a high level, because the conference is just so tough," Marilyn Christoph

"It is the most difficult schedule we've ever played," said Christoph. "We are in a very competitive conference that in my opinion is one of the top five in the country. I just don't see a breather on the schedule anywhere."

This year marks the first time the CAA receives an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament for its conference tournament winner. This year's conference tournament will be held at James Madison University in Harrisonburg, Va. Feb. 27 - Mar. 1.

Scandals Hit College Athletics

by College Press Service

MINNEAPOLIS, MN (CPS) -- Some of the best-known, most eligible, graceful and biggest -- in both the social and physical meanings of the word -- men on campus moved into Centennial Hall at the University of Minnesota were very, very nervous about it.

"Everything's gone okay so far," reports sophomore Tracey Martin. "People are not ignoring them, but they're not going out of their way to say 'hi' either."

"They" are members of the UM basketball team, devastated last season by allegations -- later disproven in court -- of gang-raping a Madison, Wis., woman and reports showing it had the lowest male athlete graduation rate in the Big 10.

At Minnesota and campuses around the country this fall, the athlete -- once the Big Man on Campus -- has become so sullied by drug scandals, grade-fixing trials, under-the-table payments form boosters and a growing reputation for crimes and bullying that the gulf between him and the rest of the campus seems to have widened dramatically, some observers say.

"They are looked on as being dumb jocks whose only legitimate reason for being there is playing (sports)," says Harry Edwards, a sports sociologist at Cal-Berkeley.

They also are looked at as being dangerous.

The Philadelphia Daily News, using FBI statistics, counted 88 athletes, at 46 different schools, charged with criminal sexual offenses since 1983.

And in just the last three months, seven Iowa State football players have been charged for various assaults, credit card and bad check schemes.

"One group says if a student is in a brawl of some kind, he shouldn't be on the team. Kick him off."

At the same time a North Carolina State quarterback was convicted of sexual assault, while a Butler quarterback was charged with attempted murder and arson. Florida State suspended a linebacker accused of killing one of his teammates. Police say three Colorado football players are under investigation for threatening to kill a local restaurateur.

Worries about athletes and their images are so bad at the University of Miami, which as of last week had the number one ranked football team in the land, that campus officials formed a committee to monitor athletes' behavior.

Sports Illustrated magazine recently estimated 40 members of the team had been in trouble with the police.

Jack Davis, president of the NCAA and a sports official at Oregon State, denies there's a crime wave, and blames the news media for the impression that there is.

"Athletes tend to make the news more than other students," Davis says.

"For example, the same week that (Maryland basketball star) Len Bias died (of cocaine-related causes), the assistant to the vice chancellor at the University of Kansas was found guilty of selling drugs," he notes.

"You didn't hear about that one, did you?" Davis asks rhetorically.

But it's the incidents that don't make the news that worry students at Centennial Hall at Minnesota.

When the team was housed in

They find themselves not in the same situation they grew up in, and have known all their lives."

Two other Berkeley researchers, Brenda Bredemeier and David Shields, found in an October, 1985, study of California college athletes an inverse relationship between "moral reasoning" and aggression.

Bredemeier and Shields found that players who, in turn, were rated "unaggressive."

Whatever the reasons, Davis figures the way to ease whatever tensions may exist is by stressing

"Another will say, boys will be boys."

"integrity" in college athletics, taking better academic care of players and perhaps disciplining the athletes themselves.

"One group says if a student athlete is in a brawl of some kind, he shouldn't be on the team. Kick him off," Davis says. "Another will say, 'well, boys will be boys.'"

Edwards instead wants to "establish programs dealing with the alienation and discontinuity (in the athletes' lives). Look at the problems. (Ask) what are the academic deficiencies. Break up the athletic dorms."

The tension at Minnesota, of course, arose when officials broke up the athletic dorms.

But basketball coach Clem Haskins and athletic department officials agreed to dorm residents' requests to have "support staff" supervise the team in Centennial, to provide more academic counseling, to cut down practice time, help integrate black athletes into the Twin Cities' black community, and even require coaches to better understand adolescent psychology.

The athletes themselves are aware of the tensions, too. "It bothers some more than others," reports Elaine Donahue, assistant athletic director for academic counseling. "I assume that time will take care of that."

Career Outlook Brighter for Women

By Anne Simpson, Staff Writer

How do you choose a career field—one where you stand a chance of getting a job with good pay and advancement opportunities? Find an area that is hot, right?

Studying national trends can help. The following is a list of the career fields that look promising for women, according to Working Woman's business editors.

• Financial planners are much in demand since financial deregulation has created such a confusing variety of financial services. Investors need advisers to guide them through the investment maze. To fill this need there are now about 200,000 self-described financial planners, and more are joining their ranks all the time.

With experience, an established financial planner can earn $50,000 to $150,000 a year.

• Financial public-relations executives fill the information void created when deregulation caused securities firms to cut back on research staff. These PR people represent investment firms to shareholders and Wall Street, answering questions about investments available and representing their companies to banking firms.

Starting salaries are only $18,000 to $25,000, but senior executives can earn $60,000 to $100,000.

• Hospital Administrators are also in demand since health care costs have increased 850% in the last 20 years. Medicare is now paying a flat fee for treatment no matter how much the hospital spends on the patient.

These developments have made hospitals more cost-conscious. Although many have cut staff to reduce operating costs, demand has increased for managers to deal with these problems. Hospital administrators earn $50,000 to $150,000 annually.

• Health maintenance organization managers run clinic-type operations that provide alternatives to hospital care. These operations include outpatient surgery centers and stand-alone emergency clinics.

Originally run as independent businesses, HMO's are increasingly being backed by large corporations and are making big bucks.

HMO managers can make about $30,000 a year, and head executives can earn up to $80,000 a year.

• Accountants were once thought of as having dull careers, but economical changes and competition have made for changes in the accounting field.

The Big Eight accounting firms have branched out into consulting, software design and tax advising. These changes have made for more job openings in accounting firms. Although starting salaries may not be high (as low as $19,500 in the Big Eight), CPAs with 10 years' experience can make up to $60,000 annually.

• High-Tech Information officers handle information management for firms with highly complex data processing systems. These people must have computer programming or systems analysis backgrounds to interpret the information for managing and controlling a business.

In large corporations these information officers can earn $65,000 per year.

• Systems analysts design programs to fit the needs of individual companies and help users understand and utilize these programs. They must have strong programming skills as well as people skills to make those unfamiliar with computers see that their ways are the best ways to handle information.

Six-figure incomes are possible for experienced systems analysts, and starting salaries are $26,000 to $30,000.

• Home entertainment marketers produce and sell cable-TV, video and pay-TV programming. They work in a big-money and fast-growing area of the entertainment field.

Huge TV corporations have opened their own video divisions to fill viewer demand, and hundreds of new, smaller companies are looking for personnel. This is a good chance for a career in entertainment.

Salaries at the smaller companies may only go to $30,000 for experienced executives, hardly more than starting salaries at big TV companies.

• Restaurant managers are more in demand since more people are going out to eat more often. Over 40% of all household food budgets is now spent on restaurant and take-out food.

On the down side, the hours are long and you work most weekends, but advancement is possible. Starting salaries are $30,000 for restaurant managers.

The jobs with lowest pay, fewest job prospects and other drawbacks are:

• Teaching. The pay is low, paperwork is heavy, classrooms are crowded. They face discipline problems and frustration. In a recent survey 27% of teachers said they would probably leave the profession within 5 years.

• Psychologists face fewer job prospects because of lay counseling and self-help groups that take clients away from them, as well as government budget cuts.

Wheatweaving Offered

Wheatweaving, the twisting, weaving, and plaiting of wheat and other selected grasses into decorative as well as domestic items, has been practiced since prehistoric times and is a religious object, such as a home of plenty, and useful household items, like the common wish broom, are examples of the wheatweaver's work.

Ms. Bonitz has taught wheatweaving at Old Salem and has conducted workshops in the Cape Fear area. A past president of the Piedmont Herb Society, she is an expert on colonial plants and kitchen gardens and she is a member of the Herb Society of America.

Ms. Bonitz will conduct an introductory session from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. and she has designed it for beginners. Native herbs will be used along with wild flowers and there will be a $10.00 fee per session.

The sessions will be small, limited to 12 people, so preregistration is required.

Accounting Course Offered

WILMINGTON—Individual attention, quality instruction, and timely topics are being stressed in two courses being offered for certified public accountants by the department of accountancy and the Office of Special Programs at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Pat Kelley, a partner in the Athens, Georgia CPA firm of James W. Kelley and Associates, will teach "Individual Income Tax Returns" and "Corporate Income Tax Returns." "These both will be pretty basic courses and in light of the new tax reform law I will incorporate many of the revisions for planning purposes," explained Kelley. "Both are targeted to people from entry level on up who are looking for an understanding of just basics and/or fell they need to update their skills in view of the '86 tax reform act."

Kelley holds a master of accounting in taxation from the University of Georgia, serves on the AICPA's national faculty and has taught accounting and tax courses nationwide.

The individual tax return workshop is scheduled for Monday,

November 24 from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Fee is $115 and registration deadline has been extended to November 17. Enrollment is limited to allow time for individual attention. Topics will include filing status, personal and dependency exemptions, income items, sales and exchanges of property, vacation homes, hobby losses, installment sales and alimony and child support.

The corporate tax workshop, to run on Friday, December 19 from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on the UNCW campus, will focus on the principles of corporate income taxation and preparing corporate tax returns with minimal supervision. Major topics include differences between corporate financial and income tax accounting, preparation of schedule M-1 including workpaper techniques, capital gains and losses, depreciation and amortization, investment credit and recapture. Fee is $115 and registration deadline is December 12. Enrollment is limited.

Each course also offers 8 units of Continuing Professional Education credits. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs (919) 395-3195.

The Natural Way to Draw

Youth ages 10 and up interested in learning to draw, can enroll in "The Natural Way to Draw, part 2" being offered through the UNCW Office of Special Programs. Instructor Sybil Thearling will show students the "quick" and "extended" approaches to drawing, emphasizing light and shade, anatomy, composition, structure and design.

The class will meet from 4:00-5:30 p.m. on Tuesdays, October 28-December 9 on the UNCW campus. The $24 fee will be discounted to $17 for registrations received before the October 21 deadline. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

HOW CAN THE BUDGET-CONSCIOUS COLLEGE STUDENT SAVE MONEY?

- Save over 50% off AT&T's weekday rates on out-of-state calls during nights and weekends.
- Don't buy textbooks when "Monarch Notes" will do just fine.
- Save 40% off AT&T's weekday rate on out-of-state calls during evenings.
- Count on AT&T for exceptional value and high quality service.
- Hang around with the richest kids in school; let them pick up the tab whenever possible.

If you're like most college students in the western hemisphere, you try to make your money go a long way. That's why you should know that AT&T Long Distance Service is the right choice for you.

* AT&T offers so many terrific values. For example, you can save over 50% off AT&T's day rate on calls during weekends to 8 a.m., Sunday through Friday, and from 11 pm Sunday through Friday, and from 5 pm and 11 pm, Sunday through Friday, and you'll save 40% off our day rate.

Ever dial a wrong number? AT&T gives you immediate credit if you do. And of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call. To find out more about how AT&T can help save you money, give us a call. With a little luck, you won't have to hang around with the rich kids. Call toll-free today, at 1 800 222-0300.

Smith Sisters Appearing Oct. 22

On Wednesday, October 22, the University Program Board is sponsoring an appearance by The Smith Sisters.

Debi and Megan Smith are best known for their striking sibling harmonies and their prowess on a wide array of instruments including guitar, dulcimer, autoharp, penny whistle and bodhran. Their repertoire includes contemporary songs of, for example, Linda Ronstadt, The Roches and The Beatles as well as original, traditional and Irish tunes.

"Mockingbird," a collection of The Smith Sisters' "fusion folk" featuring Doc and Merle Watson and some of the best musical talent in bluegrass, is the name of their recently released second album on Flying Fish Records.

The Smith Sisters have appeared on National Public Radio's "All Things Considered," "Mixed Bag," "The Fleamarket," and on Voice of America radio, among many others. After hosting the Smiths on his radio hour, Pulitzer Prize winning commentator Studs Terkel declared: "Here's to peace, grace and beauty... that is, Debi and Megan." The Nashville Network recently profiled the Smith Sisters on its cable television program, "New Country."

"Bluebird," their first album released in August 1984, also was produced by Merle Watson and was graced with appearances by the Watsons and Mark O'Connor. "Bluebird" received three Washington Area Music Award nominations. Dick Cern's World Folk Music Association ranked it one of the "Top 20 albums of 1984." The City Paper of Washington, D.C., named it "Best Country Album" of the year.

Debi and Megan grew up in Falls Church, Virginia, not far from Washington, D.C. The Smiths have the instinctive harmony of sisters who have always sung together and the rapport of sisters who have always shared secrets. (The Washington Post). "Where do they find them, the girls with the high, clear, country voices? It's been a few years since someone with cords the caliber of Emmylou's has shown up -- and now we have two" (Playboy Magazine).

UNCW Choirs To Perform

WILMINGTON — The UNCW Concert Choir, Chamber Singers, and Camerata Singers will present a concert of sacred and secular music at 8 p.m., Friday, Oct. 24 in Kenan Auditorium. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Featured vocal soloists for the performance will include Sara Ganz, visiting Lecturer in Voice at UNCW, and John Gilmore, UNCW Foundation Distinguished Visiting Professor of Music. Joe Hickman, director of choral activities at UNCW and assistant professor of music, will conduct the performance.

Gregory Bell, part-time lecturer at UNCW (staff accompanist) and music director at St. John's Episcopal Church, will be performing with the choir as organist and pianist.

Sara Ganz will be featured in F.J. Haydn's "Small Organ-Solo Mass," which also features Gregory Bell as organ soloist. John Gilmore will perform Tantum Ergo Sacramentum by Gabriel Faure with the choir and with Gregory Bell, pianist and Dr. Clair Rozier, organist. Gilmore will also perform the finale from L'enfance du Christ by Hector Berlioz with the choir.

A range of musical styles will be represented in the concert, from medieval to contemporary music. The opening set, performed by the 60-voice Concert Choir, includes sacred pieces from the 16th through 20th centuries. Following this, the Camerata Singers will perform secular music of the 16th century. Then the Concert Choir will return, with John Gilmore as featured soloist, to perform Tantum Ergo Sacramentum by Gabriel Faure and L'enfance du Christ by Hector Berlioz.

Following intermission, the Chamber Singers will perform Franz Joseph Haydn's Kleine Orgelmesse (Small Organ-solo Mass), named for a beautiful solo duet for organ, soprano, and strings in the Benedictus of the mass. The Haydn mass is quite short because the longer texts are "telescoped" by the composer by having each section of the choir sing a different text simultaneously. The Chamber Singers will also perform a set of folksong arrangements by British composers, including Ralph Vaughan Williams and John Rutter.

The program will conclude with a contemporary gospel number sung by the combined groups. The performance will begin promptly at 8 p.m. on Oct. 24 and will conclude by 9:30 p.m.

Creek Releases New Album

Sugarcreek, the Charlotte based rock band, has shortened its name to THE CREEK and are releasing their fourth LP in early October. The Creek is now "Sugar Free".

In 1985 the group rose to the semifinals of TV's top rated Star Search, hosted by Ed McMahon, and have remained one of the countries most popular bands since.

Their new release entitled "The Creek" contains ten tunes including this summer's hit "Arthur Whiteside," and a new single "Six Days to Sunday" which is being released with the LP. The Creek album gives listeners what they have always loved—high energy rock'n'roll with lots of personality while demonstrating a new musical depth and versatility.

Blue Velvet A Picture Of ...We're Not Sure

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

I have just seen the worst movie of this year. And next year. And maybe the year after. If this is a new American classic, I'll leave the country. Blue Velvet is as dreary as its lighting and as shabby as its sets. It leaves almost no cliché unturned: boy finds human ear in vacant lot, boy meets girl-next-door, boy meets "dark lady in distress," boy runs afoul of (very foul) bad guys, boy defeats bad guys after some permutations of plot that I will spare you, dear readers, boy gets girl in the end.

The effect is supposed to be of normalcy-gone-weird, but it is really more like boring-gone-nihilistic. The story limps along like this: our boy hero Jeffrey sneaks into the apartment using a pilfered key where he watches Dorothy-the-dark-lady-in-distress undress to her (of course) black lace underwear. There's your requisite voyeurism, folks.

When Dorothy discovers him in the closet she forces him at knifepoint to undress then begins to seduce him, begging him to hurt her, since pain turns her on big time. There's your S and M.

There is an attempt at artistic unity: the film begins with a shot of what might have been dark blue crushed velvet blowing in a sultry breeze, then deep blue sky and bright red roses. This blue-against-red color scheme is repeated with heavy-handed style throughout the film.

It was interesting to see familiar scenes around Wilmington in a movie, but the treatment of some of them was jarring.

Dorothy-the-dark-lady's apartment in the old hotel downtown was a strange mixture of stylizedness and shabbiness. The bar and window frame were painted black, an improbable practice in a small town apartment.

And the Barbary Coast bar downtown with its neon sign "This is it," transcended Sleaze to Evil—in fact, the whole film tried but failed at an atmosphere of pervading Evil.

All the characters were two-dimensional; no one was real enough to identify with. The viewer is beaten over the head with the themes of this story, as Frank says no less than nine times, "and now it's dark," Sandy says "where's my dream?" three times, (while sitting by the church yet), and the "Blue Lady" sings blues songs in blue lighting wearing excessive blue eyeshadow, and on and on...

It had the requisite nudity: Jeffrey is shown in the buff, and the dark-lady-in-distress appears on Jeffrey's (our hero's) front porch, badly beaten and stark bare, with the porch light shining on her, and no one inside has noticed—but how did she get there anyway?—just when Sandy-the-girl-next-door's former boyfriend came along to bash Jeffrey's face in—and what happened to the long, dark ("and now it's dark," as Frank-the-bad-guy says) car that was chasing them just before Jeffrey got home—and who cares, anyway? The twists of plot defy analysis and foster bewilderment followed by boredom.

There is an unbelievable cliché as Sandy-the-pure, while parked by the church with Jeffrey, tells her dream to him, all about how the world was dark, because there were no robins (which signify love), and then millions of robins appeared and everything was so great. Jeffrey responds, "You're a neat guy." And it was a real neat scene, too.

A rather fake robin appears at the end of the movie, along with the blue sky, flowers, and blue velvet, continuing the futile attempt at unity.

The incidental music was awful; it might have been stylish thirty years ago, but today it seems too heavy and hackneyed, making the supposedly serious action laughable.

I loved the reaction of the police detective's wife when the badly beaten, naked Dorothy was brought in her house; she placidly goes off to make a phone call, comes back to report on her call, then says calmly, "I'll get a coat to cover her with," as if to say, "Well, I guess we've sold enough tickets now—cover the bimbo."

And Frank's vocabulary is severely limited, since 63.7% of it (my figures) consists of the famous I-word.

And of course we are treated to seeing Frank's brains blown all over the floor and blood streaming from an ashen-faced corpse (another bad guy) who persisted in standing upright (explain that one to me) after being blasted a good one to the head. This particular character must have been local, judging by his looks and accent which reminded me of every Jaycee I've ever met.

This film is a blatant attempt to sell movie tickets with sensationalism, and I suppose there's something classically American about that. You are bound to have something better to do than see this movie—like watch pine needles fall off the trees.

Les Deux Ams to Perform

Classical guitar enthusiasts should take the opportunity to check out Les Deux Ams, a guitar duo comprised of two regional community college Visiting Artists. The duo will be appearing in concert at James Sprunt Technical College in Kenansville on Thursday night, Oct. 23.

Les Deux Ams (the two friends) features the talents of Brian Morris and Joseph Hoyce, who combined talents to win third place honors in the Guitar Federation of America's first international competition last year. Morris and Hoyce are now artists-in-residence at JSTC and Wayne Community College, respectively.

The pair has a repertoire that includes major works and transcriptions for guitar duo, encompassing works from the Renaissance to the 20th century. They have been performing together for several years, since both were completing graduate studies at Florida State University, and their concerts have been lauded for musical excellence. Recordings of their works are often featured on public radio.

Les Deux Ams will appear in concert at 8 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 23 in Monk Auditorium at JSTC. Admission is free. For more information, contact James Sprunt Technical College at 296-1341.

MONSTER MASH '86

Halloween Night, Oct. 31st, the Community Arts Center will blast the lid from its coffin when they present Monster Mash '86, a high energy dance concert featuring music, mime and costume contest with more than 50 prizes.

The Community Arts Center, Westalent and the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department have joined forces in this effort to offer quality programs for teens and adults that choose an alcohol and drug-free environment for entertainment.

Doors creak open at 7:30 p.m. with music beginning at 8:00 p.m. Admission is $4.00 at the door.

Wilmington's own "Interpreters" will kick off the evening followed by the L.A.

based modern psychedelia group "The Fringe." Between sets, the Mime -Walkers will perform their own unique blend of traditional and original mime a la skeletal, combined with emcee announcements and prize give-aways. Headlining the evening will be the all original performances by "The Squirrels" have included opening for Wendy O and the Plasmatics, record breaking attendance and ticket sales.

Local businesses have donated generously for the costume awards including prizes such as wind-surfing lessons, haircuts, dinners and records.

Refreshments will be sold by The Wilmington Youth Council who are also serving as security crew and costume judges. For more information call The Community Arts Center 2nd and Orange St. at 341-7860.

On Stage...

Fans of easy-listening music should enjoy the sweet sounds of Shannon Wyatt when she appears at Eve's on Wednesday night. The singer/guitarist/songwriter performs a variety of material with a voice reminiscent of Emmylou Harris, and her show is definitely worth watching. Check her out.

The Comedy Zone at the Blockade Runner Hotel will present comedians Fat Dr. and Richard Marx on Thursday, Oct. 23rd at 9pm. Admission is $4 with your USA card.

Polar Bear will be letting go with some of his hot guitar leads when The Blue Water Band jams this weekend. Look for them Thursday night at Bananas and Friday & Saturday at The Port O'Call Lounge.

The jazz sounds of The Jack Olsen Trio will be featured this weekend at Roy's in The Riverboat Landing downtown. Shows are at 9:40 and 11pm. Cover charge is $2.

Rock out with The Killer Whales and Wild Kingdom at The Mad Monk this weekend. The Killer Whales will appear on Thursday - $3 cover. Wild Kingdom appears Fri & Sat - $4 cover.

If you know of an act appearing in town and want to inform your fellow students, contact us at The Seahawk. Ask for Tamara Drew or Carla Garrison.

The Cape Fear area music community was recently visited by Ken Watson, a multi-talented viola player whose repertoire ranges from get-down country to jazz. Watson is a veteran player who has performed with jazz greats Jack Teagarden and Charlie Spivak. He also appeared as a guest artist on the "Glive Me Back My Bullies" album released ten years ago by Lynnyrd Skynyrd.

Throughout the week and a half that Watson was in town, I had the opportunity to enjoy his outstanding musical abilities on several occasions. The most memorable highlight of hearing him play had to be his rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." Improbable as it may sound, Watson actually recreated the Jimi Hendrix version of the song on the viola — and sounded excellent.

In town for a guest appearance at the Riverboat Landing, Watson participated in jam sessions with numerous area musicians, most of whom are members of the Cape Fear Musicians' Association. Most of the sessions were held at Twin Oaks Recording Studio in Rocky Point and recorded for future use by our local public radio station, WHQR (91.3 FM).

I attended one of the Riverboat Landing performances and was indeed impressed once again by Watson's talent. He played a variety of songs that ranged from a rousing rendition of "Orange Blossom Special" to the smooth, rolling leads in the Beatles' "Norwegian Woods." All in all, the show was impressive, and I'll be back in the audience next time he plays in town.

Watson also attended the monthly meeting of the musician's association and participated in the jam session there. He had met several of the players while traveling through this area several years ago, and several members of the association sponsored his recent visit.

Watson, a California native, is sailing down the Inland Waterway toward the Caribbean and playing gigs along the way. Cape Fear music lovers will no doubt be appreciative when the wind blows him back our way again.

Wendy Oh, No!

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The recent Wendy O. Williams concert at the Mad Monk convinced me of one thing. The lady bares most of her flesh on stage for a reason. She doesn't appear to be able to sing.

I went to the concert knowing that the show would be different. Although I can appreciate a lot of the heavy metal acts out on the road today, I was not really prepared for Wendy O. Williams. I had hoped to be able to relate to the music, and figured that exposure to "shock rock" might broaden my cultural horizons.

Broaden my horizons it did. My horizons were broadened enough to cause an emotional crisis. And then some. Not only did I feel out of place, I felt culturally assaulted. As a longtime rock fan, a member of the Cape Fear Musicians' Association, and ex-bookie agent, and a veteran of several music appreciation classes, I really feel I have an open mind about music. However, I also really feel like I wasted six bucks.

Of course, the blame is not all Wendy's. Everything started going downhill with The Squirrels, the local new wave group that opened the show. I was sorely disappointed by their performance.

Having heard The Squirrels several times before, I expected a better show. I heard them during Riverfest and they sounded pretty good. On several previous occasions, I have heard the members individually in a studio environment. The band consists of some very talented people.

My problem is with their total lack of versatility. Just about any musical group, no matter what the style, knows better than to give a monotone show. During the opening set, I counted a least six songs in a row where the drum beat did not appear to change at all. It sounded like an hour long song.

Consequently, I was already disillusioned by the time the microphone was turned over to Wendy O. I think my biggest problem with the show was the fact that other than the few jokes she told in between songs, I could not understand a single thing she was saying when she sang! It sounded like someone grunting to music. And even then, she wasn't grunting in tune.

The biggest thing that Wendy O. had going for her was that she could distract the audience by wearing a bikini, thereby insuring appreciation for skin visibility, if not for musical talent. I really wondered how many were actually listening to what they were hearing. I listened. What a wasted six bucks.

Rock and Roll Proven Heavy

Rock on television has always been loaded with contradictions. News reports of the Parents Resource Music Committee's attack on rock albums last year, for example, were interrupted by ads featuring rock'n'roll soundtracks. The strength of the music still can be measured by its popularity as much as by how it intimidates people.

Time was when television scorned the music or tried to make it "acceptable" by containing and controlling it.

Steve Allen shamed Elvis Presley by having him sing "Hound Dog" to a basset hound in 1956. Dick Clark's American Bandstand played mostly white copies of songs for a clean-cut, all-American, safe audience. Presley's first few hits were explosive, but his movies were deliberate bores.

When the Beatles appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show in 1964, they change all that. The magic of their success was its utter unpredictability. That they were on national television at all seemed too good to be true.

Still, it wasn't long before John, Paul, George and Ringo showed up as predigested Saturday morning animation characters. It's hard to tell whether the Monkees were based on "A Hard Day's Night" or their cartoon counterparts.

Now 30, rock'n'roll has entered middle age, and Madison Avenue has finally wised up to the music's selling potential. Today we hear rap on McDonald's commercials, synth-pop on Vidal Sassoon ads and Springsteen soundalikes selling Chryslers. A black teenager leaps into the familiar David Lee Roth toe-touching split in a Bounce spot to the tune of Van Halen's "Jump!"

Music videos and Hollywood probably did the most to push rock'n'roll into the mainstream. "The Big Chill" soundtrack surpassed all sales expectations, and soon the rest of Hollywood started using simple rock'n'roll songs instead of the thunder of John Williams' "Star Wars" scores. In "Witness," Harrison Ford danced with Kelly McGillis while singing along with actress to the Righteous Brothers' "You've Lost That Lovin' Feelin'." Rob Reiner revived Ben E. King's "Stand By Me" for his current film of the same name.

Videos are the best commercials for the music, so it's not surprising they soon turn into commercials for other things.

Any big-product pitch now has the fast cuts and rhythmic visual pans first perfected in rock videos. It would be easy to dismiss tv's co-opting of rock'n'roll as a simple ripoff except for one thing: some of pop's foremost figures are prime accomplices in rock's gentrification.

Take the Pepsi pack: after Michael Jackson turned "Billie Jean" into a soft drink video, Lionel Richie responded with his own two-minute extravaganza, a sort of perverse competition for who could turn out the hippest cola groove. Not to be upstaged, Michael J. Fox can be seen flipping a metaphorical finger to a hungry library by switching an empty Pepsi can into the garbage.

Party pals Don Johnson and former Eagle Glenn Frey find themselves stranded at a disco jammed with screaming women, so smug they don't even have to mention the brand name they're backhandedly endorsing.

The idols' complicity cheapens rock's cantankerous reputation even more than corporate meddling.

It's one thing to turn "Billie Jean" into a commercial. It's another to tout yourself as a God-fearing Jehovah's Witness encased in a "Fountain of Youth" capsule on the cover of the "National Enquirer" when you've just signed a multimillion dollar contract to hawk sugar-laden carbonated syrup. As if that weren't enough,

Jackson, who owns the rights to the Beale song catalogue, recently gave permission for "Help!" to be used in a Pontiac commercial. Captain Eo is degrading pop in more ways than he's advancing it.

These days, some of rock's better moments on television come from unlikely places. Paul Shaffer of "Late Night with David Letterman" often sneaks in hardcore material like Jimi Hendrix's "If Six Was Nine" and George Harrison's "Taxman" as he moves the show into its commercials.

Miller Beer used two deserving groups in commercials that promoted regional sounds that aren't often promoted: the working class streets of Boston for the Del Fuegos and the rootsy pioneerism of California's Long Ryders. In both cases the ads were designed to fit the bands' sounds, not watered down to compensate for the music's rough edges.

Levis 501 Jeans ad series -- slick, video-conscious impressions -- is tasteful at best and inoffensive at worst. It features four teenage guys doing an engaging do-wop routine that makes Billy Joel's "The Longest Time" sound like a ballpark organ.

Ultimately, television's blinding effect on rock is made more obvious because there's no little new, exciting music on the pop charts. Only in a conservative creative climate would a remake like Bananarama's "Venus" actually hit number one. The Monkees' revival is easier to understand by noting there's little new music that's much better. As usual, television isn't the root of the problem. It's just one of the more prominent causes. Roll over Chuck Berry, and tell Ralph Lauren the news.

Thalian Auditioning for Cinderella

Auditions for the December production of the musical, the Thalian Association's "Cinderella," by will be held October 14 and 15 at 7 p.m. in The Loft at 115 Red Cross Street.

There are roles for all ages in this production which features eight principal parts, six for women and two for men. Singers and dancers and children are needed to produce this class story at Thalian Hall Dec. 4 through 8.

Written by Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein in 1956 as a vehicle for Julie Andrews, "Cinderella" was a transition from Broadway stage to television for the writers. March 31, 1957 saw the television premier of "Cinderella" on CBS and the musical marked the 14th anniversary of the opening of the first Rodgers and Hammerstein musical classic, "Oklahoma." Musical numbers from the play include, "Do I Love You Because You're Beautiful," "Impossible," "In My Own Little Corner," and "Boys and Girls Like You and Me." Musical direction will be by Larry Mitchell who recently directed the orchestra for the Thalian production of "Cinderella."

Director for this production will be McCall Thompson. Thompson studied voice at UNC-Chapel Hill and drama and dance at East Carolina University. He appeared in two Thalian Association productions last season and directed "Something's Afoot."

Wilmington theatre newcomer Bob Wallace will design the fairy tale settings for this play. Wallace's experience includes the San Angelo Civic Theatre in San Angelo, Texas, and East Carolina University.

Ron Smith will serve as technical coordinator for all of the Thalian Association productions this year and Michelle Lee will stage manager this production.

"We're very excited about beginning "Cinderella," said Managing Director-Producer Sam Garner. "This musical is for the entire family and is the Association's holiday offering to the city. We've a good many surprises in store for our audiences, especially children."

Additional information may be obtained by calling the Thalian Association at 251-1788

Horrorscopes

With Swami Gitchigami

Ed. Note - The Swami has screwed up again. Last week he forgot the sign Virgo, and he deeply regrets this oversight after several hours of being forced to listen to The Mormon Tabernacle Choir's rendition of "Frankie Goes To Hollywood". To all you Virgo's out there, the Swami says, "Hey, anybody can make a mistake."

LIBRA - The cooling breezes of autumn may cause contentment and love to overshadow all of your bad feelings toward your fellow man. Of course, they may also cause your leaves to cover your neighbor's yard, and he may be of another sign which is not compatible with yours.

CANCER - When your moons form a completely meaningless pattern this week, a unique job opportunity will come your way. You will be chased incessantly by Nazi war criminals intent on recruiting you to the Beirut Mining Co. You will have some forewarning though; the Nazis will be driving a pink 1964 Nash Rambler with I LOVE ADOLF and BERLIN SENIOR HIGH bumpersticks on the back.

ARIES - Never eat anything that can bite back.

LEO - Anybody who has a sign that's also a name must have problems, don't name your daughter George.

SCORPIO - Scorpio will reach great new levels of unbelievable ecstasy and find totally new meaning. Unless, of course, the Swami has misread your stars. If that is the case, it's not really worth knowing, unless you really get turned on by astrophysicalphysiological dishwashing.

SAGITTARIUS - Beware of roving photographers who work for National Enquirer magazine. They may print your picture above a story entitled "I was a teenage Sasquatch."

CAPRICORN - Don't take yourself too seriously—nobody else does.

AQUARIUS - Beware—your moons are colliding, and your rising house is falling. Absolutely nothing you do will turn out right.

PISCES - Things are smelling mighty fishy—please use your deodorant tomorrow.

TAURUS - You're bad tempered this week so stay out of china shops.

VRIGO - You can count on a nice week. Everything should come up roses, so smile and be cheery.

GEMINI - You will be committed for having a dual personality, but not to worry, it's really a very nice asylum.

Wheatweaving Offered

Saturday, October 25, 1986, a class in the ancient art of wheatweaving will be offered by Dorothy Bonitz at New Hanover County Museum.

Wheatweaving, the twisting, weaving, and plaiting of wheat and other selected grasses into decorative as well as domestic items, has been practiced since ancient times. Ornamental and religious objects, such as horns of plenty, and useful household items, like the common wisk broom, are examples of the wheatweaver's work.

Ms. Bonitz has taught wheatweaving at Old Salem and has conducted workshops in the Cape Fear area. A past president of the Piedmont Herb Society, she is an expert on colonial plants and kitchen gardens and she is a member of the Herb Society of America.

Ms. Bonitz will conduct an introductory session from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. and she has designed it for beginners. Native herbs will be used along with wild flowers and there will be a $10.00 fee per session.

The sessions will be small, limited to 12 people, so preregistration is required.

Backstairs at DEG

In an upcoming presentation, the American Marketing Association would like to invite all members, guests, and all interested students and faculty to see Jamie Bednarczyk speak about what really goes on behind the scenes at Wilmington's DEG Studios.

Ms. Bednarczyk is currently the assistant studio manager at the studio, and has prepared a slide show. She will entertain any, and all, comments or Questions that you may have for her after ward. Her presentation will be on Thursday, October 23, 1986, at 5:00 p.m. in room 100, Morton Hall.

In a recent AMA presentation, Mr. Arvid A. Anderson conducted a resume workshop for Marketing and other business majors. This workshop was a large success, with special thanks going to Renee Constantinides, Bill Herret, and Dr. Anderson for all their help.

Looking toward the future, the AMA has begun work on recruiting new and interesting guest speakers for later on this fall and a lot more for next semester as well. In the near future, the AMA and all other Business Clubs will be having our second annual Halloween Bash. Anyone who remembers how much fun last year's party was will want to attend. We are looking forward to seeing many and all students get involved, so please come out and attend, you don't know what you will be missing.

Fort Fisher Offers Films

The North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher will be offering the following films in October and November.

- Oct. 18, 25 and Nov. 29 - Sharks: Some Facts.
- Nov. 2 - After the Whales.
- Nov. 8 - The Beach - A River of Sand.
- Nov. 11 - Stranded Whale.

The Aquarium also offers numerous other programs from field trips through the salt marshes to the "Creature Feature," which allows visitors to become better acquainted with various forms of aquatic life.

Facilities include more than 20 aquariums featuring everything from sea turtles and various crustaceans to the shark tank. The Aquarium is open from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Phi Eta Sigma Announces Officers

Phi Eta Sigma (PHS) is the Freshman Honor Society here on UNC-Wilmington's campus. This campus chapter was started in 1979 by Dr. W. Lee Johnston of the Political Science Department and caters to the academic aspect of college life. In order to gain membership into this society, one must attain a 3.5 of better grade point average (with no grade lower than a C) and a full class load (30 hours or more) during the first year of enrollment.

This year on October 4, 1986, there were 23 new members inducted in a ceremony held at Alderman Hall. The 1986-87 officers were elected at a meeting prior to the induction ceremonies and are as follows: President - Heidi Herring, Vice President - Wally Stoneman, Secretary - Michelle Olaya, Treasurer - Brooks Pierce. After the induction ceremonies, a banquet was held at Balentine's Restaurant to honor the new members.

At the first meeting of the 1986 school year, the members voted on an honorary faculty member which has been a tradition every year since the formation of this society here on campus. This year's honorary faculty member is Dr. Carolyn Dunn of the UNC-Wilmington Biology Department. Dr. Dunn was chosen for her outstanding teaching techniques and her innate ability to communicate with students. Dr. Dunn began teaching at UNC-Wilmington after she received her B.S., M.S. degree from the University of Louisville, and her doctorate from Ohio State University.

We would like to congratulate Dr. Dunn on her honorary induction into Phi Eta Sigma. It is the hope of the society to keep growing in membership, thus upgrading the academic reputation of UNC-Wilmington. - Heidi Herring, Pres., Wally Stoneman, V.P.

Bomb Threat to Office Proves to be Hoax

An unknown white male called the Intramural Office Thursday and issued a bomb threat.

Without divulging the location of the alleged bomb, he said it would go off at 5:00 p.m.

Joe Johnson, Director of Public Safety at UNCW, explained the precautionary steps taken against the threat.

The first step taken is a threat analysis, in which investigators analyze "various aspects of the caller, such as from where he or she is calling," said Johnson.

Then, "based on [the results of] the threat analysis," investigators will "make a decision on how to respond," said Chief Johnson.

Two incidents of property damage were reported on Thursday. In Parking Lot "O" a sharp object scratched the side of one vehicle, and outside of New Hall '85 the tire of a bicycle was slashed.

In both cases the crime was committed by an unknown subject.

Three reports of breaking and entering and/or larceny were called in last week.

In one incident, an unlocked bike was stolen from the area outside of Apartment "I."

In the other two cases an unknown subject entered a vehicle and removed car stereo equipment.

Until Club is Approved Senate Kills Hawke Advertisement

President B. Allen Dudley Awarded five scholarships and partial scholarships in Monday night's Senate meeting.

Other issues addressed by the senate included the swearing in of a new representative at large and the removal of the Hawke tabloid from the list of campus media being considered for an advertising contract.

The advertisement, which will include a monthly student opinion survey, was withheld from the Hawke until the Hawke is approved as a club at UNCW.

This Week's Senate

Senator Dawn Clodfelter of the judiciary committee reported that the other members had been unable to attend the last Judiciary Committee meeting.

President Dudley was faced with a surprise birthday party in Room 100 after the meeting.

Denise Jenkins Crowned Miss UNCW

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Denise Marie Jenkins, 17-year old freshman from Wilmington, is the new Miss UNCW 1987. Miss Jenkins, the second UNCW student to hold the title, was awarded a $1,000 scholarship and a chance to compete in the Miss North Carolina Pageant.

Miss Jenkins said she was "stunned" when she heard her name called as the winner. "I had no intention of winning this thing," she said.

The new Miss UNCW listed modeling and fashion merchandising as her primary goals. She also said, "I want my education to greatly affect my life."

Miss Jenkins performed an acrobatic dance routine to "I Dance the Funky Electric" from "Fame" as her talent.

She was crowned by Melissa Ballard Davis, Miss UNCW 1986. First Runner-up and winner of a $500 scholarship was Natalyn Shipp, a 20-year-old sophomore speech communication major.

Second runner-up and winner of a $250 scholarship was Deana Whaley, 18, of Sneads Ferry. Third runner-up and winner of a $150 scholarship was Melissa Collins, 21, of Dunn, N.C.

Debbie Detommaso, a senior from Flemington, N.J. won the Best Costume award for her costume in the opening number of the show, in which the contestants portrayed their favorite movie personality. L.Tonya Moore, a sophomore from Wilmington, won the Sponsorship Award for the most sponsors and tickets sold.

Susan Griffin Fisher, Miss North Carolina 1974, was Mistress of Ceremonies for the pageant and also entertained with several songs.

Mrs. Fisher was enthusiastic about the Miss America scholarship program.

"It gives opportunities to girls that they would not otherwise have," she said that the pageant is "A great promotional event for the University."

"If (the Miss UNCW title) is a career, a full-time job," she said, adding that "the title does not make the girl...it is whatever you make of it."

Mrs. Fisher received a standing ovation for singing "Ring Them Bells," a favorite vocal number of hers.

The theme for the pageant was "You Ought To Be In Pictures." The pageant was directed by Mitch W. Butts and promoted by the UNCW Student Government Association.

This is the first time the Miss UNCW Pageant has been a Miss America preliminary.

The contestants competed in swimsuit, evening gown and talent events for the title and scholarships. They were also judged on interviews with the judges.

Hundreds Attend AIDS Seminars

Keeling Well Received By Students at UNCW

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

Education and safe sex habits are the only possible solutions we now have for the AIDS virus, according to Dr. Richard Keeling, author and one of the country's leading authorities on the killer disease.

Keeling was here Thursday and Friday, Oct. 30-31 by request of the University to offer a series of programs on "What Everyone Should Know About AIDS." Keeling met with the University Advisory Board on AIDS, composed of representatives from Health and Wellness Center staff.

In a press conference Thursday, Keeling said that it could be five to ten years before an effective cure for the dread disease could be found and administered to the public. He cited other problems involving the introduction of a vaccine to the estimated 300,000 persons who will be infected with AIDS by the year 1991.

"What insurance company would pay for this (treatment)?" he asked. "After the problems with the swine flu vaccine, no one will pay for a new vaccine."

The numbers of people affected with AIDS are startling. By the end of 1986, an estimated 27,000 people will be diagnosed as having the AIDS virus. An estimated 15% are expected to have an AIDS-related illness within the next year, but just as unpleasant. Ten times as many may be infected but asymptomatic.

25% of all AIDS victims are black, and possibly as many are hispanic. Black males are more than twice as likely to contract the virus, thus disproving the myth that AIDS is a "gay white man's disease."

Keeling says that the church has been a hindrance in some circumstances.

Since many denominations believe homosexuality to be a sin, they see AIDS as being a retributive disease.

"If AIDS is retributive," asks Keeling. "Then why have 340 children been affected with the disease?"

"If AIDS is retributive," Keeling asks, "then why have 340 children been infected or died of the disease?"

Keeling also cites that gay black males are twice as likely to be intravenous drug users, thus doubling their chances of getting AIDS.

"No matter how careful you are, someone eventually hands you a dirty (infected) needle, and then there's little or no hope."

McCall Pleads Guilty to Soliciting

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

A 54-year-old English instructor pleaded guilty last Wednesday to a misdemeanor charge of soliciting a crime against nature in District Court.

Thomas Culbreth McCall of 420 Alpine Drive was charged July 12 for offering to commit oral sex to Undercover Officer G.A. Pulley of the Wilmington Police Department. McCall was sentenced to ten days community service and to pay $137 court cost. Prayer for judgement in the case was continued. District Court Judge Elton Tucker presided over the case.

No jail sentence was prescribed, but in the event that a similar charge is made the case can be reopened.

According to Dr. Robert Byington, head of the UNCW English Department, McCall has a reputation of being reliable and helpful to students.

"Many instructors speak about spending long hours with students, but Tom really does spend a lot of time advising them (students)."

Byington could not comment on whether McCall's employment status would or would not be affected.

William Calloway, UNCW Director of Personnel, said Friday that he knew nothing of the case and had no comment.

Acquaintance Rape

Part 2 of a Seahawk Series

Rape Victims Lose Self Confidence, Trust

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Acquaintance rape is the most psychologically damaging experience a woman can go through.

Acquaintance rape is defined as a person being forced to have sexual intercourse by someone they know. Acquaintance rape is also referred to as date rape.

The difference between acquaintance rape and stranger rape is whether or not the victim and the assailant are engaged in casual social interaction.

A woman who is a victim of acquaintance rape feels that she can never trust her own judgement again, said Linda Shaddix, a counselor at the UNCW Student Development Center.

"A woman's whole levels of trust and judgement are at risk," Ms. Shaddix said. "Being a victim of stranger rape is enough of a terrible experience for a woman."

But "being raped by someone you know changes the focus of fear," she said.

"It makes it difficult for counseling," she said.

Rape—acquaintance and stranger—makes a woman feel that she has lost control over herself and her life. It is the goal of counseling to help a woman gain back control over herself and her life after being raped.

"Rape is never the victim's fault," said Patricia L. Leonard, UNCW's Associate Dean of Students.

"There are a lot of mixed messages and mythology about rape," Dean Leonard said. "Rape is a crime motivated by violence. It is a need to have power, to control and to dominate a person," she said.

"Rape is not a need to have sex," she said. Dean Leonard and Linda Shaddix discuss education the key to changing society's perceptions about acquaintance and stranger rape.

"I think we are getting more educated," Dean Leonard said.

Many victims of acquaintance rape agonize over what they could have done differently. Despite the fact that the role of women in society has greatly changed, it is still hard for women to be cautious and skeptical while on a date.

"Most acquaintance rapes occur between the senior year of high school and the freshman year of college," said Dean Leonard. The majority of the women who are victims of acquaintance rape are between the ages of 17 and 24.

Acquaintance rape typically occurs between the first three dates. "A lot of acquaintance rapes are premeditated," Dean Leonard said.

See Rape pg. 3

Task Force Provides Services For Victims

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Writer

Imagine this: She is a naive freshmen and he is a suave junior. They sit next to each other three times a week in psychology class. She is friendly and he seems nice. They run into each other at a friend's party. After a few drinks she decides to leave because of an eight o'clock class the next day. He offers to drive her home. "It's okay. He seems like a nice guy," she thinks. When they drive up to her apartment she gets out of the car and so does he. "Oh well, he just wants to walk me to the door," she thinks. She unlocks the door and turns to tell him good night, but instead he walks past her into the empty apartment. She walks in behind him. Before she can think of how to get rid of him without being rude, he gently, but forcefully, pulls her close to him and presses his lips onto hers. She finally manages to pull away and breathlessly tells him to please leave. He misinterprets the tears in her eyes as hesitation. He pulls her down onto the couch amidst cries of "NO! STOP!"

It's easy to imagine what happens next. The above scene or one similar to it is familiar to at least one out of five college coeds. The average age of a victim of date rape is 18 years old.

"The average age of women we treat is 16-20 years, although the ages we have treated range from three months to 97 years old," said Kim Weston, a counselor for the Rape Task Force in Wilmington.

The Wilmington Rape Task Force serves approximately 10 victims a month, with the exception being July and August when the Rape Task Force served 15 victims a month, said Ms. Weston.

The monthly statistics apply to women. The Rape Task Force has never helped an adult man, but it has helped young boys, she said.

"Rape is a crime of violence, not a crime of sex," stated Ms. Weston.

If a woman is forced to have sex against her will, whether the man puts a gun to her head or just holds her down and scares her-it's still rape.

In some states, like New York, rapists can plead sexual misconduct and receive with a much lighter sentence if they did not use and weapons or excessive violence.

"North Carolina has no such law," said Lt. Cyphens of the Wilmington Police Department. "North Carolina has a rape law," he said.

North Carolina defines rape as the penetration of the vagina by the male sex organ whether it be against the will of the male or female.

College Women Losing Battle

College Press Service - College women nationwide are entering their second school year without Title IX, and women's groups -- missing their best tool for fighting campus sexual harassment and for getting equal funding -- say it's getting harder to force schools to pay attention to them.

In June 1984, the United States Supreme Court effectively gutted Title IX of the Higher Education Amendments of 1972, which said colleges would lose their federal funds if they discriminated on the basis of gender.

Women's groups had used Title IX to force colleges to adopt ways for women to appeal campus sex harassment cases, to hire and grant tenure to female faculty members and to begin funding women's athletics equally to men's sports.

All that's over now, some say. "In funding women's athletics and in sexual harassment cases, if a school has no policy in place (already), students in most states have no (legal) recourse," contends Bernice Sandler, head of the Project on the Status and Education of Women, which, in turn, is funded by the Association of American Colleges.

"We've lost an enormous amount of ground but, as yet, we don't even know how much we've actually lost," says Ellen Vargyas, an attorney for the National Women's Law Center in Washington, D.C.

The Supreme Court's ruling was so vague, she adds, that the U.S. Dept. of Education, which is supposed to make sure colleges don't discriminate, has pretty much given up trying to enforce Title IX.

Dept. of Education officials, however, deny the charge.

In the 1984 Grove City College case, the court ruled that only the campus program that directly got federal funds had to swear it didn't discriminate against women.

Consequently, if an athletic department or an English department that discriminated against women didn't themselves receive federal funds, they are immune from Title IX's scope.

Indeed, most campus programs have become immune.

The vast majority of federal funds come to campuses in the form of "block grants," which campus administrators can divvy up among various programs.

"Most federal money is not directed toward specific programs," Sandler notes.

And after schools distribute the federal money, the funding is very hard to trace, Vargyas adds.

Sandler contends women's sports have suffered the most during the post-Grove City era because "little (federal money) goes to athletic programs, and athletic scholarships are not considered financial aid."

As a result, progress in giving women more athletic opportunities -- and more athletic scholarships -- has slowed to a crawl in many places, she says.

In 1979, for example, Tina Morrison and five other women athletes sued West Texas State University, claiming it violated Title IX by making them ride vans to away games when their male counterparts flew, paying their coaches less than male coaches, with giving them only one uniform -- compared to the men's two -- to wear with jamming four people -- compared to the men's two -- into a room while on the road.

While Morrison, now a coach at an Amarillo, Texas, high school, says the suit scared WTSU officials "and that helped some" in creating better conditions at the campus, a federal court dismissed the case for the second time this summer.

Women coaches, Morrison reports, now get paid better, females get spare uniforms, and the university sometimes lets women's teams fly to away games.

It's far from equality, however. "Nationwide," Vargyas says, "millions of dollars are given to athletic departments and athletes, but women get only a fraction of what men get."

"At Temple University," she adds, "nearly $2 million a year is given in athletic scholarships. Enormous benefits are being denied to women there."

But the Dept. of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR) claims most schools were in total compliance with Title IX before the Grove City decision.

"Grove City hasn't changed the attitude of most schools," says Gary Curran, the OCR's spokesman. "Most were pretty much in compliance (with the law) before, and continue as such now."

Vargyas charges the OCR isn't trying. "Title IX is not being aggressively enforced. (The Education Dept.) is taking the narrowest view of the ruling, and the ruling was very vague to begin with."

Curran disagrees. His office investigates all complaints, "but it's usually up to the schools to raise the question of jurisdiction. And, of the huge number of complaints we receive, most are related to elementary and secondary school issues rather than higher education."

The OCR also conducts random compliance reviews among colleges.

With all the uncertainty about what the court mean and whether the Education Dept. will act, many UNC-W History Department. is sponsoring a special program entitled, "John F. Kennedy: Great President or Media Myth?" The program is free and open to the general public.

The program, is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, November 6 in Bryan Auditorium (Room 100 of Morton Hall) at UNC-W. It will begin with the showing of a 25-minute film, Kennedy: The Years of Charisma which will present a short history of the Kennedy years.

Professor Robert Brent Toplin of the History Department will moderate a discussion of the film involving Professors John Haley of the History Department and Roger Lowery of the Political Science Department.

The program is open to the general public as well as students, and there is no charge.

Padgett Offers Seminar

Dr. Harry G. Padgett, Professor of Human Development and Psychology at Appalachian State University, will present a workshop, Dreams: A Journey into the Unconscious, Nov. 8 at Church of the Servant, 4925 Oriole Drive, Wilmington.

Dr. Padgett, who has conducted numerous seminars and teaches three different classes at Appalachian State in Jungian psychology, is a Jungian Psychotherapist and Licensed Psychologist. He serves as Staff Psychologist for the Agape-Onoma Psychological Center, Inc. in Wilkesboro.

Sponsored by the Cape Fear Jung Society, the dream workshop will be conducted Friday, Nov. 7, 7:30 - 9:30 p.m. and Saturday, Nov. 8, 9:30 a.m. - 3:00 p.m. Cost for the workshop is $20 per person and $30 per couple ($18 and $28 for Jung Society members).

Dr. Padgett will bring three films on Jung to be shown outside the session times: included are "In Search of Soul," and "67,000 Dreams," interviews with Carl Jung; and "The Myths That Heal." Myers-Briggs testing will be provided for all interested participants included in the workshop cost. Dr. Padgett will conduct individual one-hour sessions Friday, Nov. 7 before the workshop begins at a cost of $50.00 per session.

Next Semester, Put Out to Sea

The unique SEAmester program allows students to earn 16 credits in 9 unforgettable weeks sailing the Atlantic & Caribbean aboard the 85-foot schooner Apollodore.

In the last 10 years, more than 400 undergraduates from 80 campuses across the country have earned credits in marine biology, coastal ecology, ichthyology, oceanography, navigation, and maritime history and literature—all the while sailing the tall ship and putting in at such ports of call as Nantucket, Mystic, Sag Harbor, Newport News, Beaufort, Miami, Rum Cay, Santo Domingo and St. Thomas.

SEAmester is part of the renowned Marine Science program at the Southampton Campus' of Long Island University. There are still some openings for the cruise starting in March, 1987, but space is limited so act now. Return the coupon or call (516) 283-4000 ext. 117.

"Victims are often raped by people they know," Ms. Weston said. "Usually the attacker is the same race as the person he attacks."

The Wilmington Rape Task Force provides many free services for rape victims, Ms. Weston said.

"If the first contact (we receive) comes from the hospital where the victim is being treated, we go there and provide support for her."

Ms. Weston said. "If she decides to prosecute we will continue to counsel her and stand by her during all proceedings."

"Sometimes extensive counseling is needed and we have two Wilmington psychologists we can call," she said.

"If the victim notifies the authorities within 72 hours of the attack, $500 is put aside for the victim to pay for hospital bills and doctor bills," she said.

"The Task Force services are free, but the psychologist can receive payment out of the $500 if there is any left over."

NBC's newsmagazine "1986" interviewed college men for a segment on date rape and found that over 50-percent of the college men interviewed thought women wanted sex if: (1) he pays for the dinner, movies, ect., (2) she asks him out, (3) they end up at his or her place.

"All society is at fault (for rape)," said Dr. Andrea Parrot, a psychologist and professor of Human Sexuality at Syracuse University.

"In the 1950's everybody knew what would happen on the first date, the second date and third date and what wouldn't happen until marriage," Dr. Parrot said.

"Today there are no clear rules," she said.

"College women are more likely to be victims of acquaintance rape than stranger rape," she said. Surveys conducted at colleges around the country show that 17-to-20-percent of coeds have had sexual intercourse against their will.

One survey conducted at a mid-western university revealed that 100-percent of the men surveyed admitted to having forced a woman to have sex and that they knew the victim.

Victims of acquaintance rape are more likely not report the crime, Dean Leonard said.

Fear of not being believed is the major reason why most acquaintance rapes go unreported.

"He's in my class, he's a pretty popular guy, whose going to believe me and how can I face my friends are some of the reasons why the majority of acquaintance rapes go unreported," Ms. Shaddix.

"Other reasons as to why acquaintance rapes go unreported is because the victims don't realize its rape, or they know, but are ashamed or they are scared to go to somebody to talk about what happened," Dean Leonard.

Many victims of acquaintance and stranger rape try to forget about what happened. The experience may stay buried for awhile, but it will creep back at some point.

Counseling is the key in helping a woman recover from the experience of rape, Dean Leonard.

Many women are afraid to report being raped because it means facing the rapist in court.

Reliving the rape in court is called "the second rape," Dean Leonard said.

A student who is a victim of acquaintance or stranger rape is not required to file charges, Dean Leonard said. Getting the victim medical and psychological help is the main concern, she said. A victim will not be forced to press charges if she does not want to.

In the end the decision whether or not to press charges lies with the victim.

Rape Knows No Guidelines

By Kim Wallace
Staff Writer

Rape is becoming a common word that is seen in newspapers and on TV about every day. In 1985 there were 1,450 rapes reported in N.C. alone. That's one rape occurring every six hours. Forty-eight percent of the victims were age 20 and below, 15% were age 15 and below.

Rape and sexual assault are universal crimes against women. They are violent acts committed against a woman's will, involving threat or the use of force. The definition of rape varies depending upon the source. But the common denominator among all definitions of rape includes rape as sexual intercourse without consent, mainly by force or deception.

Rape is a humiliating and terrible experience that can happen to anyone, anytime, any place. Victims of being assaulted can react in different ways. Some want to cry, some want to show their anger, and some will not show any kind of emotion. Even though it may be difficult for the victim, she may want to discuss it with family or friends. If she feels that they may blame her or that she might upset them she can call the Rape Task Force of Crisis Line/Open House and ask for a Rape Crisis Counselor.

Even though most of us never think of actually being raped we still need to face the possibility that one day we might be. If you are raped there are several things you need to do. 1) Do not bathe, change clothes, or even comb your hair. You may be destroying evidence should you decide to prosecute. 2) Contact the Rape Task Force of Crisis Line/Open House. A Rape Victim Advocate will always be available to meet with you at the hospital. Call 763-3695 or 1-800-672-2903. 3) Get medical attention, including testing for V.D. and pregnancy. 4) Report the crime to the law enforcement. Reporting the assault does not mean that you have to prosecute. You may file an anonymous report through the Rape Task Force. 5) If you need assistance with the medical costs as a result of the rape, contact the Rape Task Force about the coverage under the Rape Victims Assistance Program. In order to receive assistance you must have reported the rape, attempted rape, sexual assault, or attempted sexual assault within 72 hours of the incident.

The longer you put off telling someone the more chances are that they won't be able to find the culprit. Some techniques and tips for self defense are as follows: 1) You have the right to say no. 2) Establish your limits, make your boundaries known. 3) Trust your instincts and act on your feelings. If you are uncomfortable and feel you are being violated, say no or get away with force and conviction. Speak loudly and be prepared to follow through with physical means. 4) If your verbal warnings don't work, it's time for physical force. You should:

*Run if possible or fight back if you can't run away.

*Use your fingers to poke eyes.

*Use four fingers (excluding thumb), jab them directly against the Adam's apple.

*Cup your hand and clap it hard over the offender's eyes.

*Bend his pinky finger back as hard as possible.

You may think that some of these self defense techniques seem slightly gross, but if it's a matter of saving your life use them.

Tax Courses Offered for UNCW

WILMINGTON—A seminar for CPA's centering on the 1986 tax law changes for individuals and corporations will be offered Monday, December 29 from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union by UNC Wilmington's department of accountancy and Office of Special Programs.

Instructor will be Dr. Zoel W. Daughtry, associate professor in the school of accounting at Mississippi State University.

Topics will include changes in the tax forms; regulations of Tax Reform Act 1986 that will affect 1986 filings; court decisions and IRS filings; substantiation of business use of autos, light trucks, computers and other "listed property"; auto loans; contributions to athletic funds; and tax planning for 1987.

Daughtry teaches courses in taxation and financial accounting and is a tax consultant and researcher for a large regional Mississippi CPA firm.

The seminar offers 8 hours of CPE credit. Fee is $115 and registration deadline is December 22. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs.

Aids

Keeling also points out that a lack of education regarding AIDS has been a major stumbling block.

The removal of condom advertisements from television was also pointed out in the press conference.

"The American reluctance to discuss birth control in a direct and mature manner is only now

"I really enjoyed listening to him," said a 19-year-old freshman. The young woman had attended two of the seminars.

A 22-year-old male junior remarked, "I was really impressed...Keeling is a very intelligent man. The lectures really filled me in on a lot of stuff I didn't know..."

Keeling is married and has two children.

Hecklers were heard outside Room 100 at one point Friday during the talk...

starting to fade away. The word condom can now be discussed by 'nice people' in 'nice places.'"

Keeling's lectures here at the University were well attended by the student body. More than two hundred people were present at the meeting held Friday morning in Room 100 of the University Union.

There was a brief period when hecklers outside the meeting room were heard to be making comments about the lecture, but for the most part, the lectures were well received.

Parking Officers Creating Problem for UNCW

Ahh, the never ending problem of parking at UNCW.

Our overzealous (but well meaning) parking people are creating a public relations problem for the University.

An unidentified donor was ticketed one night a while back. She had just made a well-needed contribution to the school, and as the saying goes, was she mad.

Anyone who is a guest on this campus need only mail or take an undeserved ticket to the parking office, along with a note saying why they don't deserve the ticket. While this is on the tickets that are presently being handed out now, it is not very well known in the community.

While the parking office can't just designate twenty or thirty spaces in each parking lot as visitor slots (might encourage students to not by parking stickers), more spaces in guest frequented areas (Trask, Kenan Auditorium) would help.

As it is, people are getting afraid to attend basketball games or concerts because they might get a $15 parking ticket.

Not good for university and community relations, but doggone good for the parking office cash register.

The Shame of America's Sexuality

The fact that Dr. Richard Keeling's seminars on AIDS this past week were as well attended as they were shows that the United States is finally getting over its shyness about the discussion of birth control.

While AIDS was initially confined to homosexuals, it has now spread into the heterosexual society and shows no hope of being stopped in the near future.

Apart from AIDS, the lack of sexual education about any forms of birth control is beginning to show even more than before. Witness the reports printed in this paper a few weeks back concerning the fact that as of October 7 there were seven young women on this campus that had tested positive for being pregnant.

There is no program in the North Carolina public schools at present that provides more than even rudimentary information about human sexuality.

The instructor at a high school I attended would not allow the boys and girls in the same class, and she would not mention the words "penis" or "condom" in class. A student who asked why she refused to discuss these subjects in class was punished with a three day term of "In School Suspension".

How can school officials make decisions concerning the welfare of thousands of school children and completely ignore the fact that the kids have to rely on their college or university (or the streets)? How can parents honestly say that they don't want their children being "taught about...you know" in school? Do the parents and school officials prefer that the children and teenagers in their care learn about venereal diseases, AIDS (which is a virus), and teenage pregnancy through experience?

With thousands of dollars being spent to help younger children avoid abuse, maybe a few could be spent on the older children to assure at least the basics of protection and self-health.

Isn't it about time we stopped being ashamed of our sexuality?

As the Mud is Drying...

By the time this newspaper is out, it will all be over.

The relentless campaign of candidate versus candidate on everything from county commissioner to the United States Senate will be over, finished until the next time elections roll around.

Little old ladies will be ignored for a while; the only barbecue that will be cooked will be at regular family get togethers, or church socials and the like.

Fewer small towns and universities will be visited by a smiling man who has one hand in the air waving and the other shaking every other hand that can be found.

Beauty queens will have fewer chances to parade around and smile, and you won't be disturbed in the middle of your dinner to answer a phone asking for "just a few minutes of your time to have your opinion on Senator Whosis..."

What will we do without television commercials reminding us how Representative Smith voted against children's lunches at school while Senator Brown was a real honest hardworking man who grew up on a farm in the country and is concerned about what you are concerned with.

Let's hope we don't all suffer from post-election withdrawal symptoms.

Rainbow's End

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

Once every two weeks, Chuck and Marlow show up for a round of volunteer work at the Children's Hospital in Denver, Colorado.

Together, they walk up into the front of the hospital building, through the wide, double glass doors and go into a dressing room where they don their hospital uniforms before going into the stairwell to make the climb to the fourth floor of the Children's Hospital.

When the door marked fourth floor on the stairwell's landing is opened for them, Chuck and Marlow get right to work. Walking down the hall of oncology unit, Chuck and Marlow collect kisses and hugs from just about everybody they meet.

Chuck and Marlow sound like a couple of regular hospital volunteers, don't they?

Well, they're not. Chuck is a German Shepherd and Marlow is a miniature poodle. They're not quite exactly what one would expect to find working in the sterile surroundings of a hospital environment.

Along with Chuck and Marlow, 19 other canines and their owners are participants in the Denver Children's Hospital's unique Pet Prescription Program that was developed to aid in the treatment of hospitalized children. The Pet Prescription Program at the Denver Children's Hospital is unique because it is the only one of its kind in the United States.

While the idea of using animals to supplement health care is not an especially new concept, especially in the fields of nursing home care and mental health, the idea and acceptance of allowing dogs to visit children in the sterile environment of a hospital on a regular basis is new. And like most ideas in the field of hospital health care, it took years before even a test pilot of the Pet Prescription Program was approved and allowed at the Denver Children's Hospital.

OXFORD: An Unforgettable Experience

By Anne Simpson

Oxford, England, is a particularly evocative and significant place for me since it stands for ideals that I value: education, erudition, and knowledge. The respect for knowledge and the quest for intellectual achievement are traits that I consider most significant to the civilization process. For this reason and others Oxford has a particular attraction for me.

It is fitting that Oxford is located literally in the heart of England, geographically, because England prides itself on being such a civilized country, and with some justification. And much of our heritage comes from the centuries-old traditions of England, linking it strongly with our present culture.

Oxford looks almost too picturesque to be real, with its venerable, ornate buildings and its gothic spires everywhere, always pointing skyward, leading the eye upward to ideals, to the best that human beings can be.

The University is actually composed of thirty-nine separate colleges; most, particularly the older colleges, are located in the middle of the town, but there is no centralized campus as there is in our universities. Each college has its own enclosed courtyard and a gatekeeper to keep tourists from wandering in at all hours and disturbing the scholars and dons.

The students even look preoccupied with their studies; as they walk to their exams wearing their mortarboard caps and short gowns over somber colored clothes, one can almost see their mental processes wiring across their faces.

There is such a pervasive atmosphere of study that the closed and guarded colleges give an impression, not of shutting the world out so much as protecting the highly charged intellectual atmosphere within, as the high-voltage equipment in a power plant is protected from outsiders.

Most of the colleges were originally church schools built in a time when the ideals of erudition and religious faith were closely linked, a tradition that goes back to the monks in monasteries guarding ancient manuscripts from the Goths and Vandals who overran the Roman Empire. Oxford was a meeting-place, market, and cultural center during post-Roman days. Its rich, long-established traditions make Americans and American universities seem so brash and Johnny-come-lately by comparison.

On my first full day in Oxford I toured the central part of town on foot, guided by a knowledgeable lady who had written a guide book on Oxford. It was snowing fine cold flakes of snow that looked like a dusting of powdered sugar over the scenery. The colleges collectively reminded me of a huge wedding cake, ornate and sweet to the eye.

All bundled up in hooded coats and muffler, I was still cold. My hands and feet were numb, but my mind was bogged nearly numb by the experience of Oxford. My eyes were barely big enough to take it all in. The chill air was part of the stimulating atmosphere; I cannot imagine such a place as Oxford being either torrid or torpid.

"I became interested in allowing dogs to visit children in the hospital ten years ago after the three month coma my son was in following a car wreck," said Fern Bechtel, director of the Denver Children's Hospital's Association of Volunteers and Patient Representatives, and creator of the Pet Prescription Program.

"When I took him home, I noticed that he seemed to respond to the family dog," Ms. Bechtel said. "And throughout his recovery, they were close."

"Forming the idea that dogs could aid in the recovery of hospitalized children based on her observations of her son and the family dog, Ms. Bechtel took her idea of allowing dogs to visit children in the hospital to the Medical Director of the Denver Children's Hospital.

What followed after her meeting with the Medical Director was nine years of gathering information and meetings.

The main concern about allowing canines to visit children in the hospital was the fear of disease, Ms. Bechtel said. Working with the information she gathered about dogs used in nursing homes, Ms. Bechtel, along with veterinarian and hospital volunteer Jan Facinelli, the Denver Area Veterinary Society and Children's Hospital Medical Board met with the Children's Hospital's Infection Control Committee to work out the guidelines that would allow canines into the hospital for visits with ill children.

"Dogs carry fewer germs than other pets like cats," Ms. Bechtel said. Due to the fact that dogs do carry few germs, they were more acceptable to the Hospital Infection Control Committee.

Once the objections about infection had been overcome and the guidelines for the program had

All of the colleges were impressive, but my most memorable experience was seeing the Bodleian Library. In it are copies of every book published in England and many old and rare volumes. It seemed as if Knowledge itself were housed in the buildings of the Bodleian.

I went first to the public part of the library in the old Divinity School, a stone chapel dating back to the fourteenth century. I was told that Henry the Eighth had it converted from Catholic school to a livestock market when he established the Church of England.

A number of priceless volumes were on display in glass cases in this old chapel; among them was the volume of unsigned poetry in which an early Shakespeare poem was discovered. Also, there was a copy of the Magna Carta dated 1220. I inhaled this atmosphere of aged wisdom and learning, even feeling that I absorbed it through my pores.

Stepped in this atmosphere, I went after a while to the anteroom, a souvenir shop, where serendipity intervened. After seeing several people ascend a staircase at one end of the shop, I asked the guard where it led. He told me it went up to Duke Humphrey's library and the Reading Room and that I could get permission to go there by showing my student ID. I did and entered an old part of the library dating from the Fifteenth century, its ceiling painted colorfully with a pattern of books and Latin words.

The shelves were full of very old leather-bound volumes which my fingers itched to touch, but I resisted. I could see, beyond a banister, students seated between the stacks, going about their everyday business of studying in these revered surroundings. I barely breathed for fear of disturbing the aura.

How marvelous it was to see tradition and learning, two of the cornerstones of civilization, so aptly preserved here. There was an almost palpable atmosphere of Knowledge that is surely found nowhere else on earth; certainly no other place could have the exact same atmosphere, made up of erudition from all over the world and of Britishness, that bulwark of Things of Value. Here, most of all, in the Bodleian Library, was the air electric.

If Oxford stands for learning, then its Bodleian Library must be the nucleus of all that Oxford is.

I want to go back, back to the dreaming spires gleaming in the sunlight, back to the electric hush of study, back to the venerable buildings and warm old pubs of Oxford. It will be like coming home.

Fort is Hot With 'The Town Clock Burning'

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

UNCW Director of Creative Writing Charles Fort has been winning acclaim for his recently published book of poetry "The Town Clock Burning."

(Laurinburg: St. Andrews Press, 1985, 53 pp., $7.95) He was also recently awarded the Young Alumnus Award at Siena Heights College, his alma mater in Adrian, Michigan. This award is given in recognition for professional achievements.

His poetry has been described as "innovative" and rich in imagery, giving a dreamlike impression.

"The Town Clock Burning" was 15 years in the creation, according to Fort. His method of writing is indicative of his highly imaginative approach to poetry — his poems come from freewrites inspired by his dreams or from titles he writes before writing the poems.

Fort is from New Britain, Conn. He went to school in Michigan and received his MFA from Bowling Green State University.

He taught in Hartford, then became poet-in-residence at Xavier University in New Orleans where he founded the "Xavier Review."

In addition to his duties as Director of Creative Writing at the University, he is director of the "Wilmington Review," a literary magazine dealing with Wilmington and the campus community.

He is also coordinating the poetry readings that will be part of Montage, the arts festival to be held in Wilmington next January.

Charming, low-key and sincere, Fort has a freshness of manner that reminds one of his poetry. He is modest, saying that "The Town Clock Burning" is "a nice, mere collection."

But critics have praised it in glowing terms, and it was listed on the Writer's Choice section of the New York Times, a selection of outstanding contemporary literature. "The Town Clock Burning" is now sold out.

"The Town Clock Burning" begins appropriately — since Fort has received the O'Henry Award — with a poem called "O'Henry at his desk" that says:

"We want to read how a just and miniature world fell into his hands..."

"We acknowledge the writer and the gift a story leaves to history..."

These lines contain much of his philosophy of creative writing: his desire to communicate, to leave a message behind for all people.

Fort says he writes "to communicate to the world at large." He wants his poems to draw people into them to "stay there a while...to teach people to sit still." And they do; they are thought-provoking and richly imaginative.

"The job of a writer is simply to write," he states with a smile, adding that a writer has to keep sending out work and getting rejection slips to achieve success.

He feels that a writer has to learn to accept rejection and to revise his work when necessary to get the best possible result.

His own methods of writing are highly individual; he says his poetry comes from his dreams.

"I have full pages of prose under my eyes" during dreams, he says. The prose comes next in his writing process, as he freewrites about his dreams. He develops his poems from these freewrites.

Fort is a prolific writer; he says he "writes something every day," much of it in his office.

His poetry has autobiographical and political elements, and he says he likes to write about all subjects, however controversial.

There is a message that drives him to write, he admits.

"There are people being neglected and used for what they believe; something has to be done. My poems can at least acknowledge some of the suffering. We live in difficult times; there is a contemporary urgency from the threat of nuclear war and environmental disaster...on the other side are social inadequacies, problems of communication."

In his poetry, he says, he tries to bring about understanding, to gain self knowledge through art. His idea is to take time to create rather than destroy.

He asserts that we must find other ways to determine what is valuable in our lives other than the material. And he feels that our children should be our priority rather than, as he says, "MBA's and gold coin."

But, he says, "who is prepared for such a long battle." Ghandi and Martin Luther King have been major influences in his thinking, he says.

He likes knowing that his poetry "affects people I've never met, that it will always be there for someone to look at."

"The Town Clock Burning" is Fort's first book; he has written two others and is working on a fourth.

His third book is a collection of sonnets about his daughter Claire, aged 20 months. Their style is both "traditional and contemporary...more accessible in terms of form and subject," Fort says.

Much of his writing is prose poetry, which is a form found in French literature. He is presently negotiating to have his second book, which is all sonnets, translated into French.

Fort has been on the faculty of UNCW for five years. As Director of the Creative Writing Program, he says he has had the satisfaction of helping "a lot of talented young writers" and has sent three on to graduate programs in poetry.

Teaching, he says, is often a two-way street. "I teach my students and they teach me."

"Addict" Portrays Tragedies of Drugs

The Community Arts Center and 3-G Productions present "Addict," a one-act drama portraying the tragedy of drug addiction and death among America's young people. "Addict" will be performed at 8 p.m. in the Community Arts Center, 2nd and Orange St., Nov. 7-9. Performances are free but reservations must be made. Seats can be reserved by calling 341-7860.

The program is a series of monologs relating 'complete' experiences with drugs — not just the beginnings of use and addiction but the tragedy of drug related deaths.

"Addict" was written by Jerome McDonough who recently won critical acclaim for "Juvie," a teen drama dealing with the cause and effect of juvenile crime.

This is the first production in a series of "awareness plays" focusing on conflicts faced in the adolescent community. Following productions include "Juvie," and "Ragdoll," a portrait on child abuse.

"Under The Shade Tree" Benefits Kids

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Most of us have been fortunate enough throughout our lives to have had at least one special present awaiting us on every Christmas morning. It might not have been exactly what we wished for or as much as we pleaded for, but it was something given with love. Imagine for a moment the ache your heart would feel if there had been no gifts. Even now though we are mature young adults the sight of no present would have damaging effects. There are very many children who are unable to experience the thrill of opening gifts during the celebration of Christmas. Imagine the feeling of returning to school at age 9 or 10 and hearing other kids tell of their many gifts while you received no gift at all.

Each year the Salvation Army sponsors a Christmas Cheer Program which enables some needy children to receive presents at Christmas. This year in order to aid the Salvation Army's program a special concert has been arranged to collect more presents for the unfortunate children in this area. The show is called "Under

The Shade Tree" and was organized by Trish Snyder, development director for public radio WHQR, and Julie Gibson, an intern and communications major at UNCW. The program will be sponsored by Friends of Public Radio, Thalian Hall performing arts group, and Cape Fear musicians society. Over twenty Jazz and Folk musicians will be donating their talents to this cause. Santa Claus and his holiday elves will be present along with Mayor Berry Williams.

The show will be held on Monday, November 16 from 4-6 p.m. at Thalian Hall. Admission is simply a new present for a needy child. Anything from a yo-yo to a bicycle will be accepted. People of all ages are invited and parents are urged to bring their children.

This concert is an effort to help out children of the community and to prove that the arts group along with the citizens of Wilmington are willing to donate their time for a good cause.

For any information concerning this benefit please call

WHQR Radio at 343-1640.

Listed are some of the performers who will appear at "Under The Shade Tree":

Jack Doll in Concert Nov. 9

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc. is pleased to present Jack Doll in an organ concert at Thalian Hall on Sunday, November 9, at 3:00 p.m.

Mr. Doll is a renowned theatre organist and official organist at the Emory Theatre, one of the last all-silent movie houses in the United States. In addition, Jack is the organist for the Cincinnati Reds and Northern Kentucky University's basketball team.

THE JACK DOLL CONCERT will consist of old favorites such "Hurray for Hollywood," "My Funny Valentine," and a medley of Big Band hits like "Sardius," and "Green Eye." Baseball music and

Kathleen Turner Shines as "Peggy Sue"

By Anne Simpson

Staff Writer

Imagine having the chance to do it all again, to go back and change your life, knowing what you know now.

Appealing idea isn't it?

That's what makes this movie so entertaining. We can all identify with Kathleen Turner as someone who goes back to the past and has a chance to correct her mistakes.

It all starts when Peggy Sue, a sadder-but-wiser woman going through a miserable divorce, goes to her 25th high school reunion and is transported "back in time" (doesn't that phrase sound familiar?) to her teenage years.

She is satisfyingly more self-confident with the overbearing boyfriend who becomes her husband, and she deepens her relationship with two other boys she always wished she had known better.

The film could have been lighter, but it took some side trips into sentimentality. Peggy Sue's reunion with her parents, sister and grandparents is distractingly affecting.

And the viewer's willing suspension of disbelief is stretched to the breaking point when Peggy Sue tells her grandparents about her time trip and they take it all in stride—it seems they know all about time travel. Then Grandpa takes Peggy Sue to his lodge — the M.O.O.E. Lodge, yet — where the members have been waiting for her, the time traveler, for a long time.

Come on, now. Still, it is pretty good light entertainment. At least it does not get pretentious and pretend to be art. An interesting note: Peggy Sue greets her boyfriend's dog, calling him Elvis. The boyfriend replies, "No, this is Ajax. Elvis is dead."

Yes, he sure is.

Crocodile Dundee a Bloody Good Show

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

Hooray for Crocodile Dundee! Thank Hollywood that someone has finally decided to make a purely fun film, without exposing, as Joe Bob Briggs the Redneck Reviewer once put it, "forty-eight breasts, fourteen buttocks, three orgies, and six drunken parties."

It goes like this. Little rich girl who is reporter for Daddy's New York Based Newsday is on assignment in Australia. She hears fabulous tales about a crocodile hunter named Dundee who dragged himself a hundred miles through the bush to safety in the local pub. She arranges to go on safari with this remarkable man, and that is where the fun begins.

Her first meeting with Crocodile Mick Dundee is in a dusty little outback town where Dundee's safari company is based. The pub is reminiscent of any redneck bar you can find in any town in the United States, and so are several of the types in there. Down (under?) vests, big cowboy hats, beer bellies, even a plate sized belt buckle.

Boys turn into jacklighters, staring around on their four wheel drives and shooting innocent kangaroos "For the hell of it, myate." They come to grips with a high powered rifle bearing kangaroo who (courtesy of a resourceful Paul Hogan who convinces them to go home to mame.

After more than one misadventure with Dundee in the bus — including the obligatory swimsuit scene — little rich girl invites Dundee back to New York with her. Dundee, eventually warms to the idea.

Then Paul Hogan shows why he is one of the hottest things to come out of, Aussie-land for years.

Upon arriving in the Big Apple, Dundee decides that, with five million people in the town, they must sure like each other alot.

And when they prove this to be untrue, he sets out to prove them wrong.

He resolutely defends a pair of young ladies from their pim — I mean employer; he shares his bottle of whiskey with the first bum he sees.

Naive Mick refuses to believe that a beautiful young woman is not what she seems until she proves to be a him instead of a her.

All in all, Hogan shined throughout the show. His charm, and/hominess (not to be confused with hokiness) Melted the hearts of all he met in the big apple. I had no problem with him or the unnamed chaffer, who was the first black man Mick had ever met outside of a tribe. (said Mick, "you sure ya not with the Babas from the other territory?" Said the chaffer, "Naw, man. I was with the Warlord from Harlem.")

My only problem was Linda Kalowaki.

The lady is by far a very attractive one; however, I have met a many a reported an have yet to meet one who shopped in Sak's Fifth Avenue.

While my experience in the bus is limited to a few overlong came trips in the wilds of Sampson County, I do know that nobody wears a teeny-tiny swimsuit, and flip-flop sandals in a dry desert area where large snakes and insects abound.

She did a bit of stretching and breast-hinting, for the most part I considered her believable.

Some of the Australian Scenes — the mineral springs especially — were breathtaking enough that I thought of calling my travel agent.

Go to see Crocodile . . . You'll enjoy it.

G'day myate.

About Last Night - Good Entertainment

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

About Last Night is the scenario of the 80's. Guy picks up girl in bar and the evening ends in casual sex as does the depth of the relationship. Except for this guy is Rob Lowe, very unlike your usual bar room babe, and Demi Moore turns out to be more than a one night stand for him. They meet, typically, at a bar one night and end up fooling around informally for a few months. Eventually they move in together.

The story line revolves around their struggle to maintain a meaningful relationship under the same roof. The movie contains some funny along with serious scenes that are very identifiable to modern love life. Though a lot of real life events do not end as theirs the movie is worth seeing for the realistic portrayals of the complexities faced in a serious relationship. Both Rob Lowe and Demi Moore fit their roles and they complement each other in the movie.

REM, Let's Active in Concert Nov. 16th

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

A line in one of the legendary "Pink Panther" movies inspired the title of rock group R.E.M.'s last album, "Lifes Rich Pageant". The infamous Inspector Clouseau coined the phrase while philosophically accepting a fall in a pond as "Just part of life's rich pageant", and R.E.M.'s members adopted a similar attitude about the perils of life on the road.

When their fourth album was released earlier this year, the Athens, Georgia based band decided to name the album after the philosophy they had adopted to accept equipment failures and other mishaps suffered while on tour.

R.E.M.'s version of jamm'n' rock music will be floating through the air at UNCW's Trask Coliseum on Nov. 16 when the band and opening group Let's Active stop in Wilmington as part of their fall concert tour. Both groups are on the road promoting newly-released albums put out by the same label, I.R.S. Records.

The two groups have a relationship that goes back at least six years. Mitch Easter, the lead guitarist/vocalist for Let's Active, oversaw the first R.E.M. recordings. He also co-produced the band's first single and subsequent three albums, which have been lauded by the critics all over the country and placed at the top of year-end polls in "Rolling Stone" and "Village Voice".

R.E.M.'s last album represents a shift in directions for both the band and their former producer. "Lifes Rich Pageant" was recorded in singer John "Cougar" Mellencamp's Bloomington, Indiana Belmont Hall studios with veteran producer Don Gehman.

Co-producer of Mellencamp's "Scarecrow" album, Gehman led the band through refining the "more traditional rock 'n' roll record" that they wanted.

"Billboard Magazine" describes R.E.M.'s latest album as the "punchiest, hardest-rocking record yet." The single "Fall on Me" is the first one off the album.

In the meantime, Easter, a North Carolina native, went through a series of changes in his band. He went solo after the original members of Let's Active parted ways, shifted his direction in songwriting and vocals, and concentrated on developing and refining his own material.

He continued to develop projects under the band name during a solo period, but has since added three new members. Let's Active's album, "Big Plans for Everybody" was recorded primarily by Easter, who was lauded in Rolling Stone for his "immense skill and versatility" on the guitar tracks, and turning out the "best work that Easter has done".

A native of Winston-Salem, Easter designed a recording studio in his parent's garage after his 1979

Whoopi Shows her Stuff in "Flash"

Once again, the multi-talented Whoopi Goldberg has managed to effectively combine the light hearted facets of her screen character with her own unique comedy style.

The result is "Jumpin' Jack Flash", an intriguing comedy in which Goldberg plays Terry Dolittle, a computer data entry specialist for international banking.

Intrigued by the computer messages sent to her by a desperate British intelligence agent, Dolittle is swept from her almost non-existent social life into one of awkward danger in the world of espionage.

Driven by her concern for Jack (the agent), Dolittle risks her own safety repeatedly while trying to aid him in his escape from danger.

The results are hilarious. Only Whoopi Goldberg could play Terry Dolittle so effectively and humorously. It's a definite GO SEE!

Co-producer of John Cougar's "Scarecrow" album, Gehman led the band through refining the more traditional Rock 'n' Roll record that they wanted....

college graduation. Drive-In Recording Studio has become "almost legendary in pop circles," according to the Phoenix, Arizona "News Times". A number of regional groups have recorded there, but recording Marshall Crenshaw and producing R.E.M. are among the more notable projects that served to earn Easter a strong reputation on the music scene.

Steve Hockman, a reporter for the "Los Angeles Times", wrote that Easter "is generally recognized as a leader of the '80s pop revival that has taken place in the Southeast." He also noted that the Drive-In Studio is viewed as "the movement's spiritual center".

"Bam Magazine" writer Harold DeMuir noted that "there are points at which Easter's eclectic, cerebral leanings point Let's Active in the general direction of — gulp — Art Rock".

The combination of Let's Active's "Art Rock" and R.E.M.'s harder-rocking new sound promises some serious jamm'n' at their Wilmington gig. The show opens at 8 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 16th in Trask Coliseum on the University of North Carolina campus. Ticket price is $13.50 for the general public and $12.50 for students with ID. They can be obtained at the UNCW Student Union Information Desk, Record Bar, and School Kids Records.

National Research Announces Grants

The National Research Council announces the 1987 Resident, Cooperative, and Postdoctoral Research Associateship Programs for research in the sciences and engineering to be conducted in behalf of 26 federal agencies or research institutions, whose laboratories are located throughout the United States. The programs provide Ph.D. scientists and engineers of unusual promise and ability with opportunities to perform research on problems largely of their own choosing yet compatible with the research interests of the supporting laboratory. Initiated in 1954, the Associateship Programs have contributed to the career development of over 4,000 scientists ranging from recent Ph.D. recipients to distinguished senior scientists.

Approximately 450 new full-time Associateships will be awarded on a competitive basis in 1987 for research in: chemistry, earth and atmospheric sciences;

engineering and applied sciences; biological, health, behavioral sciences and biotechnology; mathematics; space and planetary sciences; and physics. Most of the programs are open to both U.S. and non-U.S. nationals, and to both recent Ph.D. degree recipients and senior investigators.

Awards are made for one or two years; senior applicants who have held the doctorate at least five years may request shorter tenure. Stipends for the 1987 program year will begin at $26,350 a year for recent Ph.D.s and be appropriately higher for senior Associates. A stipend supplement approximately $5,000 may be available to regular (not senior) awardees holding recognized doctoral degrees in those disciplines wherein the number of degrees conferred by U.S. graduate schools is significantly below the current demand. In the 1986 program year these areas have been engineering, computer science, and space-related biomedical science.

Reimbursement is provided for allowable relocation costs and for limited professional travel during tenure. The host laboratory provides the Associate with programmatic assistance including facilities, support services, necessary equipment, and travel necessary for the conduct of the approved research program.

Applications to the National Research Council must be postmarked no later than January 15, 1987 (December 15 for NASA), April 15 and August 15, 1987. Initial awards will be announced in March and April (July and November for the two later competitions) followed by awards to alternates later.

Information on specific research opportunities and federal laboratories, as well as application materials, may be obtained from the Associateship Programs, Office of Scientific and Engineering Personnel, JH 608-DI, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418, (202) 334-2760

Contest Asks Students To Imagine 2011

Honeywell offers $30,000 in prize money to winners of 1987 Futuris award competition. Honeywell launched its 5th annual Futuris Awards Competition, an essay contest that asks students to predict technology advancements 25 years from now.

Honeywell wants college students to imagine the year 2011 and write essays about the technological developments they foresee. This year's contest will offer 10 winners $3,000 each and the chance to work for Honeywell next summer.

Last year, 450 students, representing 325 colleges and universities in 47 states, entered the competition.

The contest is open to all full-time students at any accredited college in the U.S. Students are asked to leap 25 years in the future and write an essay predicting developments in one of six technological areas: electronic communications, energy, aerospace, computer science, manufacturing automation or office automation. A second essay must address the societal impact of the technological predictions. Each essay must be no longer than 1,500 words.

Students can receive contest rules by writing Futuris Rules, Honeywell Telemarketing Center, Honeywell Plaza MN122-4164, Minneapolis, MN 55408, or calling toll free 1-800-328-5111, ext. 1581. Request for entry material must be received by Dec. 31, 1986.

Completed essays must be postmarked no later than Jan. 31, 1987. In February, a panel of top Honeywell scientists and engineers will judge the essays on the basis of creativity, feasibility, clarity of expression and legibility.

Winners will be announced in early March, and each of the 10 winners will receive a two-day, all-expense paid trip to Honeywell's headquarters in Minneapolis.

Honeywell is a Minneapolis-based international corporation that works together with customers to help them achieve their goals through the application of computers, communications and controls. The company has 94,000 employees worldwide, with 1985 revenue of $6.6 billion and net income of $281 million.

Maybe there is a substitute for experience.

Indonesian Week at UNCW

The University's Museum of World Cultures will sponsor an "Indonesian Week" at UNCW, Jan. 26th through Jan. 30th. Programs on Indonesian food, music, dance, art, and fashion are several of the various events scheduled for the week. A performance by the Balinese Dancers and a visit by the Indonesian ambassador to the United States highlight this cultural event.

Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW, and acting director of the Museum of World Cultures welcomes everyone to participate in the preparation of "Indonesian Week" by joining one of the following committees:

1. Finance (raise funds)
2. Host (arrange transportation, lodging, and meals for performers and guests)
3. Protocol
4. Set-up (flags, banners, decorations)
5. Public Relations (publicity)
6. Displays (museum cases)
7. Program (performance programs, advertising, invitations)
8. Special Events (help with a performance in Kennan)
9. Lecture (audio-visual set-up)
10. Food (ARA, coordinate food preparation)
11. Executive Coordinating committee

Sports Talk

with MATT SHANKLIN, EDITORSeniors to end
UNCW careers

The UNC Wilmington soccer team closes out its 1986 campaign this Saturday against the Tribe of William & Mary at Brooks Field. The game not only has implications in the Tribe's post-season chances, but also represents the final game for three UNCW seniors, Wade Adams, Terry Lovell, and Edgar Toms.

Adams (South Mecklenburg/Charlotte, NC), Lovell (Bowie/Bowie, MD), and Toms (Durham Academy/Durham, NC) will try to end their careers on a winning note.

"It would be nice to end the season with a win," Blackmore commented. "It's the last game for our three seniors and they deserve to end their careers with a victory."

Adams will end a two-year career with the Green & Gold as he transferred to the UNCW program from Wingate College near Charlotte. Adams has scored one goal and tallied one assist on the year. His lone goal was the game-winner in the season opener versus Baptist.

"Wade has scored some goals for us and played a useful role for the team," said Blackmore of Adams. "He has mainly been involved in playing an attacking position in a reserve role and has done a good job."

Lovell will also end a two-year career with the Seahawks as he was a junior college transfer. Lovell came to UNCW with some very high credentials, including being a JUCO All-American. Lovell was MVP for last year's 8-6-3 squad and is a Co-Captain of the '86 team. Besides the outstanding play, Lovell also gives the Hawks a lot of experience and is one of the playmakers on the field for Blackmore.

"Terry came in here as a proven player with some very good credentials," said Blackmore of his fine stopper. "He will be one player that will be sorely missed."

Toms, nicknamed "Shoe" by his teammates, will end a four-year career with UNCW. Toms is a scappy player who always seems to have his nose next to the ball. When UNCW lack offensive fire power on the front line, Blackmore inserted Toms at a forward spot to create some punch, and Toms responded by creating a multitude of scoring opportunities for the Hawks.

"He has distinguished himself as a very hard worker," said Blackmore. "He is always hustling and lays everything on the line whether it is a game or practice. I think it is because of his constant hustle that he was named a Co-Captain this season."

As for this year's crop of seniors, they can only hope to end their season on a bright note. Nothing could be sweeter than a win at home against William & Mary Saturday.

Netters drop 3 of 4 at JMU

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The UNCW volleyball team had a very busy week. The netters had a match against Campbell Wednesday and participated in the James Madison Invitational collegiate volleyball tournament Saturday. In the JMU tournament the Lady Hawks played four matches. Their competition consisted of American University, Appalachian State, Western Carolina, and JMU.

Before UNCW took off for Harrisonburg, they took advantage of an inexperienced Campbell University squad. The Lady Seahawks blew Campbell off the court of Hanover Gym. The match took just three quick games, with the Lady Hawks overpowering the Lady Camels with impressive net play and devastating spikes.

The loss dropped the Lady Camels to 4-24 in their first year of competition.

Head coach Kathy McDaniel remarked "It is great to play at home. Campbell is improving, but it is hard to be flashy or motivated when the competition is as inexperienced as Campbell was."

Saturday in Harrisonburg, VA, the Lady Hawks did not have an easy time in their matches, winning only one out of the four matches they played.

The Seahawk netters opened the tourney with another inexperienced team, the Lady Eagles of American. American too is relatively new to women's volleyball, competing in only their second season. Playing fundamentally sound volleyball the Lady Seahawks defeated the Lady Eagles 15-3, 15-1, and 15-4. Coach McDaniel got everybody into the game in an attempt to keep starters fresh for the entire tournament. The win was extremely pleasing because it was a CAA conference victory.

Next, came Appalachian State University with their senior dominated squad. The experience played a large role in the match which ASU won 15-11, 15-7, 13-15, and 15-5. The score was not indicative of the match as there were many long volleys and strong net play by both teams. ASU's defense, which is ranked third in the nation, was the deciding factor.

McDaniel agreed that the defense played a key role in the loss. "They got everything we hit. We did win a game and all the games were close," stated McDaniel.

"We just didn't play a good game," commented McDaniel. This quote, from McDaniel, sums up the match with Western Carolina. The Lady Cats defeated UNCW 15-4, 15-10, and 15-6.

The team did not play well as a unit. The Lady Hawks did not communicate well and their sets and passes were off. Stephanie Wall and DeDe Devoe were the only bright spots in an otherwise bleak team effort.

Host JMU, regarded as one of the top teams in the CAA conference, defeated the Seahawk netters in the final match off the weekend. The Lady Hawks refused to lie down and pushed the Duckets to the limit, only to lose 15-13, 9-15, 15-12, and 15-5.

"It was another well played match," said McDaniel of the JMU match. "We have never won a game against JMU and now we have. This will help come tournament time (CAA Conference Tournament)"

With only three matches remaining on the schedule, the Lady netters are hoping that the tough competition they faced this weekend will enhance their chances in the upcoming CAA tournament.

"We've won at least a game against all the conference teams. At least we know we can beat them," commented McDaniel on the teams chances in the CAA Championships.

The Lady Hawks will compete in the CAA championship November 14 and 15 at Harrisonburg, VA.

Golfers place
10th in finaleby Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The UNC Wilmington men's golf team finished tenth out of 14 teams in the Old Dominion University Seaside Collegiate Golf Tournament at Nags Head, NC Friday and Saturday.

The Seahawks shot a two-day total of 319-297 -616, with David Team leading the way with a 74-70 -144 total, good for a seventh place finish in the individual category.

"The first day I was a little disappointed," said Head Coach Calvin Lane. "The second day the weather was nice and we played well. The 297 score was the best we had all year long (for a round). I thought we'd move up in the standings, but we didn't."

The University of Maryland won the team title with a 290-285 -573 total, while Campbell was second at 296-285 -581 and host Old Dominion finished third with a 291-292 -583 total.

The individual leader was Rich Fruchnik from Old Dominion who shot a course record 67-66 -133.

The tournament represented the last tournament for the 1986 season for Coach Lane's troops.

"Overall, I'm very pleased," said Coach Lane of the season. "We played in five tournaments and placed in two of them. I took 2-3 freshmen to every tournament and they got a lot of experience and performed well. I'm hopeful the experience will help them next fall and us as a team."

The Eye of a Hawk

Green stops Gold 66-47

Pittman, Rowsom shine at scrimmage

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

Seniors Brian Rowsom and Ben Pittman led all scorers in the UNCW men's basketball Green-Gold intersquad game. The game was played Wednesday night, for the first time outside of Trask Coliseum, at Camp Lejeune High School. The Green team defeated the Gold team by the score of 66-47.

Center Brian Rowsom finished the scrimmage with 23 points and six rebounds. Rowsom's power play in the paint and defense was a big key in the Green team's victory.

Rowsom was the only player of the 13 to play the entire game on the same team. Due to the fact Coach Robert McPherson substituted many players back and fourth so that he could get a feel for players in different situations. Because of this players were getting playing time on both the Green and the Gold squads.

Another standout, in in the game was senior center Ben Pittman. Pittman finished the game with 20 points and 11 rebounds. Pittman may see more playing time this season as Rowsom's backup at the low post.

Other notable performances were turned in by forward Kevan Miles (14pts. 6rebs.), forward Charles Cherry (7pts 8rebs.), and swingman Greg Bender (13pts. 13rebs.).

"It was a great defensive effort," McPherson commented. "Defense will play a large part in our game plan this season." Sandy Anderson, Rob Wagner, and Odis Bellinger carried out McPherson's tenacious man-to-man defense with success.

McPherson remarked, "It was a great effort by the team after only 12 to 13 practices, but we still have a long way to go before the beginning of the season."

UNCW finished last season

UNCW had a two game winning streak coming into last week's play, but two tough 1-0 losses put an end to the Seahawk hope of salvaging a near .500 record. The first loss came on Wednesday as the Seahawks hosted the 49ers of UNC Charlotte. UNCC got on the board early with a goal at the 7:22 mark by David Cooper. The goal came when the 49ers beat a UNCW offside trap.

The game with UNCW saw a UNCW record for most disqualifications in a match. The Seahawks lost three players to red cards in a bench clearing brawl with just five minutes remaining in the match. The three players were Jose Serrano, Greg Paetow, and Edgar Toms. The fourth ejection came as the gun sounded when Baede Minasse was called for unsportsmanlike conduct. All four of these players received mandatory one-game suspensions and missed the Coastal Carolina match.

The second 1-0 loss came Saturday night at Coastal Carolina. The Seahawks played a flawless game except for a controversial call on the UNCW end of the field and the fact that they were playing without four starters due to suspension.

A foul was whistled against UNCW in the penalty box 19:19 into the match. Sissy Sezinajornsen then punched in the penalty kick to give the Chanticleers a 1-0 lead. The score would hold up as UNCW could not find the back of the net. The setback to the South's fifth-ranked team lowered the UNCW record to 4-10-1 overall while their conference mark remained at 0-5-1. The shootout was the Seahawks' eighth of the season.

"I think the kids made a great effort. We had some kids who saw a great deal of playing time that hadn't all season and others who played out of position," said Blackmore. "The kids just did a great job."

UNCW will try to end on a good note when they take on William & Mary at 1:00 p.m. at Brooks Field.

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

From Staff Reports

Volleyball player Stephanie Wall has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the UNC Wilmington Sports Information Office. It marked the first time this season that Wall has been honored.

Wall, a 5-7 senior from Whitsett, NC, has been a very important player in the gameplans of Head Coach Kathy McDaniel.

"Her overall play has been excellent," said McDaniel. "Her defense has been especially noteworthy because her defense was her weakness in the past, but not anymore. She is scoring points for us and her general attitude has helped us get where we are."

The Lady Hawks currently own a 13-10 overall record and a 2-3 mark in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA). It was Wall's play this past week that produced three wins in six tough matches. The UNCW wins came over Methodist College, Campbell University and American University.

Wall will close out her career at UNCW at the CAA Championships at Williamsburg, VA on the campus of William & Mary, Nov 14th and 15th.

Last week, soccer player Donnie Lewis won the Seahawk honor.

Two Statues Stolen From UNCW's Union Grounds

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

Two sculptures on display as part of the Tri-State Sculptors conference were reported stolen Saturday from the University Union. Campus Police are investigating.

Officer Regina Lawson of the UNCW Department of Public Safety said Monday that the works, a marble abstract entitled "Sentinel" and a terracotta sculpture "Adam" were in place Saturday afternoon but were missing as early as 6 p.m. that evening.

According to Stephen Lequire of the Creative Arts Department, "Adam" has a value of approximately $1500 and "Sentinel" is worth $800. Lequire was trying to contact the artists Monday morning.

"Adam" is a rendition of a small boy lying on his stomach with his chin in his hands. The terracotta statue was created by Barbara Harbage and has been one of the most popular on the campus. In the past, pranksters have placed sunglasses and a baseball cap on the statue as well as beer and soda cans in front of the statue to give an appearance of drinking.

"Sentinel" is a marble abstract. "Adam" is by Barbara Harbage and "Sentinel" is the work of George Graham.

I.D. Had Wrong Birthdate

by Robin Hudson
Staff Writer

A routine traffic stop last Tuesday brought the attention of campus police to the incorrectly printed identification card of a female UNCW student. The card showed 2-13-63 as her date of birth when her correct birthdate is 2-13-68.

The student did not have a N.C. driver's license with her; therefore, "when the police officer asked for her correct birthdate, she admitted that the one printed on her I.D. was wrong," said Director of Public Safety at UNCW, Joe Johnson. An investigation revealed that the error was in the university's records.

Two UNCW students were involved in a two car collision last Tuesday. No injuries were reported.

According to police reports, the view of one driver was blocked, causing him to pull in front of the second driver, thus colliding with that vehicle.

An unknown subject is being sought for damaging private property on campus. A rock was thrown through the rear window of a car last Friday while it was parked.

Other reports show a person charged with trespassing on state property while trying to remove a chained bicycle from a campus bike rack.

There was another bike accident Friday outside of the University Cafeteria.

While leaving the cafeteria travelling east, toward the University Union, and entering parking lot "E", the victim collided head on with another biker. There have been several accidents and at the same exact location due to view obstruction of cyclists and pedestrians.

In addition to these reports, 519 parking tickets were issued on the UNCW campus and two bike thefts were reported.

Senate Impeaches Padgett; Dudley Not Running For Reelection in '87

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

President B. Allen Dudley announced that he will not be running for re-election next year. He requested that anyone wishing to run for Student Body President in the elections this spring contact him, and he would arrange for them to attend the North Carolina Student Government Association University in November.

The memo, which said that the elevators were being turned off in Hall '85 as a means of punishing students, claimed that disabled students were being discriminated against by the Residence Life staff.

Maimone said that there were no disabled students living in Hall '85, and that the elevator had been turned off in order to repair damage done by vandals.

The elevators were shut down for five days. Repairs were finished on a Friday, but since no technician was available on a weekend, the elevator remained off until Monday.

"If an elevator is to be shut down," said the Asst. Dean, "we will make every effort to tell every student affected the reason why."
He pointed out that the elevators had been originally

Museum Club To Hold Auction

from Staff Reports

Fine arts, collectables, antiques, Turkish and oriental rugs are among hundreds of items that will be available for purchase during a public auction Thursday, Nov. 13, to benefit the Museum of World Cultures at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The objects will be available for preview between 5:30 and 7:30 p.m. in room 100 of the University Union. The auction itself will begin at 7:30 p.m., also in room 100.

Chairing the event for the Museum is Charles Jones, African art dealer from Wilmington, long-time Museum board member currently serving as vice president. Jones said that the auction will feature a "Broad spectrum of objects from around the world in a wide variety of price ranges, from $10 to $3,000. There will be something there for everyone, including a number of very unusual, high-quality pieces not usually available in Wilmington."

The auction will be conducted by Jim Kennedy, of Kennedy Antiques of Durham. Items for auction are being provided in two ways as unrestricted gifts to the Museum or on consignment with a minimum bid with any funds realized above this minimum going to the Museum. Some gifts of service are also being provided by businesses.

Fort Fisher's Captured Bell Returns Home

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

For more than a century, the location of Fort Fisher's mysterious bell remained unknown. The fifteen inch high, shiny brass bell that had hung in the North Carolina's Confederate fort's guardhouse had been confiscated as a souvenir in 1865 by a Union regiment from New York that had captured the fort after six hours of fierce fighting. While the battle that allowed the Union sea and land forces to capture the Confederates for had been recorded, the location of where the bell had been taken to was never recorded.

The bell's existence would have never been known if it hadn't been for several sentences in a Civil War diary that refers to the building of the Fort Fisher guardhouse and the bell. Colonel William Lamb, the commander of Fort Fisher, ordered the guardhouse to be built.

In his diary, Lamb notes that he asked "Genl to have a guardhouse built." The date in Lamb's diary is late 1864.

Little is known about the guardhouse's structure. Henry Beton, a Confederate officer stationed at Fort Fisher, drew a sketch of the layout of the fort that points out the location of the guardhouse. The guardhouse was located on the upper left hand corner of the fort near the Cape Fear River.

In late 1864, the guardhouse was completed by Genl and the bell was placed in it. The bell hung in the guardhouse for less than a year.

On the night of January 15, 1865, Fort Fisher was captured after three fierce days and nights of fighting by the combined bombardment by more than fifty-five union warships and attacks by ten-thousand Union land forces. Major F.W. Prince of the 16th New York Heavy Artillery was assigned to the command post of Fort Fisher and when he received orders for another assignment, he took several items from the fort with him, including the bell.

Despite the fact that it was known that Major Prince took the bell, little interest was taken in finding where the bell had been taken to and returning it back to the Fort Fisher Historical Site was shown until a tourist from New York heard the story about the missing bell while she was visiting the fort.

Fort Fisher's Mysterious Bell

Jennie Ransom, who makes her home in Pennellville, New York, heard the story of the missing bell on a visit to the Fort Fisher Historical Site in the Summer of 1984. Intrigued by the story of the missing bell, Ms. Ransom reasoned that the guardhouse bell had probably been taken back to her home state. Upon returning home to Pennellville, she began a search for the bell.

A successful conclusion to her search for Fort Fisher's bell came three months later in September 1984 when she located the bell in the state capital of New York. In Albany, in the room set aside for a museum for the display of artifacts in the capital building, Ms. Ransom discovered the object of her quest sitting on a table in the museum room.

Next to the brass bell on the table was a sign that read: "Bell From Rebel Guardhouse, Fort Fisher. Presented by Brevet-Colonel Prince, 16th New York Artillery." With persistence, Ms. Ransom had solved one of the mysteries surrounding the brass bell.

Totally elated by her discovery, Ms. Ransom wrote Fort Fisher officials, informing them of the location of the bell in the Albany capital building. Totally shocked and excited by her discovery, North Carolina and Fort Fisher officials began expressing high interests and hopes in having the bell returned for display at the Fort Fisher Historical Site.

"We were excited about the discovery of the bell," said Gehrig Spencer, manager of the Fort Fisher Historic Site. "We contacted the folks in Raleigh and a letter was written to New York by the (North Carolina) Governor's office," he said.

Spencer said "the full gambit of red tape was ran concerning the bell's return to Fort Fisher." Upon the completion of the paper work, New York Governor Mario Cuomo gave the bell as an out-right gift to the people of North Carolina for display at the Fort Fisher Historic Site on June 20, 1985. In a letter written to North Carolina Governor James Martin, Governor Cuomo wrote that "he was honored to return the Fort Fisher Bell to North Carolina."

Fort Fisher's guardhouse bell was not displayed until Friday, February 28, 1986, because the display case for the bell had not been completed until then, and because Fort Fisher officials were carrying out an intensive research program in the attempt to discover the origins of the bell. "We've proven its (relationship) to the guardhouse, but we don't know if it came from a ship, railroad car or it was just hanging around the fort at the time," Spencer said.

Two clues, though, do exist that shed some light on the mysterious origins of the guardhouse bell. The word Luzon is engraved on the shiny brass bell, and underneath the word Luzon, the year 1852 is engraved.

Spencer believes the engraved word Luzon and the year 1852 tends to support the theory that the bell came from a ship. "Researchers have found that two ships were named Luzon before the Civil War and that the ships had sailed along the Atlantic coastline," he said.

The names of two ships christened Bark Luzon were found by Fort Fisher researchers in Carl C. Cutler's index of ships titled: QUEENS OF THE WESTERN OCEAN: The Story of America's Mail and Passenger Lines. The first ship to be christened Bark Luzon was registered in 1844. The weight of the ship was three-hundred tons and the master of the ship was J.F. Goodrich. The second ship christened Bark Luzon was registered in 1846. The second Bark Luzon weighed three-hundred tons too, and its master was J.F. Goodrich. It is likely that these listings refer to the same ship, Spencer said. But since the second registration of the Bark Luzon was in 1846, it does not explain the year of 1852 that is engraved on the bell.

"The speculation is that the listings refer to the same ship and that the Bark Luzon had possibly been converted into a steamer and rededicated in 1856. The Bell was made and engraved then according to speculation," Spencer said. Still the mystery remains as to how the bell came to be at Fort Fisher.

The Bark Luzon is listed in Cutler's ship index as having routes to New York-to-New Orleans and to Boston-to-New Orleans. "It is possible that the Bark Luzon passed by Fort Fisher and the nearby Port of Wilmington," Spencer said. "It might have been possible that the bell was given to someone at the Port of Wilmington and that it was passed on to Major Lamb." Spencer admitted that this speculation is likely to remain unproven.

In fact, Spencer said most theories about the origins of the bell are likely to remain unproven. "What is needed is the discovery of a diary kept by a soldier stationed at Fort Fisher that describes how the bell was acquired by Major Lamb," Spencer said. "Until then, the origins of the guardhouse bell that has returned home will always be shrouded in mystery and lost to the depths of time."

CAMPUS CAPSULE

WILMINGTON—Garland and mistletoe, Christmas trees and holiday aromas are all part of a holiday tour of historic New Bern, offered through UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

The one-day excursion on Saturday, December 13 will be highlighted by a tour of 10 historic riverfront homes and churches and a visit to Tryon Palace, resplendent in authentic holiday decor.

Dr. Alan Watson, UNCW history professor, will prepare participants for the trip with an introductory study class on December 9 from 7:30-8:45 p.m. in Room 104, Morton Hall.

Included in the $52 fee is the preparatory class, transportation on a modern, fully-equipped bus and all activities and events, except meals. Buses will leave Wilmington at 8:00 a.m. and return by 9:30 p.m.

Registration deadline is November 21. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

The UNC Gospel Choir is sponsoring a Thanksgiving food drive for the needy. Anyone interested in donating nonperishable goods can do so during 18-21 between 10:00-3:30 p.m. in UU or call ext. 3832.

WILMINGTON -- The UNCW Army ROTC detachment will hold a special tribute to veterans at 3:30 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 11 at the flagpole between Alderman Hall and the Hinton James Building.

The program will include a flag-lowering ceremony, comments by Lt. Col. Ronald S. Martin, chairman of the UNCW military science department, and Cadet Major David Brock.

The public is invited to attend.

The North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher will be offering the following films in October and November.

Nov. 11 - Stranded Whale.
Nov. 13 - The Living Coast.
Nov. 15 - The Night of the Squid.

Nov. 22 - The Sea Turtle.
Nov. 26 - Beneath the Killing Sea.

Nov. 28 - 40 Million Summers.

Films are at 2:00 p.m. unless otherwise noted and are free to the general public.

The Aquarium also offers numerous other programs from field trips through the salt marshes to the "Creature Feature", which allows visitors to become better acquainted with various forms of aquatic life.

Facilities include more than 20 aquariums featuring everything from sea turtles and various crustaceans to the shark tank. The Aquarium is open from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Omega Psi Phi: The Omegas will celebrate their founders day on Nov. 15, 1986 at 7:00 p.m. in The University Union snack bar. They cordially invite all students, faculty, staff, Greeks, and clubs to attend and clubs to attend. This is a formal affair. Dinner will be served for $9.00 per person. designed for service use and not for passengers.

Mallone said that the memo was the first he had heard of the incident, and requested that if any students had a problem concerning Residence Life, to please contact him and discuss it with him before taking any other action.

In other business, the Senate approved a resolution put forth by the Judiciary Committee to begin impeachment proceedings against Senator Ron Padgett for dereliction of duty.

Padgett has attended no meetings this year and is scheduled to begin active military duty after this semester. Bob Garlow was sworn in to the position vacated by Padgett.

Senator Mark Bremer recommended that the Senate urge the Snack Bar to designate an area of the Union restaurant as a Smoking Only section. The Senate concurred.

The Student Suggestion Committee was made a standing committee within the Student Government Association. This means that the SSC will be appointed annually and will be a permanent part of the organization.

In the past, the SSC has been an ad hoc committee, necessitating a decision each year on whether or not to have a Student Suggestion Committee.

Geoff Moore had handed in his resignation prior to Monday's meeting because he had withdrawn from school. Moore had been Senate Parliamentarian.

Vice President K. Allan Daniel announced that two representative-at-large positions are open. Interested applicants should contact the SGA office.

Give Blood This Week

Would you like to save someone's life? If so, your opportunity will be coming very soon. The American Red Cross will be sending a bloodmobile to UNCW, room 100 in the Union.
It will be here on November 12th and 13th from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

To sign up for a convenient time, preregister November 10th and 11th in the University Union foyer from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The actual process of donating will take about eight minutes.
One pint is taken after the volunteer answers questions and undergoes a few tests. Disposable needles are used so there is no danger of contracting disease.

Your donated blood will play an essential part in the treatment of accident victims, leukemia and cancer patients, or other individuals with a medical problem.

The Health Sciences Club is sponsoring the blood drive and is

A Place To Lay Your Head

One of the main problems around any campus is the lack of affordable off-campus housing for students. The more a university expands, the more apartment houses seem to spring up, almost all charging ridiculous prices for apartments that are sort of spawned on an assembly line — with substandard plumbing, occasional tricky wiring, and few or no promises kept by the management in the leases that have to be signed.

Several members of this staff are residents at a nearby apartment complex that shall, for reasons of probable retaliation by the management, remain nameless. This complex has started an ugly trend which will undoubtedly affect others as more and more students come to UNCW, and look for a place to live.

The gross mistreatment of tenants.

Case to point: a girl locked herself out of her apartment on a weekday evening. The office was still open, and she asked the manager to let her into her apartment.

He refused unless she could pay him twenty dollars. She responded that her money was in the apartment and she would have to get inside to pay him.

He refused to let her into the apartment.

She asked if she could use the telephone in the office to call her father and get the money.

Once again the manager refused.

On the point of hysteria, she asked him to lend her a quarter so she could use a payphone to call her parents and get the money.

The manager refused, and told her she deserved what she got.

A kind hearted security guard finally unlocked her door (and didn't charge her a cent).

The girl is a good student, did not and does not throw wild parties, and had always paid her rent on time.

Another student reported three weeks before this date that his toilet was not flushing. The management has expressed no desire to fix the plumbing problem, (which they say would have to be paid for by the tenant), although the problem is a flaw that has been noticed by the three previous tenants and pointed out to the managers.

Several months back, the management was touting this complex as a good place for serious students.

Now it is impossible to get the management's help if your neighbor has waited until three a.m. to have his party after the security guard has left.

It is still a good place for serious students — for serious students who don't want to get their money's worth.

Should these people be allowed to get away with breaking their own leases, mistreating and completely ignoring the needs of the tenants who are having enough financial hardship getting through school?

How can they be stopped? We can't all camp out beside the tennis courts.

Might get better service, though.

DOWN TO EARTH

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is a potential gold mine for a plucky entrepreneur or a scientist.

Many of the inventions first devised for space travel are now being made available for Earth-bound use. NASA usually develops a prototype first, then stocks it away.

Information on the NASA prototypes is available just for the asking. A computer printout from NASA's technology utilization center in Raleigh's Triangle Research Park. All the technology developed by NASA is now available for further development by the public.

Since NASA is not a military agency, it has no secrets. Whatever the space organization discovers belongs to the general public.

Many of NASA's inventions have already been adapted for terrestrial use. Some of them are:

An extremely light-weight, very durable wheelchair made of particularly tough metals. The wheelchair is stronger than any wheelchair that can be bought.

A medical instrument that can measure bone density by simply gripping a person's wrist. The device had originally been developed evaluate the effects of zero-gravity space travel on astronauts.

Bones get soft and hearts get smaller in space missions. Back on earth, the instrument is extremely useful in detecting osteoporosis in women.

A "pulse generator" that can be implanted in the heart to prevent erratic heartbeats. The "pulse generator" can also identify future trouble spots.

Scratch-resistant sunglasses. NASA developed the scratch-resistant material to make durable helmets and advisors for its astronauts.

A toothpaste that requires no water or a bathroom sink. The toothpaste can be swallowed after brushing and can be useful for bed-ridden patients who are not always able to walk to the nearest bathroom to rinse.

A rust-resistant coating that can protect buildings and machinery. The coating is made from polymers and was used to cover the inside of the Statue of Liberty during the statue's renovation. NASA originally developed the coating to protect the launch towers at the space shuttle's test site.

There is a potential gold mine of new innovations waiting for some enterprising entrepreneur and all it will cost is the price of one computer printout.

STUDENT FORUM

Arrest Of Professor Criticized

To the Editor:

In response to the seahawk article concerning the arrest of a UNC-W faculty member, I feel that I must once again express my outrage. This teacher is depicted both at the Seahawk, for printing the article, and at those involved in the arrest.

How can those on the police force possible rationalize this frivolous waste of the taxpayer's money? The only crime committed was by the undercover officer involved in this infringement of personal rights! I have to wonder if any such arrests have been made for similar acts committed by heterosexuals. In North Carolina, premarital sex and cohabitation are also illegal, and yet the police force seems able to pass over the "criminals" who commit these crimes.

The faculty member was arrested for a "crime against nature." Who in society decides which acts are "unnatural"? We in America supposedly live in a democratic society, where individual expression is held as an ideal. It is an embarrassment that we are jailing people for the most individual form of expression.

Finally, I reject the Seahawk printing the article in a non-committal fashion. If this article indeed had to be printed, it should have included support for the faculty member and expressed outrage at this blatant show of discrimination on the part of the Wilmington Police Dept.

I will add that this article appeared on the same page as the highly favorable article about the Miss UNC-W pageant. I find the Miss UNC-W pageant to be both pornographic and discriminatory to men and women.

Thank you,
Ms. Ann Roitford

Reader Comments On 'Hawke' Paper

Dear Editor,

Lynn, Lynn, Lynn! If I've told you once, I've told you twice, the students of UNCW are tired of your paper's vulture journalism. They are tired of your penny-ante garbage that you print as news, and tired of seeing your father dropping his load (of Hawkes) in the Union.

Why don't you call your paper the Franklin Evening Enquirer and seems your whole family is involved in the publishing of the Hawke. It seems that Danielle Woods is the only staffer on your paper with any kind of ethics when it comes to reporting. Woods is the one bright spot in your spotty tabloid. We are also tired of your pseudonyms and false student editorials (Trust me everybody, I'm real!).

Just because you didn't get the job at the Seahawk, you had to be a spoiled little brat and get Mummy and Daddy to let you start your own. I wonder if Mummy and Daddy are paying the $1000 a month you were making at the Seahawk last year. (Oh, by the way, the gimmick with the W-2 form was good, but anybody with a college education can realize that the income stated on that form doesn't account for the second half of the 1985-86 school year. I ask you Lynn, what about Jan-May????)

I have one plea to you, either print a newspaper that is worth reading or give it up. Stop your attacks on the Seahawk, the SGA, the Chancellor, and the University. You are a disgrace to UNCW and the student body. If you don't like it here, LEAVE!!! because we don't want people like you. Go off to the mountains where you can bicker all you want and nobody will care (they probably wouldn't want you either).

Take my advice and the student's, either print a true newspaper, or GET OUT!!!! Signed, Luther "Emile Hunter, Sally Forth, ANE-5004 Bill Carter (Franklin) Libby

P.S. Maybe if you printed a whole paper full of Far Side, you might have a decent paper. Then again, you are probably stealing those like you did to the Seahawk Kroger ad.

A copy of this has been sent to both The Seahawk and The Hawke.

Solution To Aids Disease Suggested

Dear Editor,

The media has given a great deal of attention to general diseases, especially AIDS. There constantly are calls for pushing harder to finding cures for STDs (sexually transmitted diseases), seminars are being given across the country to educate people about the diseases, and books are being written about "safe sex" practices for both homo and heterosexuals. The media has been sympathetic to the victims of these plagues, who in many cases have brought their suffering on through their own promiscuity. It is true that there are innocent victims, especially children, which is tragic and unfortunate. In all of this hype, however, why is there not anything said about prevention?

The solution to AIDS and all other venereal diseases is to avoid those circumstances that would make one susceptible to contracting them. That is the only real hope that would make one susceptible to contracting them. That is the only real hope that exists. Scientists and doctors can work for millions of hours trying to find cures for these infections. It is true that we cannot ignore the problem and it will go away, but it is also true that man, left to his own devices, will always have to pay the consequences of his actions.

Our society is unwilling to forsake pleasure for good common sense and, to use the phrase, "old fashioned" virtue. Virtue is not old fashioned, and it makes as much sense to practice it today — perhaps even more than it ever has. Truth is eternal, it is the same today as it was yesterday and will be tomorrow. And the truth is that those who are promiscuous, be they homosexual or heterosexual, will only reap sorrow by and by.

We live in a time when evil is call good ("progressive-minded individual," "enlightened thinker," etc.) and good is called evil ("reactionary right-winger," "zealous fundamentalist," etc.) Our only hope for tomorrow is if young men and women will practice self-restraint and respect for self and for others. If everyone would practice chastity before marriage and fidelity in marriage, then the problems of STDs, teen pregnancy and abortion would take care of themselves. Until that happens, however, there will be problems like AIDS around to claim thousands of lives, kill innocent victims and our "enlightened, progressive, with-it" society will continue vainly groping in the dark.

Greg Drew

We agree in theory with the writer in that prevention is the key to control, but to hint that AIDS or any other disease is repayment for sins committed brings to mind a quote from Dr. Keeling himself: If AIDS is retributive, then why have 340 children been afflicted with the killer?

'Use Sledgehammer' Approach

Dear Sir: I happened to pick up a Seahawk the other day and was appalled to read that UNCW coeds (and we can assume this includes dumb jocks) use "cross-your-finger" birth control. Very discouraging since we reformers assumed our task lay only in the ghettoes whose residents had the alleged excuse of ignorance. No doubt we shall have to start all over again and since such a conservative as Surgeon General Koop has said sex education must begin in the third grade and even uttered in public the word "condom," a university cannot be faulted for total frankness. True, inside your paper was a detailed "how to" recipe and directions to a film, no doubt in living color. The point is, those must in need won't admit they missed it in the third grade, wouldn't be caught dead viewing the film and one can't be certain they can read without the aid of pictures.

I would suggest the sledge hammer approach used by the Military to combat VD in those pleasant towns you got to visit in WW II before going out to be shot. Pledge posters, with a minimum of reading, in every locker room, lavatory and public meeting place. As shy persons are not likely to visit the old fashioned version of a prostitution it might be possible to borrow one of the tables near the Post Office to set up a display of equipment. It would be a change from bake sales.

Sincerely

Eda T. Fitzpatrick

Stillpoint

with Bob Heywood, Campus Minister

For many single young adults, the idea of marriage is both a fearful and appealing possibility that exists somewhere in our future. It is appealing in that most of us find in ourselves the desire to relate deeply and significantly to another person in some kind of long-term commitment. It is fearful because we are surrounded by so many failed marriages and, more often than not, may come from a broken home. I want to point to one element in relationships of which we need to be aware because it plays such a major role in destroying relationships and it is something that you can do something about long before you get into a marriage. I'm talking about dependency. One of our fundamental human needs is a sense of safety and security. The reason is too lengthy to go into now. We have a tendency to look to someone else to meet some fundamental emotional security needs. Scott Peck, in "The Road Less Traveled," defines dependency as "the inability to experience wholeness or to function adequately without the certainty that one is being actively cared for by another." And we all have in us the wish to be taken care of. It is what we do with that desire and how we manage it. He goes on to state "dependency may appear to be love because it is a force that causes people to fiercely attach themselves to one another. But in actuality it is not love: it is a form of anti-love. It has its genesis and a parental failure to love and it perpetuates the failure. It seeks to receive rather than to give. It nourishes infantilism rather than growth. It works to trap and constrict rather than to liberate. Ultimately it destroys rather than builds relationships, and it destroys rather than builds people."

A good marriage, or even a good relationship, can exist only when shared by two strong and independent people. And this is where the challenge and the opportunity lies for single young adults, particularly for those of you who are in your college career. The more able you become to identify and meet your own needs, the stronger sense of well-being you develop about yourself, the better your chances are to enter into and develop a successful relationship and marriage. Anything that you can do that allows you to develop and increase in self-worth is useful. Developing life skills all the way from balancing your check book to learning to manage your time helps. Participating in organizations and developing leadership skills helps. Deepening your faith and reliance on God helps. Getting your mind off yourself, learning to respond to the needs of your friends or the hungry of the world helps. Learning to have a good life that is satisfying here at school even without a boyfriend or girlfriend helps.

In the long run, we have got to realize that no single other person can bear the responsibility of our security needs. The foundation of our security must be built on many blocks that represent a diverse set of connections between us and a whole range of relationships, between us and our vacation, between us and God, between us and family, and on and on.

The stronger you become in yourself, the clearer you become about who you are what you need and want from yourself and the world in which you live in, the better able you will be to bring a strong independent self into any relationship. And the relationship between two independent people will continually bring more and more energy into the relationship and will nourish it and enliven it rather than drain it dry.

With Fire In His Eyes Reagan Turns The Tables On Soviets

Richard Viguerie
Syndicated Columnist

WASHINGTON, VA -- Leave it to Ronald Reagan: Just when his enemies think they have him beaten, he turns the tables on 'em.

That's what happened to Gorbachev in Iceland. "Gorbey" -- as he is known in some White House memos -- thought he held the high hand. Having tricked President Reagan into agreeing to the Iceland summit, Gorbachev could blackmail the President: Either give in to my demands and be seen as a peacemaker, or defy me and confirm that you are a "warmonger." Either weaken the security of the United States or see your party lose control of the Senate in the November election.

The Soviets had learned from history that American presidents are patsies at summit meetings. From FDR to Carter, they succumbed to the temptation to believe that the Soviets want peace. Carter went so far as to kiss Brezhnev on the cheek.

For 45 years, it was at summits like the one in Iceland that U.S. leaders had "kick me" signs applied to the seats of their pants. This time was different.

This time it was the forceful, combative Ronald Reagan who showed up at the conference table. Not the Reagan who occasionally wimps out on us, not the Reagan who sometimes seems desperate to win the Nobel Peace Prize (fat chance, anyway), and not the Reagan who blindly follows George Shultz's advice. It was the Reagan who fired the air traffic controllers, who ordered the mid-air capture of the Palestinian hijackers, who grabbed the microphone one cold day during a debate in New Hampshire and annihilated his opposition. It was the Reagan with fire in his eyes.

When Gorbachev demanded that Reagan give up the Strategic Defense Initiative -- "Star Wars" -- his backbone steered. SDI, he said, will not be negotiated away.

Among the media, USA Today's reaction was typical, with headlines such as "Summit crumbles on 'star wars'..." "Star Wars" spawns costly high-tech race..." The nuclear pact shot down by 'star wars'." Typical among commentators was David Broder of The Washington Post, who was crestfallen: "the glimmer of hope for deep cuts in nuclear weapons went out the window as fast as you can say 'SDI...' One can only hope the legacy of the Reagan years turns out to be something other than the soaring deficits and the escalating arms race that now engulf us."

But then something strange happened. As the implications of the summit sunk in, the American people rallied to the President's side. They seemed to understand that the Soviets had offered us a bad deal, and that Reagan had been right to reject it.

Indeed he was. The Soviet Union's master propagandists may be working on their own system for decades, and they've tested killer-satellites at an altitude of over 1,000 miles.

The United States, however, has a stupendous advantage over the Soviets in the development of SDI technology, which depends mostly on the development of high-speed computers. In this country, everyday citizens are allowed to own computers -- the Apple Computer company actually started in somebody's garage -- and, as a result, computer technology is advancing as fast as every little hacker in his basement can push it. In the Soviet Union, by contrast, computers are strictly controlled by the government and independent experimentation is unheard-of. In a society where Xerox machines are kept under lock and key, computers are the ultimate threat to the government's power over the flow of information. Remember the joint U.S./Soviet space mission a decade ago? At a time when pocket calculators were on sale at Sears, the Soviets didn't even have an on-board computer system on their spacecraft.

If the U.S. develops a shield to protect it from a successful Soviet attack, the Soviet Union will no longer have the ability to hold us and the rest of the world hostage. Internal pressures within the USSR will cripple its ability to maintain a far-flung empire. And, someday during the lifetimes of our children, the Soviet threat just might vanish from the face of the earth.

That's what was -- so important, for Mr. Reagan to stand up to Mr. Gorbachev.

Here's what I wrote immediately prior to the summit: "Conservatives cling to a small hope: that, when Gorbachev puts his demands on the table, confident that he holds the high hand, Ronald Reagan reaches down inside himself and finds the Old Reagan."

"Nothing would so energize the Republican troops nationwide as the return of the combative, forceful Reagan who toppled on incumbent president after nearly toppling another. Mr. President, I say: Hang the scenario, and make Gorbachev the latest in a long line of oh-so-clever politicians whose greatest mistake was to underestimate Ronald Reagan."

That's what he did. As his reward, he won't win the Peace Prize, but he may win something far more important: peace and freedom for mankind.

Is the Miss UNCW Pageant Pornographic?

This is the first in a series of articles concerning women's issues will be written by Ann Rotchford and/or Deborah Goodman.

The Miss UNCW Pageant

Now that the second annual Miss UNCW pageant has come and gone, we are once again faced with the questions: What does a pageant such as this one mean to our University? What are the implications towards women? And what message is sent to the larger community?

Surely, some of you are thinking "What possible harm could come from a Miss UNCW pageant?" Beauty pageants have been a part of our culture for a long time. They are an institution. When examining this "harmless" institution closely, we can see that they do a great deal of harm to both male and female students, and the University as a whole.

First, these women are asked to compete in such events as swimsuit, evening gown, and talent for a scholarship. No scholar achievements are used in this competition. Once again women are asked to use only their physical appearance to achieve awards. Is this not perpetuating a unidimensionality of women? Physical beauty is the primary basis upon which these women are judged. By having these women compete on the basis of physical appearance and not scholarly merits, we as a University are supporting a notion of women as ornaments; objects.

Feminists have long pointed out that pageants have especially negative consequences by perpetuating competition among women. Beauty pageants are based on the glamour notion of beauty, that is, an artificial costume aspect of beauty that is exemplified in the swimsuit, evening gown, etc. . . . The glamour aspect of beauty is based on envy, envy that pits woman against woman and inhibits their movement towards a feeling of solidarity.

Not only does the beauty pageant for scholarship imply and perpetuate competition among women, but competition based on physical attributes. Intellectual ability is not considered, this being an area that must be reserved for men. Doesn't this imply a limited capability on the part of women? Or at least an unequal, lower level than that of men?

The beauty pageant does not take into account human's intrinsic beauty, or the beauty of knowledge and skill that women are still excluded from.

I propose a different type of competition for scholarships: one using valid criteria of achievement or merit. Such a competition would not discriminate against male students, and would allow women to compete equally with each other and with men as well.

My opposition to the pageant is in no way meant to attack the intellectual ability of the women involved in the Miss UNCW pageant or any other. However, I bemoan the frivolous waste of their intellect and energy in a show of this calibre. Surely we at UNCW see ourselves as more than a mere periphery stop for the Miss North Carolina pageant.

BEWARE THE CINDERELLA MYTH

I don't have a daughter, but if I did, I'd tell her not to believe the Cinderella myth.

Does that statement sound shocking? I hope so. Un-American? Maybe, but maybe not.

By the Cinderella myth, I mean the idea many young women have that Prince Charming will come galloping up on his white horse and sweep her off her feet and take care of her for the rest of her life, and they will live happily ever after.

Don't bet on it, girls.

Have you checked the divorce rate lately? It is over 50% for all marriages, although it is somewhat lower for first marriages. So single women can figure the odds for staying married.

And there's always the possibility that your husband will die or become disabled, leaving you to fend for yourself.

And yet I see young women -- as well as some not so young -- betting their future security on marriage as a sort of panacea for avoiding life's pitfalls.

This tendency has a curious resemblance to the Cinderella story that we all learned as children -- the Americanized Walt Disney version, that is.

In this version poor Cinderella endures mistreatment passively and wins the Prince in the end simply by being beautiful and sweet. Not to mention winning a nice, affluent lifestyle which is hers for life.

The implication is that sitting around waiting for someone to take care of you pays off.

Don't believe it. Yes, it could happen, but what if it doesn't?

Women today must be prepared to take care of themselves, to earn their own living, balance their own checkbooks, make their own arrangements for car repairs and travel and having the plumbing fixed.

I maintain that relationships are enhanced, not hurt, by both parties being able to exist alone. Watching women trapped in miserable marriages and unable to support themselves and their children convinces me of this. The Buzsins. Red is an example of this kind of situation. And there are the "displaced homemakers" who no longer have a

A newspaper is supposed to be noncommittal, Ms. Rotchford. That is the only way a publication can keep an objective viewpoint. If the public feels that tax money is being wasted by officers enforcing a law, then change the laws by electing people who sympathize with you. That is an even greater ideal -- the one of free elections.

We did include support for the instructor -- from his supervisor, Dr. Robert Byington.

Ms. Rotchford, The editors would like you to meet with the reporter who covered the beauty pageant. Her column, entitled "In My Corner" by Anne Simpson, is located on the Op-Ed page along with yours. After a few minutes of conversation, we don't think you would consider her to be an avid proponent of beauty pageants.

More On Praisner

Ed. Note: The following was received by the Seahawk on Kenan Auditorium stationery. A check with Doug Swink, Auditorium Manager, proved that the letterhead was not authorized for use by the signs.

Dear Editor,
It has come to my notice that the tact of the editorial staff is slightly less than that of a husband to take care of them but have no career or marketable skill because they have sacrificed their opportunities in order to be wives and mothers.

Don't think that I am advocating divorce; I really am not. Rather, I am advocating being prepared to be independent, to earn your own living and run your own life. Everyone's success should come from within themselves, not from someone else or from an accident of fortune. That's the "American Way," isn't it?

And a helpless clinging vine cannot inspire much respect from a man, can she?

Interestingly, getting back to Cinderella, this story has existed for centuries as a folk tale in many cultures; the Chinese version dates back to the ninth century. The story has a universal appeal, resembling Horatio Alger novels: the "rags-to-riches" story.

Much has been written in recent years about this myth. Colette Dowling, in The Cinderella Complex: Women's Hidden Fear of Independence, said, "Psychological dependency -- the deep wish to be taken care of by others -- is the chief force holding women down today. Like Cinderella, women today are still waiting for something external to transform their lives."

Strangely, the European and Oriental versions make Cinderella much less passive, winning her good fortune by her wits and efforts, as well as by virtues like filial piety and kindness.

Is our American-Disney version a product of our Puritan heritage, filtered through Victorian repression of female naturalness?

Whatever the source for this abdicate-and-find-happiness myth, don't buy it, girls-ladies-women-whatever you prefer to be called.

Educate yourselves; learn a marketable skill; develop some interests; learn to believe in yourselves and your abilities.

The bottom line is that women must be prepared to take care of themselves; they must not depend on a man to take care of them. They must not bet their futures, and their children's, on the benevolence of another person.

locomotive. Several students, I included, feel that the editorial response to the letter on Stephen Praisner carried in your paper on Oct. 22 in bad taste. Do not chide us, if Editor as he admits did not know Steve then he can not tell us who will or who will not remember Steve or what Steve would or would not want. The Editors response toward the readers letter should have been one of apology for the article "One For Stephen" on Sept. 24. Do not tell us what a paper most do, we are telling you what you should do. We stand fast awaiting your humble apology. If one is not forthcoming maybe we should look toward the Hawks for more responsible journalism.

The Editorial staff on this paper owes no one an apology. If the writer is misguided enough to believe that the Hawk is a source for more responsible journalism, perhaps he should take a basic course in ethics.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third time that the Seahawk has responded to the tragic circumstances of Stephen Praisner's death. Although it is against our editorial policy of printing (verbatim) all letters addressed to the Student Forum, we will no longer print or respond to any letters received concerning the editorial, "One For Stephen." The editorial did not detract from the friends and family of the student, but from the virtues that inevitably follow a potential liability suit.

R.E.M., Let's Active On Campus Sunday

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

R.E.M.'s version of jammin' rock music will be floating through the air at UNC-W's Trask Coliseum on November 16 when the band and opening group Let's Active stop in Wilmington as part of their fall concert tour. Both groups are on the road promoting newly-released albums put out by the same label, I.R.S. Records.

The two groups have a relationship that goes back at least six years. Mitch Easter, the lead guitarist/vocalist for Let's Active, oversaw the first R.E.M. recordings. He also co-produced the band's first single and

'Jazzy' Concert To Benefit Children

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Area music lovers will have the opportunity to enjoy a variety of jazz, easy listening, and folk musicians performing in concert for an unusually small fee this Sunday. Over twenty members of the Cape Fear Musician's Association are gathering at Thalian Hall on November 16 to combine talents in a "jazzy folk" concert that will benefit needy children.

Performers John Golden, Rob Nathanson, Jack Olsen, Barbara Ferris, David Shucavage, and Steve Gnadt are just a few of the entertainers who will appear at the show. Other acts include Margaret Shaw and Friends, Duke Ladd, Laura McLean, John Bates, Lloyd Wilson, and Randy Drew. The musicians will appear in an array of ensembles during the show, which will also feature an appearance by Santa Claus and his holiday elves.

Co-sponsored by public radio station WHQR (91.3 FM), the Thalian Hall performing arts group and the CFMA, the concert was organized to aid the Christmas Cheer Program for needy children that is an annual Salvation Army project.

Organized by Trish Snyder, development director of the radio station, and Julie Gibson, a UNCW student, the concert was arranged in order to gather more Christmas presents for unfortunate children in the Cape Fear area.

The cost of the entertainment is small. A single new present for a needy child will cover the price of admission. Virtually any type of present will be gratefully accepted. The presents should not be wrapped.

A new present for a child is a small price to pay for an afternoon's entertainment, especially with the knowledge that a child will have a more enjoyable Christmas because of it.

'The Music Man' Opens Thursday In UNCW's Kenan

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

The show director Doug Swink describes as "the biggest and brassiest show to hit Wilmington in a lo-o-o-ong time" will delight theatregoers this weekend.

"The Music Man," Meridith Wilson's classic Broadway musical comedy, will open this Thursday, November 13 and play through Saturday, November 15, at Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus. This much-loved play which has delighted audiences for many years is being presented by the Drama and Music Divisions of the UNCW Creative Arts Department.

Professor Harold Hill, the "Music Man" of the title, is a slick-tongued, fast-footed, woman-chasing rascal of a travelling salesman from Gary, Indiana, who bursts into staid River City and charms the locals of this sleepy little one-horse town into digging into their mattresses and cookie jars to buy instruments and uniforms — from him, of course — for a boys' marching band that will be led by Professor Hill himself.

Show Director Doug Swink describes "The Music Man" as the "biggest and brassiest show to hit Wilmington in a lo-o-o-ong time."

The local librarian, Marian, played alternately by Catherine Schoew and Kim Michele Weeks, soon becomes the object of Professor Hill's interest — indeed, she is quite a challenge to this smooth-talking charmer.

Interestingly, the local gossips — and no small town would be complete without them — think Marian is something of a hussy because she approves of such scandalously racy authors as "Chaucer, Rabelais, and Balzac," as they reveal in one song. These good and proper guardians of public morality (and of everyone else's business) are played by Nancy Benson, Jill Hadden, Fran Tabor and Marcha Utterback. They dish the unsuspecting Marian in the "Pick a Little, Talk a Little" song.

In this setting of cornfield provincialism, Professor Hill decides to stir up a little trouble to distract attention from his shenanigans. He hoodwinks, in various ways, Marian's mother, played by Virginia Bollinger, her brother, played by Wendy Alper, and the entire school board, sung (in barbershop quartet style) and played by a well-known Port City quartet, "The Uncalled Four," who are Jim Benson, Robbie Benson, Larry Philpot and Bob Tesh.

Hill makes more trouble by doing a little matchmaking, pairing off a scoundrel named Tommy Dillan, played by Matt Ray, with the Mayor's daughter Zaneeta, played by Karla Sitt.

Hill does find support from a long lost hustler like himself, Marcellus, portrayed by Eddie Thompson, in his attempt to escape from Charlie Cowell (Robbie Stone) who is determined to deliver Hill to the local constable (Robert Daniel).

"This is entertainment meant for the whole family," Director Swink said.

John Rushton, left, and John Burns play Harold Hill and Major Shinn in "The Music Man" which opens at Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus Thursday night.

Barney (Scott McGinnis) and Luke (Jeff Osterhage) are a new breed of wild west heroes that suddenly find themselves misplaced aviators in World War I and taking on the whole German air fleet in "Sky Bandits".

'Sky Bandits' A Hearty Comedy

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

It's cowboys gone aviators. Luke and Barney, Jeff Osterhage and Scott McGinnis, were the last of the Wild West's bank robbers until they're caught and given the choice of imprisonment or World War I. They choose to defend their country. Once in France they trade their horses in for wings. The two meet up with more wild adventure than ever imagined.

"Sky Bandits" is light-hearted slapstick comedy done only as the British know how. The movie contains crazy stunts and a lot of explosions, but it is done in a humorous rather than violent way. The photography is great covering everything from the English country side to placing you in the pilot's seat. "Sky Bandits" is good entertainment for a hour and a half with no demands on the mind. There are no serious scenes to analyze, just simple adventure comedy. Check out "Sky Bandits" for a hearty English style comedy but not for a deep and moving plot.

The show abounds with delightful musical numbers, many of which will be easily recognized: the love song "Til There Was You," Professor Hill's sales pitch to music "We've Got Trouble Right Here in River City," and of course the spectacular "Seventy-six Trombones," as well as some smooth four-part harmony in the barbershop quartet-style numbers.

Andrea Henderson plays Amariyllis, Winthrop's girlfriend. In the opening train scene that sets to mood of the play, the travelling salesmen are sung by Chris Beaver, Del Jones, John Lindner, Dan Mahn, Michael Rallis and Richard Veit.

The River City Folk are made up of Kelli Carroll, Charlene Dupray, Carmen Henderson, Rodney Ingle, Carol McCune, Beth McSherry, Kelly Mills, Sharon O'Quinn, Jeff Rutter, Molly Talient, Dan West, Kevin Whaley, and Steve Wood.

Special dancers in the cast are Dan Mahn, Carol McCune, Kim Peedin, Leanne Reese, Anje Smith, and Dan West. Linda Runion is the choreographer for the show.

Tom Macie is set designer and Caroline DeMoss is lighting designer. The show's 20-piece orchestra is from the UNCW Music Department and is conducted by Sandy Errante. The entire production is under the direction of John Gilmore and Doug W. Swink.

Tickets are now on sale at Kenan Auditorium between 8:00 a.m. and noon, and all seats are reserved. General Admission is $4.00; UNCW students with ID can get in free.

Reservations may be made by calling 395-3440 or 395-3218 Monday through Friday, 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

'She's Gotta Have It' A Hit

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

"I consider myself normal, whatever that means, some people call me a freak."

—Nora Darling

"All man want freaks, we just don't want 'em for a wife."

—Mark Blackmon, one of Nola's boyfriends

"(Nola) hates that word, normal."

—Sonny Darling, Nola's father

One cannot see Spike Lee's new movie, "She's Gotta Have It", without appreciating his unusual sense of humor and unique approach to filmmaking. Lee wrote, directed, edited, and starred in this unusual love-and-desire comedy, which explores the different perspectives of a love story.

The provocative Nola Darling is played convincingly by Tracy Camila Johns, who does a remarkable job in the film. Her love life is a tangle of relationships with three different men, who are played by Tommy Redmond Hicks, John Canada Terrell, and Spike Lee.

Each of these individuals gives his/her own perspective of the series of events that comprise this idiosyncratic story of sex, anger, love, hunger, and humor. Nola has a unique relationship with each of the three men, and the contrasts between each facet of their interaction provides delightful entertainment for mature audiences.

I won't ruin your pleasure by telling you details. The film is very thought-provoking, yet hilarious. Though it was done on a minimal budget, it is one of the most enjoyable movies I have seen in years. The multi-talented Spike Lee did an excellent job of combining the sensitive and well-written script with relatively unknown actors into such an enjoyable film.

The soundtrack, written by Lee's father, Bill Lee, has excellent jazz sounds and is highly entertaining. Shelton J. Lee was the producer.

All in all, I would definitely check out this film. Spike Lee and his associates did an outstanding job of providing sophisticated comedy with a minimal budget. Hats off to the cast and crew!

Tracy Camila Johns stars as Nola Darling with Redmond Hicks, John Canada Terrell, and Spike Lee starring as the three men in her life in the romantic comedy "She's Gotta Have It", written and directed by Spike Lee.

Spikers prepare for CAA tourney

This final week of the season marked the end of two seniors careers and the beginning of postseason play for the UNCW volleyball team. Seniors Martha Byrd and Stephanie Wall played in their final home game last week while Coach Kathy McDaniel prepared her team for the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) tournament.

During the week, the Lady Hawks saw action against East Carolina, St. Andrews, Virginia Tech, Virginia, and American. The netters finished the week's play with a 3-2 record. Running their overall record to 16-12 and a 4-3 in the CAA.

Last Tuesday night, the Lady Seahawks competed before a filled Hanover Gym. UNCW sank the Lady Pirates, by the scores of 15-10, 15-1 and 15-1. Seniors Byrd and Wall lead the team with their precise setting and powerful hitting. Their outstanding play and leadership was the difference in the first game.

The following two games became a team effort in which the entire squad received playing time. In the final home game of the season the spikers rallied behind the boisterous crowd and embarrassed the Lady Pirates. The game took only a couple of minutes with the Lady Hawks winning 15-1.

The next night the Lady Hawks traveled to Lurainburg to face the Lady Monarchs of St. Andrews. This match was more of a challenge for the netters but UNCW pulled it out in three games, 15-11, 15-7, and 15-11. Extended rallies and tough defense by both squads made up the first game. Neither team was able to gain any momentum until late in the game when the Lady Hawks received the serve and pulled away for the victory. The score in the second and third game was not indicative of the play on the court. The Lady Seahawks coasted to an easy victory in the final games.

Over the weekend UNCW participated in the VA Tech tournament in Blacksburg, VA. The Lady Hawks competed in three matches. UNCW faced host VA Tech, Virginia, and CAA rival American. The netters finished with a 1-2 record in the tourney.

The opening match was well fought against a highly respected Virginia Tech squad. The Lady Hawks defeated the Lady Hawks in three games, by the scores of 15-10, 16-14, and 15-9. UNCW took the Lady Hawks to the limit in each game. Precise serving and intense net play enabled the netters to stay close. Martha Byrd's controlled setting played a key role in the Lady Seahawks attack. UNCW never folded and played to the end but the Lady Hawks were just strong on this occasion.

Again the Lady Hawks were faced with difficult opponent and once again they rose to the challenge only to fall short. UNCW competed against the Lady Pirates of Virginia and played them evenly for three games but lost 15-10, 15-4, and 19-17. The third game, of the match was possibly the best played game of the entire tournament by the Lady Hawks. UNCW and UVA played seven extra points before the Lady Pirates won 19-17. Even though the Lady Seahawks lost they were able hold there heads up in look forward to the match with American.

In the final match of the tourney, the Lady Hawks faced American and for the second time this season they defeated them. The victory was impressive with UNCW winning 15-1, 15-5, and 15-4. The win was easy and convincing. It allowed the Lady Seahawks to end the Virginia Tech tournament on a bright note.

Seniors Martha Byrd and Stephanie Wall ended their playing careers at UNCW this week. Both were four year starters for the Lady Hawks and will be missed. Martha Byrd, a native of Yadkinville, NC, lead the team in assists this season with an average of 4.2 assists per game. Stephanie Wall, a native of Whitsett, NC, provided leadership and experience. Both Byrd and Wall were team captains this season and lead the team on and off the court.

"It was a great game. It was great because it was against ECU. I couldn't ask for a better match to go out on." Byrd remarked after her final home game.

This weekend, November 14 and 15, the Lady Seahawks will compete in the CAA Championships at College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, VA. UNCW will open the tournament with William and Mary and will play ECU in their other first round match. These three teams will make up group A, while James Madison, George Mason, and American will compose group B. The top two teams from each group will meet in the semi-finals.

The Lady Hawks are hoping to improve on last year's semi-final appearance, and make it into the finals of the CAA championships this weekend.

Coach McDaniel had a successful second season and is hoping that the late season momentum picked up by the Lady Hawks will carry over into the tournament. McDaniel has a strong nucleus to work with and a winning attitude among her players. This should be the key to success in the CAA tourney and in 1987.

William & Mary Tribe win 2-0

Seahawks blanked in finale

Visiting William and Mary established school records for total victories and shutouts in a season with a 2-0 triumph over UNC Wilmington in the season finale for both clubs Saturday at Brooks Field.

The Tribe pushed its overall mark to 16-5-1 and Colonial Athletic Association record to 5-1-1 with the win. UNCW concluded its first season under Coach Jackie Blackmore with a 4-11-1 overall and 0-6-1 record in the CAA.

The 16th win snapped a school record for William and Mary, which had 15 victories in 1981 and 1985. It was also the Tribe's 10th shutout, passing the record of nine set in 1975, 1977, 1979 and 1983.

"We were hoping to break the school records because they were team goals toward winning the conference championship and getting an NCAA bid," said Al Albert, William and Mary's 16-year coach. "Since we couldn't go to the NCAA's, we didn't play up the records."

"It was a good solid win, but I'm glad the last two weeks are over. Since the loss to George Mason, we haven't had much motivation. I'm looking forward to the off-season and next year."

In Saturday's match, the two clubs battled even until Albert's unit erupted in the second period.

"That was probably as good a first half as we've played all year," said Blackmore. "Now, we're playing like we should have been early in the season. We're much better than our record indicates."

Senior forward Scott Bell opened the scoring with a goal at the 48:10 mark, getting an assist from Ron Rabb. It was Bell's ninth goal of the season.

Bell also scored W&M's second goal, rocketing a shot past UNCW goalie Donnie Lewis Less than 12 minutes later. The ball blew past

Statistically, William and Mary outshot UNCW, 17-12. The Tribe had five corner kicks and the Seahawks had four.

Tribe goalies Lance Holland and Larry Valentine had five and three saves respectively. Lewis had nine saves for the hosts.

It was the final appearance for three UNCW seniors - fullback Terry Lovell, fullback Edgar Toms and wing Wade Adams.

"We're losing some pretty good players," added Blackmore, "with the biggest loss being Terry Lovell. We also lose two stable players in Edgar and Wade."

Down but not out!

Forward Chris Conway tackles a William & Mary player. The referee rule for play to continue. Senior Terry Lovell, who played in his last game as a Seahawk looks on. William & Mary handed UNCW a 2-0 loss, ending the first season for Head Coach Jackie Blackmore. The Hawks finished the season 4-11-1 and 0-6-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA).

Seahawks picked high in hoop publications

from Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, NC - UNC Wilmington's men's basketball team is being ranked second behind top-rated Navy in the Colonial Athletic Association and senior stalwart Brian Rowsom is getting recognition in many of the pre-season publications on the market.

Out of five periodicals, the Seahawks and new coach Robert McPherson are being picked to finish second to Navy in the Colonial in four magazines - Street & Smith's 1986-87 Basketball Yearbook, The Sporting News 1986-87 Basketball Yearbook, Dick Vitale's 1986-87 Basketball Preview and Hoop Magazine's Basketball Yearbook '87.

Only one publication, Basketball Digest's 1986-87 Yearbook, didn't pick the Seahawks to finish strong. It chose UNCW to place a distant seventh in the CAA race.

"I don't pay a great deal of attention to them," said McPherson of the variety of booklets available. "It's nice to be well thought of, but what really counts is what happens between the lines."

Three publications predicted the CAA's finish to be Navy-UNC Wilmington-George Mason.

The headline "Navy Is On Course, but Climate Is Right For UNC Wilmington" adorned the top of the league's preview in The Sporting News publication. Writer Mike Harris wrote, "UNC Wilmington has been mentioned as a possible title contender this year, although a top three slot is a more realistic goal."

Harris interviewed McPherson and featured the former Sam Houston State University coach in the prologue to the outlook.

In Street & Smith's publication, writer Jerry Lindquist reported "much of the same cast is back" from the 1985-86 squad that had Navy reeling in the CAA tournament's semifinals before missing a couple of shots in the final seconds and losing 62-60.

Lindquist wrote, "Like Navy, UNC Wilmington has a new coach who inherited a team expected to do quite well. From Division II power Sam Houston State, Robert McPherson will find instant pressure, for the Seahawks should be Navy's top challenger. They have Brian Rowsom don't they?"

Rowsom, UNCW's returning 6-9, 225-pound All-CAA performer, was captured in a photo next to the preview. Street & Smith also predicted a Navy-UNC Wilmington-George Mason finish.

Sportscaster Dick Vitale also has the Midshipmen, Seahawks and Patriots atop the CAA standings. The former head coach of the University of Detroit and the NBA's Detroit Pistons said the outlook was bright for UNC Wilmington.

He wrote, "New coach McPherson inherits a solid nucleus including 6-9 center Brian Rowsom (20.3 ppg, 9.5 rpg) who already is the school's all-time leading rebounder and should be No. 1 in scoring, too, before his final season ends. The Seahawks came within a couple missed shots of upsetting Navy in the conference tournament, and they appear to be one of two CAA teams capable of beating the Midships."

Hoop Magazine's Basketball Yearbook '87 said Navy and UNC Wilmington would be the top two teams, but Richmond would beat out George Mason for No. 3 in the standings.

According to writer Tom Tomashek, "In the semifinals of last year's CAA Tournament, the Seahawks lost only 62-60 to Navy, and with Rowsom leading the way, they might be ready to make life even more uncomfortable for the Midshipmen."

Tomashek's All-Conference team includes Rowsom, Navy's David Robinson, Richmond's Rodney Rice, George Mason's Kenny Sanders and American's Frank Ross.

Basketball Digest was the only dissenter on UNC Wilmington's chances during the upcoming campaign. Although writer Phil Axelrod admitted, "Rowsom should keep the Seahawks in the thick of things and could push Robinson for Player-of-the-Year honors," the publication picked the Seahawks to finish next to last in the conference race.

Rowsom, a senior out of Columbia High School in Columbia, Md., needs just 186 points to become the school's all-

Weather hamper runners

From Staff Reports

WILLIAMSBURG, VA - Rainy, muddy conditions took their toll on UNC Wilmington's hopeful cross country team at the Colonial Athletic Association conference meet, according to Coach Dave Agosta.

The Seahawk harriers entered the season-ending meet with improving times, but inclement conditions hampered Agosta's runners in the finale. UNCW's men placed sixth among eight teams and the women finished sixth out of seven entrants.

"I thought our men ran very well," said Agosta. "The course was very slow. Layne (Fuller) and Chris (Daniel) ran well."

Fuller was UNCW's top finisher, coming in 21st with a time of 26:12 over the 5-mile course at Dunbar Farms in Williamsburg, Va. Freshman Chris Daniel (Eastern Wayne/Goldsboro, N.C.) was right behind Fuller in 22nd place at 26:15. Olympian Abdi Bile of George Mason took first with a CAA and meet record time of 23:58.

In team scoring for the men, Navy was first with 36 points followed by George Mason (64), James Madison (70), William and Mary (77), Richmond (149), UNC Wilmington (155), East Carolina (198) and American (214).

Scoring for UNCW's men individually: Layne Fuller (21st/26:12), Chris Daniel (22nd/26:15), David Simmons (39th/27:41), James Powell (44th/27:50), Michael O'Brian (45th/27:59), Phil Meeks (57th/29:06), Brian Pawlak (62nd/30:40) and Phil Costner (63rd/31:06).

UNCW's women, meanwhile, suffered with the weather. Top runner Kris York (Jenks/Tulsa, OK) fell midway into the race and ended up in 10th place with a time of 19:15. Jessica Space of Richmond was the top female finisher with an 18:10 clocking over the 5,000 meters.

Team scoring for the women's side went as follows: George Mason (25), William and Mary (55), James Madison (74), Richmond (107), East Carolina (155), UNC Wilmington (156) and American (188).

"It was a little disappointing," said Agosta. "But we've improved so much over last year. We would have finished a distant last with the team we had last year."

UNCW's finishers and their times: Kris York (10th/19:15), Missy Hall (16th/20:38), Sarah Harris (41st/22:59), Beada Lee (44th/23:27), Melissa Tynniamas (48th/23:43) and Sheila Viola (52nd/24:48).

UNCW Seahawks to host Dalhousie Univ.

from Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, N.C. - New UNC Wilmington Head Basketball Coach Robert McPherson is 3-0 against the outside world and would like to keep it that way Thursday night when his Seahawks entertain Dalhousie University of Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada, in a pre-season exhibition game at Trask Coliseum.

Admission is $5 for adults, $3 for 18-under and children under three are admitted free for the 7:30 p.m. contest. The regular season gets under way Nov. 29 when Army visits UNC Wilmington.

"We're approaching it like a regular game on our schedule," said McPherson. "We're going out to win it. That's our primary objective every time we go out to win."

time scorer. He established a new rebounding mark last season.

The agile big man was rated the fifth best center in the country by Hoop Magazine and No. 18 in the nation by Sport Magazine. Both Street & Smith and Blue Ribbon's Basketball Yearbook afforded Rowson Honorable Mention All-America honors.

Most coaches resistant to controls on income

from NCAA News

Division I head football coaches have two of four NCAA Council proposals to monitor or control coaches' outside income, and head basketball coaches approved only one of the four proposals, according to a survey conducted by Special Council Subcommittee to Review Coaches' Outside Income.

The Council has voted to sponsor the four proposals regarding reporting or control of coaches' outside income at the San Diego Convention in January.

The survey was conducted among head coaches in football and basketball, athletics directors, and chief executive officers at Division I member institutions. The questionnaire return rate was about 60 percent, according to B.J. Shelton, subcommittee chair and faculty athletics representative at Clemson University.

Head football coaches favored by 61 to 39 percent a proposal that would require prior institutional approval before a coach could use the institution's name or logo in endorsing commercial products or services, and they agreed to another proposal by a vote of 85 to 14 percent that would prohibit a coach from accepting any sort of compensation for the scheduling contests or for arranging for particular student-athletes to participate in an event. This proposal was the only one the basketball coaches approved (56 to 44 percent).

Athletics directors approved the proposal concerning the school name or logo by 83 to 17 percent, and CEOs voted 87 to 13 percent to its favor.

The proposal concerning scheduling by coaches was favored by athletics directors (92 to eight percent) and by CEOs (98 to two percent).

Athletics directors and CEOs also strongly endorsed a proposal that would require the institution's chief executive officer to be informed annually of coaches' athletically related income and benefits.

The athletics directors favored the proposal by 70 to 30 percent, and the CEOs approved by 87 to 13 percent. Head football coaches disapproved (80 to 20 percent).

The proposal that brought the strongest vote of disapproval from the coaches is one that would require institutional approval before a coach could accept any compensation from athletics shoe, apparel or equipment manufacturers in exchange for the institution's use of such materials.

The football coaches voted against the proposal 80 to 20 percent, and the basketball coaches turned it down 94 percent to six.

This proposal, however, gained a clear majority vote of the athletics directors (57 to 23 percent).

The subcommittee explained that the intent of the proposal concerning equipment was to deposit such compensation for the coaches, with the school; and if the school decides to give it to the coach, then there is no problem.

McPherson, who enjoyed an outstanding career at Sam Houston State University before moving to UNCW, is very familiar with foreign teams. At Sam Houston, his Bearkats defeated national Olympic teams from Bulgaria, Mexico and Brazil.

Dalhousie is one of Canada's oldest academic institutions. Founded in 1818, the university is known for its emphasis on the medical sciences. On the basketball court, the Tigers posted a 20-13 record last season, including a 13-5 conference mark in the Atlantic Universities Athletic Association.

"I don't know a whole lot about them," said McPherson. "They have pretty good size and they match up well with our front line. They are also big at the guard spot."

Doc Ryan begins his ninth year at Dalhousie with a 78-75 career record with the Tigers. Dalhousie has two starters and four lettermen back from one year ago.

The two starters returning are seniors George Leacock (6-6, 200, Forward) and Mike Gillett (6-5, 190, Guard). Both are transfer students to Dalhousie from other colleges in Canada.

The Tigers split four games with NCAA member schools last season. Dalhousie defeated Assumption (71-66) and Monmouth (81-73), but lost to Boston U. (109-70) and Fairfield (66-53). Those games were played on successive nights Nov. 13-16 last fall.

As for the Seahawks,

Coaches responding to this proposal in the survey said it would force the school to incur greater expense in having to pay for such equipment, if the coach weren't compensated by the manufacturer.

Subcommittee Chair Skelton explained that the coaches might have been fearful that the proposal would eliminate all such arrangements because the wording "without the institution's approval" was not included in the question contained in the survey document.

The intent of the proposal is to have the school monitor or control such arrangements, Skelton said, not to eliminate them.

Fun Run slated for Nov. 16th

from Staff Reports

The annual UNCW Fun Run, a 1.5 mile race sponsored by the Physical Education Majors Club, is scheduled for Tuesday, Nov. 18 at 4 p.m.

Nearly 200 runners are expected to run the race on a course that will weave through parts of the UNCW campus.

To participate, one must pay the three dollar entry fee or pay five dollars and get a Fun Run T-shirt to boot. Just about everyone who competes will win a prize at the post-race drawing. Many Wilmington merchants have donated prizes, ranging from free dinners and pizzas to valuable gifts.

Registration forms can be found at the HPER office in Trask Coliseum, or from any PED 101 professor. Many of those professors are also offering extra-credit points for participating.

For more information contact Dr. Graham Hatcher or Dr. Sue Combs in Trask.

McPherson Show on WWAY TV-3

from Staff Reports

WWAY TV-3 will broadcast The Robert McPherson Show every Sunday afternoon beginning Nov. 16 at 1:30 p.m. and will run until the end of the UNCW basketball season in March.

The show will be 30 minutes in length every Sunday and will be hosted by WWAY Sports Director Gene Motley. The show will feature a variety of segments including features on the Colonial Athletic Association, the UNCW players, coaches, and a special Chalk Talk segment. The show will also feature special segments on the different aspects and departments on the UNCW campus.

Pepsi-Cola, Don Kimball Chevrolet, North Carolina Precious Metals, and Pier 20 will sponsor the weekly show.

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

From Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, NC - Kurt Candler has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the Week by the UNC Wilmington Sports Information Office. Candler is the first athlete from a winter sport to gain the honor.

Candler received the honor for his brilliant performance in a dual meet against Duke University in Durham, N.C. In the meet, Candler won both the one-meter and three-meter diving events and qualified for the regionals that will be held at Louisiana State University. He also qualified last year for the regionals at Clemson University and was the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) threemeter diving champion. Candler, a sophomore from Raleigh, N.C. and son of former Olympic diver and current N.C. State diving coach John Candler, scored 275.4 points in the one-meter event and 313.5 points in the three-meter event. UNCW lost the meet to Duke by the score of 69-44 while the Lady Seahawks dropped a 69-39 decision.

Last week, volleyball player Stephanie Wall was the Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week honoree.

Basketball team goes to the students for support

from Staff reports

Men's Head Coach Robert McPherson, Associate Athletic Director Jim Bass, and The UNCW Cheerleaders will be visiting the dorms and apartments in the coming week to discuss changes in, and the future of UNCW basketball and how UNCW students can get involved.

The first meetings will take place Tuesday night, at 8 p.m. Belk Hall will be the site of the first meeting. The scene will then shift to Hewlett Hall at 9 p.m.

On Wednesday night, meetings will take place in Graham Hall at 8:30 p.m. and Hall 95 at 9 p.m. On Wednesday, Nov. 19, Bass, McPherson, and the Cheerleaders will be in the apartment area at 7:30 p.m. and in Galloway Hall at 8:30 p.m.

Domino's will supply pizza at all meetings while it lasts. The meetings are open to anyone and you are not restricted to attending the meeting in your area or dorm. You are welcome to attend any meeting that suits your schedule.

UNCW opens the 1986-87 season with an exhibition Thursday night against Dalhousie at 7:30 p.m. The first regular season game is Saturday Nov. 29th against Army.

ROTC Honors Veterans In UNCW Ceremony

By Kim Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW Army ROTC detachment held a special tribute to veterans last Tuesday afternoon with a flag-lowering ceremony on campus. Lt. Col. Ronald S. Martin opened the ceremony by explaining what Veteran's Day means. Veteran's Day, originally called Armistice Day had its origins in the desire of Americans to express their appreciation to those who had fought in World War I.

"They set the example for the men and women in today's Army," Lt. Col. Martin said. "It is my hope that our service men and women today and you future officers of tomorrow will not have to become war veterans. Still, we all must be prepared."

Cadet Major David Brock also gave his explanation of why we observe Veteran's Day.

"As college students/ROTC cadets, we could probably give you a definition of it as being the 11th day of the 11th month, Cadet Major Brock said, "a time to honor those who gave and those who risked their lives in defense of this great nation of ours, not only in war but in peace time also."

"We, as cadets, have not grown to fully appreciate the performance of past veterans but as our careers begin in the armed forces, and as we become leaders of men and women, we can see the vast accomplishments and sacrifices of veterans of yesterday and today," Cadet Major Brock said.

Many students from the Creative Arts and Music Department played "Taps" and "To The Colors" during the ceremony.

Festival of Trees raises funds for Area Hospice

By Joseph B. Allen
Staff Writer

Ideas shared among friends can lead to great events. Over four years ago Sandra Robertson was visiting with a friend from the Denver area when her friend mentioned the Festival of Trees fundraising celebration that the Denver area Hospice held annually with great success.

Since Ms. Robertson works with the Wilmington Hospice, she thought that such a fundraising event would meet with similar success.

She was right. The first Festival of Trees that was presented by the Friends of the Hospice was extremely successful, said Shirley Hardee, Publicity Coordinator for the Friends of Hospice's Festival of Trees.

The fourth annual Festival of Trees in Wilmington will begin on Saturday, Nov. 29, 1986 and will run through Dec. 5, 1986. The festival will be held in the Wilmington Hilton Grand Ballroom.

The first Festival of Trees was held in 1982. "The festival is the biggest fundraiser for the Wilmington Hospice," Ms. Hardee said. "The festival could not be done without the tremendous support given to it by the public," she said.

The annual holiday festival helps the Wilmington Hospice in providing funds for its programs of care and support for terminally ill patients and their families. Hospice volunteer workers help the terminally ill and their families by assisting them to live life to the fullest, caring, sharing and serving. Christmas trees are the centerpiece of the festival.

Over 70 Christmas trees have been purchased by community sponsors. Sponsors start buying the Christmas tree for the festival as early as July, Ms. Hardee said.

The Christmas trees will be decorated by various clubs, individuals or businesses in various themes. The trees will be displayed within a coordinated setting in the Hilton Ballroom during the seven-day festival.

Once the festival ends, the decorated trees will be returned to the donor or delivered to a designated individual or community facility as a gift.

Two Christmas trees are being especially decorated by the Friends of Hospice, Ms. Hardee said.

"One of the trees the Friends of Hospice decorates is a Memorial Tree with ornament created in the memory of Hospice patients who have died during the year," she said. "After the festival, the ornaments will be given to the families," she said.

The second tree decorated by the Friends of Hospice will feature religious ornaments. Also featured will be a Boy Scout tree and a Girl Scout tree. Both Scouting trees will be decorated by local Scout troops.

In addition to the decorated Christmas trees, the Festival of Trees will feature a Santa's Breakfast for children and Santa's Shoppe—a place to shop for Christmas gifts with items donated by various community groups as well as Christmas accessories.

A cookbook will be featured by the Hospice titled Festival of Foods. For Christmas shoppers unique gift wrapping will be available.

Ornament-making demonstrations will be held throughout the festival. "The Wilmington Hilton is creating and donating to the festival a large gingerbread house," Ms. Hardee said.

All kinds of toys will be on display at the Festival of Trees. Adults and children will be able to admire doll collections, displays from the Teddy Bear Club, and antique toy display, a creche collection, trains, home furnishings, various art items, a 22-foot tree in the downstairs lobby of the Hilton and a Christmas dinner table.

Christmas wedgewood, duck decoys, antique plate collections and antiques also will be on display.

Attendance Policy Comes Under Fire By Senators

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

An ambiguity in the operating rules the Senate Judiciary Committee caused the Senate's new attendance policy to come under fire for the first time Monday night by none other than the amendment's author, Lee King. King had been absent from two meetings in a row, Nov. 3 and Nov. 10. In accordance with the guidelines set forth in the amendment, he had turned in written excuses for both absences on the afternoons after the respective meetings.

Written excuses are reviewed by the Senate Judiciary Committee which makes a recommendation as to whether or not the excuse is acceptable. The committee then reads the excuses to the open Senate meeting, which votes whether or not to accept the committee's recommendation.

The Senate's names are not read in either the committee or Senate meetings.

Kings's excuses were refused as being too vague, and that is why the senator appealed to the committee. His excuse stated that he had to work the nights of both meetings.

The Judiciary Committee replied that work was an unacceptable excuse since most employers were willing to allow a student time off to attend Senate meetings.

King agreed with this, but reminded the committee that he was employed by Residence Life, and was unable to get a substitute for those nights. His substitute was available most Monday nights.

After much debate, Vice-President Allen Daniel ruled that the committee's policy of deciding on whether or not to take action against senators was Resident Life Charles Maimone told his Resident Director staff to "feel free to turn off the elevators" whenever they saw it.

Maimone had attended the Nov. 10 Senate meeting in response to a memorandum from the Senate received by his office regarding the use of elevators as punishment.

At that meeting, he denied that the elevators in Hall '85 or any other residence hall had been shut down to punish students, but had been turned off for repairs to vandalism.

Third Statue Stolen

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

A third statue has been stolen from the University Union, and police have no clues at the present time as to who the culprit might be.

"Wingler" by Martin Webster, was stolen sometime during the evening or night of Monday Nov. 10. The sculpture is an abstract of a third in flight and has an approximate value of $600.

This latest incident follows the theft of two other statues last weekend, an abstract called "Sentinel" and a popular sculpture of a small boy, "Adam".

Officer Regina Lawson of Campus Police said that investigators had no leads as of Monday (Nov. 17), and that steps had been taken to protect some of the more portable works from being stolen.

"Some of the statues from outside the Union have been moved indoors," she said. "We have moved some pieces into individual offices to protect them further."

She knew of no artists who planned to remove their works from the university because of the thefts.

Dr. Stephen Lequire of the Creative Arts Dept. said that most of the artists had not heard of the thefts, but he emphasized that further steps are being taken to protect the pieces that were easily moved by one or two persons.

The University Union and the Seahawk are offering a combined reward of $50 to the person or persons with information resulting in the return of the sculptures and/or conviction of those involved. Anyone with information should call 395-3229 (the Seahawk) or 395-3184 (Campus Police). All information will be kept confidential.

Drug Offenses During REM Concert

by Robin Hudson
Staff Writer

Campus Police were busy Sunday night when they issued twenty-six citations for drug and alcohol use during the R.E.M. concert.

None of those arrested were UNCW students.

Six citations were issued on campus Sunday for the consumption of alcoholic beverages by someone less than 21 years of age.

Resident students were awakened this week during the night at least seven times by false fire alarms in Galloway Hall and New Hall 85.

In one case a student was charged with causing a safety hazard for remaining inside a Galloway dorm room during the alarm.

One alarm was triggered last Wednesday because a plastic item lying on a stove burner began to melt. Wilmington police responded to the incident. A warrant was issued Nov. 16 for the arrest of a male UNCW student who escaped the campus police station after being arrested for DWI and other charges.

A female UNCW student was charged Nov. 13 with the fictitious use of a parking decal. According to police reports, decal number 6686 was found at McDonald's so the subject placed it on her vehicle.

In two different cases video machines were broken into in the University Union by an unknown person(s) Nov. 16.

In one incident the subject broke into the game room and gained access to several different machines.

Several incidents of property damage were also reported last week. In one case "hit and run" was also involved when the unknown driver of some vehicle pulled in too close to the victim's vehicle and hit it in parking lot "O".

Larceny was reported last week when an unknown subject removed a book bag from the storage shelves in the bookstore Nov. 13.

An unknown subject removed a surfboard from room 105 in Graham Hall Nov. 14.

According to other police reports, one person was charged Nov. 13 with the possession of state signs that came from New Bern, N.C.; and, 893 parking tickets were issued last week.

North Carolina Business Index

Area Business Index Shows Rise

The level of business activity in North Carolina increased in September, according to the First Wachovia Business Index. The index registered 137.3, up to 0.5 percent from the level for August.

Total nonagricultural employment in the state gained 0.4 percent. For the nation as a whole, nonagricultural employment in North Carolina has risen 3.0 percent while national employment growth has averaged 2.2 percent.

The average manufacturing work week was unchanged from August at 40.6 hours. New claims for unemployment insurance were down 0.3 percent, and residential building permits rose 1.1 percent in September.

Manufacturing employment gained 0.4 percent in September. Higher employment was reported in the apparel, chemical, furniture and machinery sectors. However, textile employment was down 0.2 percent and lumber and food industries also experienced employment declines. For the nation, manufacturing employment slipped 0.2 percent during the month.

Employment in the nonmanufacturing sector recorded a gain of 0.4 percent. Higher employment was reported in construction, services and trade. The number of persons employed in the government sector was unchanged from August.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for North Carolina was 5.4 percent in September, up 0.2 percentage points from August. The national rate was 7.0 percent, also up 0.2 percentage points from last month.

The First Wachovia North Carolina Business Index measures the level of economic activity in North Carolina on a monthly basis. Using 1976 as a base of 100, it reflects indicators of employment, industrial production and construction activity in the state's economy. Data are adjusted to smooth the effects of historical seasonal factors and certain statistical aberrations.

Sexual Assaults Plague San Diego Campus

SAN DIEGO, CA (CPS) -- San Diego State University has been rocked by six sexual assaults on the campus since September.

Most recently, in late October, a man raped a woman at gunpoint in a campus bathroom.

Campus women, says student patrol supervisor Robert McManus, are not becoming particularly frightened, but they are using the campus escort service more.

Last year, McManus's service escorted an average of 80 to 100 women a night back to their dorms and apartments. Traffic this year has increased to 150 to 170 people a night, he says.

Campus police also have put two more officers on duty to walk the school grounds at night.

Nevertheless, no one is quite sure what to do about the crime wave or why it's happening now.

"We've only had three or four rapes in the last eight years," says SDSU spokeswoman Sue Ryan. "And I have no idea why they're happening now."

No one, in fact, knows how much of a problem rape -- whether committed by strangers or by "acquaintances" -- is on any campus.

"There isn't any solid data as to how common rape is on campuses," says Jane Chapman of "Response" magazine, a Washington, D.C., publication covering crimes against women and children.

"However, all information points to the fact that they are largely unreported," she says.

Pam Blackwell of the San Diego "Crisis Team" agrees, adding that "often when a woman is raped, her emotions won't match what's happened to her. She will call a couple of days after it's happened, and say with a cheery voice 'two days ago a man raped me for six hours.'"

Because of such trauma, "if you're not aware of the situation, you won't believe her."

Occasionally, campus hysteria about a rapist on the loose will grow out of rumors. Last fall, for example, Indiana University of Pennsylvania students accused campus police of covering up a series of 11 rapes on the campus, only to find the IUP student who began the rumors admitted she fabricated the story of her rape. There had been no other recent assaults.

All too often, however, a campus will suffer a crime wave. During six weeks in November, 1985, four University of Illinois women were assaulted.

Campuses usually respond with beefed-up security patrols and aggressive safety education.

After a summer, 1985, series of rapes on and around the Central Michigan University campus, for instance, CMU housing officials slipped under dorm doors flyers reading "If your door was unlocked, more than this could get in your room."

At San Diego State, "there appears to be no connection in any of the attacks," Ryan says.

In September, campus police arrested a 21-year-old SDSU student on suspicion of rape, but released him when the victim refused to testify.

Police have made no other arrests in the cases, some of which were reportedly "date rapes."

Rape became a major issue on campus last year when an 18-year-old student reported being attacked by more than one man at a party at the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house. The district attorney's office said there wasn't enough evidence to press charges, but university investigators concluded an attack had occurred and threw the fraternity off campus for five years.

CAMPUS CAPSULE

WILMINGTON -- The UNCW 6 O'Clock Jazz Group and Jazz Quintet will perform a mini-concert at 8 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 23 in King Hall. Admission is free.

The quintet will perform standard compositions such as Love for Sale, On a Clear Day, Love, Man and an original composition by Frank Bongiorno called Mama's Boy.

Concluding the concert will be the 6 O'Clock Jazz Group. Compositions to be performed include Look Out, Bluesy Basie, That Warm Feeling, and a gospel-influenced composition called Walk Him Up the Stairs.

For further information contact the UNCW music division, 395-3390.

"Reflections on Vietnam -- Then and Now" will be the topic of a lecture at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 19, at Bryan Auditorium in Morton Hall. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Speaking will be Dr. Paul Kattenburg, a former member of the United States Foreign Service and Charles L. Jacobson, Professor of Public Affairs at the University of South Carolina.

Jacobson is the author of "The Vietnam Trauma in American Foreign Policy 1945-75" and of numerous articles and studies in the fields of international affairs and diplomacy. Dr. Kattenburg is identified in the Pentagon Papers and in several histories of the Vietnam War as an early dissenter with the U.S. government on aspects of U.S. Vietnam policy.

Kattenburg visited Indochina (including Vietnam) in 1983 as a part of small group of ex-U.S. diplomats.

WILMINGTON -- Garland and mistletoe, Christmas trees and holiday aromas are all part of a holiday tour of historic New Bern, offered through UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

The one-day excursion on Saturday, December 13 will be highlighted by a tour of 10 historic riverfront homes and churches and a visit to Tryon Palace, resplendent in authentic holiday decor.

Dr. Alan Watson, UNCW history professor, will prepare participants for the trip with an introductory study class on December 9 from 7:30-8:45 p.m. in Room 104, Morton Hall.

Included in the $52 fee is the preparatory class, transportation on a modern, fully-equipped bus and all activities and events, except meals. Buses will leave Wilmington at 8:00 a.m. and return by 9:30 p.m.

Registration deadline is November 21. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

The UNC Gospel Choir is sponsoring a Thanksgiving food drive for the needy. Anyone interested in donating nonperishable goods can do so during 18-21 between 10:00-3:30 p.m. in UU or call ext. 3832.

On November 19, 1986 at 8:00 p.m. the University Program Board, Halmoon Productions Committee will be throwing their annual talent show - this year it is Open Mike Nite. Walk-ins are welcome and people who do what they are best at. There are a lot of people signed up but space is still available. Bands must sign up early. But walk-ins are welcome the night of the show. Any and all talent is welcome.

The North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher will be offering the following films in October and November.

Nov. 22 - The Sea Turtle.
Nov. 26 - Beneath the Killing Sea.
Nov. 28 - 40 Million Summers.

Films are at 2:00 p.m. unless otherwise noted and are free to the general public.

The Aquarium also offers numerous other programs from field trips through the salt marshes to the "Creature Feature", which allows visitors to become better acquainted with various forms of aquatic life.

Facilities include more than 20 aquariums featuring everything from sea turtles and various crustaceans to the shark tank. The Aquarium is open from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

A new group is forming on campus. S.C.E.C. - Student Council for Exceptional Children has a goal of serving handicapped people. Some service projects for Christmas that are scheduled are as follows: Give presents to residents at Caswell Institution for Retarded and to help mentally retarded adults at ADAPT Adult Vocational Center make Christmas crafts. A bake and craft sale has been set for December 4th and 5th. The next meeting will be posted, if interested contact Morgan Wells at 799-3743.

Alpha Delta Pi received the award for the highest Grade Point Average for the Spring Semester. They are currently participating in a service project for hospice.

This space contributed as a public service.

A few "quit tips"

- Hide all ashtrays, lighters, etc.
- Lay in a supply of sugarless gum, carrot sticks, etc.
- Drink lots of liquids, but pass up coffee & alcohol.
- Tell everyone you're quitting for the day.
- When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath, hold it for 10 seconds, & release it slowly.
- Exercise to relieve the tension. Try the "buddy system," and ask a friend to quit too.

Museum Raises $800 at Auction

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

The first benefit auction for the UNCW Museum of World Cultures was not as successful as was hoped for, said Marc Dreyfuss, president of the Museum Club.

Various fine arts, collectables, antiques, Turkish and oriental rugs were among the hundreds of items that were available for purchase during the public auction held on Thursday, Nov. 13 in Room 100 of the UNCW University Union.

"The auction raised $800.00 for the Museum of World Cultures," Dreyfuss said.

The various items that were auctioned off were assembled from private collections and from dealers across North Carolina. Minimum bids were set for each of the 145 items offered at the public auction. Any funds realized over the minimum bids were donated to the Museum of World Cultures.

Dreyfuss said 750 invitations to the auction were sent out. Only 75 people attended the auction.

Charles Jones, an African art dealer from Wilmington and longtime Museum board member who is currently serving as vice president, chaired the event for the Museum. The auction featured a "broad spectrum of objects from around the world in a wide variety of price ranges from $10 to $3,000."

"There [was] something for everyone, including a number of very unusual, high-quality pieces usually not available in Wilmington," Jones said.

The auction was conducted by Jim Kennedy, of Kennedy Antiques of Durham. Kennedy faced a tough audience of buyers, Dreyfuss said.

The money raised from the auction will go to paying for the programs the Museum of World Cultures is planning in the upcoming year. No money was lost on the auction, Dreyfuss said. The Museum of World Cultures is in the black, he said.

"The auction was a learning experience," Dreyfuss said. The Museum of World Cultures may hold another auction early next year.

Wade Scholarships Awarded to Five

The UNCW departments of political science and history at UNCW have awarded five J.E. L. Wade Scholarships for the 1986-87 school year. The recipients are Lorie Ann Herington, Joseph M. Pressley, Jr. and Robert D. Taylor, all of Wilmington, Glen E. Barnes, Jr. of Cash Corner and Susan Perry of Wilmington and Racine, Wisconsin.

- Herington, a 1986 honor graduate of New Hanover High School, is a freshman at UNCW majoring in political science. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Herington of Wilmington.

- Pressley, who is UNCW senior class president, has outstanding academic and leadership records. He is a political science major and plans to become a lawyer. He is the son of Joseph and Mary Pressley of Wilmington.

- Barnes is a senior, double majoring in history and philosophy. He has received recognition in Who's Who Among American College Students, was awarded a UNCW Research Fellowship, and is active in student government, the political science club and the historical society. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Glen E. Barnes of Cash Corner, NC.

Taylor, a sophomore majoring in history, is very active in the UNCW Historical Society. He is the son of John and Alma Taylor of Bonnieville, KY and Barbara Andrews of Arkansas City, KS.

- Susan Perry, a junior majoring in history and Spanish, is a dean's list student. She graduated from William Horlick High School in Racine, WI, in 1984, where she was active in the Shakespeare Club, and she worked as a tutor. Perry is the granddaughter of James Marion Joyner of Wilmington and daughter of Marion P. Joyner of Wilmington and Clarence A. Perry of Racine, WI.

The James E. L. Wade Scholarships in history and political science are awarded annually by UNCW to two incoming freshmen pursuing a bachelor's degree on a full-time basis. They may also be awarded to upperclass students if an opening occurs. The history and political science departments each award a scholarship in the amount of $2,000. The scholarship can be renewed for the remaining three years of academic work, for a potential value of $8,000 for each recipient.

The Wade Scholarships are made possible by a bequest from James E. L. Wade, one of Wilmington's most popular public figures. Wade, who also served as state senator, Wilmington City Council member, mayor of Wilmington, played a significant role in the founding of UNCW.

Bring Adam Back-Please

Vandalism at any university is not uncommon; needless to say, UNCW is no better than many. The events of the past week, though, have finally brought many students out from under the comfortable blanket of apathy.

I refer, of course, to the theft of one of the few things students here at UNCW by the sea have agreed upon in quite some time . . . Adam.

Seemed like everybody liked Adam — somebody liked him a little too much.

Often as not, on Monday mornings Adam would show the effects parties just like everybody else. He was wearing a Chicago Cubs cap one morning, with an empty Budweiser can under his chin. On an especially sunny day, he was supplied a pair of Wayfarers to fend off the sun.

Now, someone has decided that Adam would make a better doorstop and should be hidden from the public that has enjoyed him.

And last, but by no means least, an artist is out not only a physical piece of time and work, but a "part" of herself, if you will.

We don't know if the statue was insured, either by the University or the artist, but someone is going to have to pay for Adam. There is no real reason for the theft to have occurred; the statue would not be marketable, since you don't carry a terra cotta sculpture into Joe's Pawn and Jewels and say "what can you give me for this?"

The police have even promised repeatedly not to press charges if the statue is returned and a major investigation is not needed. The Seahawk and the Union are offering a cash reward, with no questions asked.

Just bring Adam back.

Veterans' Day Forgotten by Many

One of America's most important holidays has come and gone, and it is doubtful that many noticed.

Veteran's Day.

The day which America sets aside to honor those who have given their all and often their lives in the service of this country. Brave men and women who have tried to protect smaller countries from land hungry empires that promised one thing and often gave quite another.

People who were either lauded or cursed — sometimes simultaneously — by the people who they sought to protect.

Approximately twenty people attended a flag lowering ceremony held at UNCW in honor of the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, a date in 1918 when the first "modern" war ended, leaving Europe a ravaged shell.

Twenty years later, another war tore through Europe, Africa, Asia and the Pacific. In 1945, the victors extended a hand to help the once again ravaged defeated regain their economies.

Then, as revolution shook small nations everywhere, the two new superpowers met by proxy in a heretofore unknown country known as Korea.

Fifteen years after that, another miniscule country by the name of Vietnam came into being, and fifty thousand Americans gave their lives, some willingly, some not so willingly, in hopes of saving another people from the form of government that works beautifully on paper, but...

And finally, after years of being ashamed and ignored, the Vietnam Veterans are finally getting the recognition they deserve.

Patriotism is "in style" again, and let us hope it never goes out.

To all those who were lauded or forgotten, who have grandchildren or were only children themselves, we thank you.

GRAMMAR HOTLINE

Grammar is nobody's favorite subject.

Many a college student has puzzled over where to place a comma and how to correct a dangling participle. And many a college student has shed tears when they discovered that their perfect term paper received an A-plus for content, but an F for grammar.

College students are not alone in their struggle to use correct grammar. Lawyers often worry about the implications of an apostrophe and advertising agencies wonder whether or not to use who or whom in their advertising campaigns.

The most common place a person—whether he be a college student, a lawyer, advertiser or writer—will call when confronted with a problem of correct grammar usage is the English department of the nearest university.

Strange calls about grammar prompted Purdue University's West Lafayette school's writing lab to start up a grammar hotline.

Calls from a diaper company that was wondering whether or not to use who or whom in a national advertising campaign and from a newspaper wondering about the plural of hole in one prompted the creation of the Purdue grammar hotline.

Calls to the Purdue hotline come in from all over the world. The questions callers ask range from the use of non-sexist language, to business writing, to how to deal with a salutation when you don't know whom your writing is to and to why the personal pronoun "I" is capitalized.

The Purdue hotline is one of 31 grammar hotlines in 20 states and two Canadian provinces. A directory of all the grammar hotlines is compiled yearly by the Tidewater Community College in Virginia Beach, Va.

The directory compiled by the Tidewater Community College is not comprehensive.

The Tidewater Community College mailed out more than 5,000 directories last year upon request and receipt of a stamped, self-addressed envelope. The new grammar hotline directory for 1987 will be out in January.

In addition to answering questions about grammar, the Purdue hotline has also started a newsletter for writing labs.

The Purdue University grammar hotline can be contacted at 317-494-3723.

If the Purdue grammar hotline is too faraway to call, other closer college English departments or academic or public libraries will probably answer questions about grammar informally without giving such service a formal name.

"HAWKE" Recognition Urged

Dear Editor:

For the past couple of months I have had the disappointing experience of reading supposedly professional publications squabble over rather petty issues. Though I understand that these papers are not to be compared with such publications as the Washington Post or New York Times, they are at least supposed to have some professional ethics. I would expect this type of journalistic bickering from some trashy tabloids who make their money from sensationalism. I also understand that the "Hawke" has applied for club status. This is unheard of in most other colleges that I have attended.

By being accepted as a club the "Hawke" has to follow the school's policy of club recognition. The rule which would effect them the most is that the staff would have to be either school students, staff or faculty.

This must mean that the "Hawke" either wants to compete fairly and professionally with the "Seahawk" or they are trying to commit journalistic suicide. The SGA would be wise to accept the "Hawke's" petition to become a club. First it would take some of the fuel out of the "Hawke's" fire and secondly it would give the student body two different points of view to the issues that effect the students and as people in this ever-changing world. Healthy competition and professional criticism are the foundation of American culture. I speak from experience having worked with a very large, well known professional contractor. As you know most contractors are under constraint review by both government and domestic buyers. So they either have to learn to take criticism from these sources and well as internal sources or lose their contracts. They must also deal with rival competitors on a professional basis, who claim to make a comparable product for less and provide a better salary with better benefits for its employees. The Company I am referring to is still at this time the top contractor for both government and domestic contracts in their diverse product line. The "Seahawk" should take it as a professional challenge and compete with the "Hawke" to provide the most concise and unbiased facts available. This will only make both publications more competitive and professional which would make me and a majority of the student population most appreciative.

J. W. King

While The Seahawk will not longer comment on letters concerning the Hawke, we would like to correct the writer on the point that The SGA does not approve or disapprove any clubs on campus. The Student Organizations Committee accepts applications from clubs that wish to be affiliated with the University. After the application process the club turns in twelve copies of their constitution to the SOC for review and approval by the board.

To the best of our knowledge the Hawke has not applied for affiliation with the Student Government Association. This affiliation would entitle them to request funds from the SGA.

The SGA could not, and would not, control the Hawke or any other student organization.

Do some research.

This is World Hunger Awareness Week at UNCW. We all know about and have concern for the hungry of our world. It is old news. And since it's such a huge problem, I'd just as soon ignore it. But I can't. None of us can.

Please let yourself consider and be upset by the following facts:

- * 15 million children die each year from hunger or hunger-related causes. This is more than 40,000 children per day worldwide.

- * 100 million children in the world are malnourished. This is one in five of the world's children

- * A million tons of grain would feed more than 4 million people for a year.

- * The surplus hanging over the world wheat market is almost 130 million tons in 1985.

- * Every day, the world produces two pounds of grain for every man, woman, and child on earth. That is enough to provide everyone 3,000 calories a day, well above the recommended daily minimum of 2,300 calories.

- * 55 percent of the grain exported by the United States goes to feed animals, not people.

- * The rich countries (not quite 25 percent of the world's population) consume between two-thirds and three-quarters of the world's production, including its food production. Their animals alone eat nearly a third of all grains harvested.

- * 36 of the world's 40 poorest countries export food to North America, Africa, where more than half the population suffers from chronic protein deficiencies, exports protein foods to Europe.

- * One-half of 1 percent of one year's world military expenditures would pay for all the farm equipment needed to increase food production and approach self-sufficiency in food-deficit low-income countries by 1990.

- * The cost of a single nuclear submarine equals the annual education budget of 23 developing countries with 160 million school-age children.

- * For the price of one jet fighter plane, 40,000 village pharmacies could be set up.

- * A modern tank costs $1 million; that amount could improve storage facilities for 100,000 tons of rice and save more than 4,000 tons annually. The same sum could provide classrooms for 30,000 children.

- * One day's military expenditures — more than $1.5 billion — could finance the entire malaria eradication program of the United Nations.

So What Can We do? In the short run you can do two things:

- * participate in a 5 mile hunger walk Tuesday beginning at 3 p.m. outside the University Union or sponsor someone in that walk or contribute cash at a table in the University Union.

- * Miss-a-meal at cafeteria Thursday lunch. If you sign up Wednesday at the cafeteria and let your meal card have Thursday lunch counted off, ARA will contribute cash to world hunger relief projects. Or, if you do not have a meal plan, put your lunch money in the Hunger box at the table in the University Union.

In the long run we have to think about our lifestyles, our values, and our vocations. Might you consider choosing a career that is related to Hunger relief?

But for now, please remember, IT IS BETTER FOR YOU TO FEED ONE HUNGRY NEIGHBOR THAN LAMENT WORLD HUNGER.

Please join in and help us.

No Peace On Earth

With the season to be jolly just around the corner many people take the time to look at the past year. They also take the time to sing and rejoice in goodwill towards man. Unfortunately, there is no peace on earth, no goodwill this Christmas. There is, however, war and pain. An Associated Press Survey reported that at least forty-three countries were at war in 1986, a year the United Nations had hopefully designated the "International year of Peace."

The human cost is difficult to assess. The Center of Defense Information, a privately financed research office in Washington, estimates as many as five million people have been killed in the current wars. The bloodiest has been Cambodia's sixteen year civil war which has left an estimated one million to two million dead.

Yet some of the worst of today's wars are hidden from world view. In the Iran-Iraq conflict, for example, foreign journalists are rarely allowed to the front. The CDI lists the nationalist conflicts in Northern Ireland and Spain's Basque region among its wars, but the rest are being fought in often inaccessible corners of the Third World. And, of course, modern weapons certainly don't help. These weapons make warring groups even more deadlier. The political face of conflict is also changing for the worse - many more countless are becoming indirectly involved.

Take the good old U.S. of A., for example. Our state in these wars are growing. "Covert" U.S. aid to the guerrillas in Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Angola and Cambodia is believed to be more than $500 million a year. $500 million!! Granted these are our allies but this is a war-people are dying.

I suppose it is relatively easy for a person to sit over here in the states and simply ignore the facts. After all - the nastiest battle we see is the Senate race. But what I simply cannot grasp is the lack of action taken by our political leaders. This is not to say that some haven't tried. I realize that the road to be traveled is a long one but we must continue.

Now Pope John Paul II had the right idea. His "World Day of Prayer for Peace" is considered partly successful. Guerrilla fighters and warring factions in at least eleven nations temporarily laid down their weapons in a response to the pope's call. This global twenty-four hour truce was held October 27th. The governments of sixty countries, including Israel and Iraq sent messages supporting the idea. And in El Salvador, the day of prayer produced the first full respite in seven years of fighting.

Now I fully believe in the separation of Church and State so I'm not saying that prayer is not a realistic answer. But the pope's heart felt wishes did make a difference. He is aware of the situation and made his contribution. Just as all of us can - we can write and voice our opinions to our senator and governors - anyone that will listen. We cannot continue to "lead lives of quiet desperation" or many more bleak Christmases will follow.

Republicans Create Campaign Fiasco

By Richard Viguierie
Syndicated Columnist

Republicans lost the 1986 election months ago, when they chose a "pragmatic" strategy of avoiding controversial issues. After six years in which they spent a billion dollars, during the administration of the most popular Republican president in history, the GOP is no closer to majority status than it was before.

In most governments and most businesses, a fiasco on the order of the 1986 campaign would bring calls for mass resignations.

But don't expect much of a change in the political operations at the White House, the Republican national committee, and the offices of the GOP's Congressional leadership. The same sort of "pragmatic" establishment Republicans who blew realignment will probably continue to run things as they have for decades.

A historic opportunity was lost this year. Ignoring polls that showed national issues favoring the Republicans, the GOP leadership allowed the Democrats to focus the election on local, pork-barrel issues. When House Speaker Tip O'Neill said, "All politics is local," he was describing the ideal strategy members of his own party. Leave it to the Republicans to play the game according to Tip's rules!

In election after election, the GOP downplayed ideology even in the U.S. Senate races in the South, where ideology was the Republican candidates' strongest suit. The issue-oriented campaigns that worked so well in 1980 were replaced with campaigns of personality. In recent years, Republicans have made gains by running on national issues; that's how they overrode the Democrats' advantage on local issues. This year, in the absence of national issues, traditional Democratic voters returned to their traditional Democratic voting patterns.

The lack of national issues in the '86 campaign was, pure and simple, the fault of the GOP leadership. With key positions held by liberals such as Senator John Heinz (R-Pennsylvania), chairman of the Republican Senate campaign, the party developed no national theme. It ran no national advertising asking people to cast a Republican vote based on the philosophical differences between the parties. Aside from a too-little-too-late effort to make the Strategic Defense Initiative an issue, the President avoided controversy and talked mostly about what good buddies he was with Candidate X. Of course, the Democrats still seem intent on drafting taxes, surrendering to the Cuban occupation forces in Nicaragua, and preventing the appointment of judges who are tough criminals. Yet the national Republican Party leadership claimed it could find no national issues on which to turn the election.

Explaining why the party ran no national campaign, GOP Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf said, "There are no overarching national issues that cut the same everywhere." And there weren't only because the GOP leadership failed to latch onto an issue, develop a unified party position, and due to the American voter on the importance of the issue and the differences between the parties. Imagine what might have been if the Republican Party had turned the nation's attention to the Democrats' record of weakness toward the Soviet Union!

Remember the Panama Canal giveaway? It wasn't an issue until Ronald Reagan and the conservatives made it an issue. Bill Brock, then the Republican national chairman, refused to use

To Mink or Not To Mink, That is The Question

I found the following document in the pocket of a mink coat I tried on recently in a fur salon. It is apparently a copy of a speech. I don't know exactly what to make of it, but here it is:

SPEECH TO HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS TO PROMOTE MEMBERSHIP IN FFA (FUTURE FURRIERS OF AMERICA)

It is great to see all you fine students who have come to hear about the FFA, today, and I appreciate your interest in the Furriers United for Retail Rodents, of which I have the privilege of being president. It is fine, outstanding students like you good folks who make this county the great nation that it is.

I know many of you have heard the so-called Animal Rights groups speaking and read some of their slanted, unfair propaganda, and I want to answer their charges. They say that the fur industry is cruel to animals, that it should be outlawed. Well, let me make this perfectly clear: those animal rights people are a bunch of bleeding-heart liberal pinkos. Why wearing mink coats is the American Way; it's as American as apple pie and mom. When people work hard in this great American free enterprise system and are rewarded by making a pile of money, they are entitled to some luxuries. Why, my Mom has a mink coat, and what's wrong with that? And as for being cruel to animals, what did a chinchilla ever do for you? If we start worrying about the rights of fur-bearing animals, we will soon be outlawing the killing of cattle and hogs and chickens — and then worrying about the rights of vegetables and fruits — and where will it all end? We would all starve to death.

The fur industry creates jobs and puts money in the economy, money that hard-working Americans need to support their families. There are the people who work on the ranches where the animals are raised, those who process the furs and make the fur garments, people in wholesale and retail sales of fur; all of them depend on the fur industry to support their families. Why, there's nothing unfair or cruel

... What did a chinchilla ever do for you?...

About these fur animals — have you ever seen a mink? It's such a vicious animal that if you had to handle it you would soon want all minks killed — why those critters will tear you to pieces, I know. When I was a boy, living down on the farm — I had to work around the farm because we were poor, hard-working folks who didn't have much money — sometimes I would come across wild minks, and they were the meanest little varmints, let me tell you. They all deserve to die. The pioneers of this great county, great men like Daniel Boone, killed animals for fur, and where would this great Land of the Free be today without people like them?

about this industry which employs so many people.

So I am gratified to see you fine young people supporting the cause of FURR. After all, furriers have a right to make a living, too; isn't that the American Way? In fact, all over the county people are supporting the cause of the fur industry and joining this fine high school organization, the Future Furriers of America; the FFA has had a tremendous increase in membership lately. All those people can't be wrong, can they?

The way I see it, you are either for the American Way or you are against it. I know all of you wonderful people will make the right choice and join the FFA. Thank you.

Survivor

BY JEFFERSON C. WEAVER

The Geiger counters said that the radiation levels outside had finally reached a safe level; he could venture out into a brave new world.

He chose an automatic pistol from the case as the sides, and strapped it to his hip. From the case he took one of the heavy .30 calibre assault rifles, and filled the pouches on his belt with ammunition. He checked the fresh water in his canteens and finally attached a personal radiation meter to his breast pocket.

He had read all the books, attended every lecture he could find, and spent huge sums of money on this retreat. He was going to make it through the final big blowout; he was a survivor.

He had studied and planned and worked long hours building the virtually impregnable bomb shelter under his garage. His wife would never come near it. She refused to even open the door that led down to it; she said it reminded her of a tomb.

When the missiles had been launched, she refused to go into the shelter; he had tried begging, cajoling and finally threatening her until it was too late. He had gone into the shelter alone, without even saying goodbye. His last sight of her was that of a few tearstreaks, though it had been years since she had cried in front of him. Must have been the fear of death.

He wasn't afraid; he had years of food in either end of the long tunnel he now called home. He had thousands of rounds of ammunition; he had a chemical toilet and three huge water tanks here and there through the yard, underground and encased in cement. Even the worst calculations said that the water in some areas would be safe to drink in five or six years.

She had said there was no reason to live if and when the blowout occurred; she claimed there was no reason to do all these preparations, they could enjoy the money now, because why have it all blown to smithereens and be wasted. Even if it didn't all get blown away, you'd die a slow death of radiation and that would be worse —

That was when he slapped her. And that was when the relationship began to die.

Daily he convinced himself that he didn't really love her anymore, but he couldn't afford the shelter if he didn't have both incomes.

Besides, what would the neighbors think of them if they broke up.

The outside door to the shelter swung open finally, after he had unlatched and unbolted the complicated locking mechanism. The seal cracked, and fuzzy sunlight poured into the "mop-room," which was designed to keep people from tracking radioactive fallout into the shelter area.

He braced himself, expecting hordes of mutant beings attacking his shelter in radiation crazed frenzies. He waited to see stony faced Russian soldiers staring at him over the sights of their AK-47 assault rifles, lining up on the center of his sterile yellow anti-radiation suit, intent on smashing his heart with a chattering bust of automatic gunfire.

Instead, he saw nothing. All the houses along the street had been reduced to the burned brick of their crumbling foundations. Mounds of melted and mishapen glass made grotesque prisms on the red sand that lay like a light coat of desert dust over everything.

He started to shuffle around through the dust, kicking up odd pieces here and there — a plate, warped and bent in the middle, a drinking glass (at least he thought that was what the blob might have been), a tiny conglomerate of gold and stone (right where she would have been standing at the first blast, he thought, and then erased the thought from his mind.)

A little brass square that was only the slightest bit melted glistened dully in the red sun, and he leaned over for a closer look, giving the appearance of some squat yellow monster bending laboriously over for a bite to eat. He turned it over with his shoe.

Somehow, the picture of it and his wife had survived the hellish temperatures.

The photo had been taken before the still birth of their only child. The glass had melted along the edges, sealing the photograph to the brass frame.

He slung the rifle and picked the grey tinted photo up in his clumsy radiation-proof mittens.

She was in her seventh month, and her cheeks were a healthy, glowing pink. He was standing next to her, an arm proudly holding her tight, a fatherly smile on his work-worn face.

The assault rifle slipped from its place over his shoulder. The steel butt plate hit the ground, and stirred up a small cloud of dust before he let it slip to the ground. He looked around what was once his neighborhood, his home.

Nothing. No one without a shelter like his could have survived the blasts that he felt as they rocked the earth in terrifying earthquakes that never ended.

He was the only survivor.

He looked to the picture.

She was gone. All the nights he spent at the bars when he could have been with her; all the times he wouldn't give in and let her have her way just once.

All the times he spent working on the shelter instead of being with her.

He looked up at the sun from behind the anti-radiation mask, peering through the hazy, deadly clouds that now surrounded the globe.

He looked back to the picture, the last survivor, and drew out the automatic. The well-oiled safety dropped with a smooth metallic click, and he pulled the hood and mask from his head. He placed the muzzle against the side of his skull, and took a deep breath of the foul dead air.

The Creek Brings Original Music to Wilmington

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Imagine a native North Carolina rock and roll band that has managed to combine its own original style with some of the finer vocal and songwriting characteristics of highly successful groups like Styx, Kansas, and Journey to produce three very successful regional albums in the past five years.

Imagine how such a group could capture national attention by appearing on the country's largest televised talent show, garner international attention by producing the best selling import album in England, be included on the Miller American Rock Network compilation album, and yet, linger on the verge of gaining the national recognition that they seek.

The group that you are imagining is The Creek, formerly known as Sugarcreek, who have now proclaimed themselves to be "sugar free" with the Beaver Records debut of their fourth album, entitled simply "The Creek".

The band is comprised of five multi-talented musicians. Lead singer Tim Clark also plays percussion instruments. Jerry West plays guitar, Mike Barber plays bass, and Lynn Samples is the drummer. All of the members of The Creek also perform on vocals.

Finally convinced to shorten their name by the fact that their fans had long referred to themselves as "Creek Freaks", the band has gained international notoriety for being an outstanding American band that has been overlooked by major national record labels.

The Charlotte-based band released their first LP, "Live at the Rony", in 1981, and the single "Speed Limit" was well received throughout the region and helped establish the group in the Southeast.

"Fortune", the group's second album, contained ten original compositions and was released in record contained 12 cuts, six each from "Fortune" and "Rock the Night Away". The LP has been favorably reviewed by the entertainment press in England, Italy, Spain, Holland, and Germany. It continues to sell well across Europe.

The new album reflects a captivating range of songs and a new dimension in the group's sound. The LP, which was produced and recorded by Chapel Hill's Steve Gronback, contains a written by Jerry West. West, who sounds remarkably like Journey's Steve Perry, also performs the lead vocals on the song. According to band manager Dave Fisher, who is also the album's executive producer, it will be released as the group's next single.

The album, which is available locally at Record Bar and Camelot record shops, is hot. Fisher is enthusiastic about its possibilities, particularly since at least one of the international groups whose number of impressive tunes that reflect the progressive rock sounds that have made them so successful. "Arthur Whiteside", the first single, reflects both the group's intriguing musical abilities and the songwriting skills of Jerry West and Tim Clark. It was released in July to considerable regional airplay.

"Institute of Rock-n-Roll" is one of the group's rowdier album cuts, along with "Just Another Fool" and "Six Days to Sunday". Songwriters Jerry West, Tim Clark and Rick Lee have really outdone themselves with rockin' jams and love songs on this LP. The two songs on which the whole band collaborated ("Six Days to Sunday" and "Love Will Stay") reflect the diversity of their many talents.

Of particular note is "You Don't Owe Me", which was the summer of 1982. The disc received national attention and led to a mainstage spot at the National Association for Campus Activities (NACA) convention in Baltimore in February 1983. The single, "Suzie" was added to the playlists of more than 200 radio stations. Videos of the two "Fortune" cuts were shown on many PBS, commercial, and pay TV stations.

Their next single, "What a Night", was reviewed on American Bandstand's "Rate a Record" in December 1983 and gained the band significant national airplay for that cut.

Their third album was released in July 1984. "Rock the Night Away" contained all original tunes, and the title cut single was recommended by Billboard as "a record with potential for significant chart action." The magazine also recommended "Together Again" and stated that the "rock ballad recalls Styx in its structure and delivery." All three singles from "Rock the Night Away" received "recommended status" - quite a feat for a band without national record label ties.

Last year, Sugarcreek drew the national spotlight when they competed against 1500 other bands in the Starsearch competition. They won in two of three episodes, and were chosen as one of the top four finalists.

Although they did not win top honors on Starsearch, they were one of the sixteen groups in the nation chosen for endorsement by Miller Beer. Their song "Rock the Night Away" was released on the Miller network compilation album.

The band gained international recognition in August of last year when the London rock publication, "Kerrang", polled record retailers. "Rock the Night Away" was proclaimed the best selling import album in England, and the result was a record deal with Britain's Music for Nations.

"Sugarcreek" was released on the Music for Nations label. The

The Creek will appear at Wilmington's Mad Monk on Saturday, November 29th.

'Music Man' is Delightful

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

Back in the days when "swell" was considered a bad word a glib speaking traveling salesman could cruise into a backward one horse town, and turn it on its ear. "The Music Man" accomplished just that when he rambled into River City, Iowa. Professor Harold Hill, the music man, played by John Rushon, slides into River City with intentions of taking them for a ride and then moving on with money in his pocket. His gimmick is convincing townspeople that they need a boy's band to prevent youth corruption. Of course, he can supply them with instruments, uniforms, and instruction books. He swoons all the townspeople with his crafty tactics and manages to sell them on the band. The only person who has Prof. Will figured out is the town librarian and music teacher, played by Catherine Schoew. She, Marian, was dead set against Prof. Will until she realizes that even through he's a swindler the town has changed for the better since his arrival. River City had been a dull dreary town, but after Prof. Will made an appearance everyone perked up and began to enjoy life. Marian ends up falling in love with the slick Prof. who decides to change his ways and settle down in River City. Marian, Harold Hill, and the entire town live happily ever after.

"The Music Man" is a musical comedy written by Meredith Wilson which was skillfully directed by John Gilmore and Doug Swink. The show was executed by a wonderfully talented cast of UNCW students and local Wilmington residents. The program is performed in a professional manner and the characters are well cast. Marian, the town librarian is portrayed exactly as one would envision her character. Catherine Schoew is a good actress and talented singer. Her performance of Marian was superb, she exhibited a very strong stage presence. John Rushon, the music man, did justice to his smooth talking brash character. The entire cast including the townspeople of all ages did an excellent job. Much credit should also be handed to Doug Swink and John Gilmore for their ability to organize and direct a show so complimentary to the University at Wilmington. If you failed to attend "The Music Man" a delightful and light hearted evening was missed.

Old Meets New in 'The Color of Money'

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

"The Color of Money" is some what of a continuation from the movie "The Hustler" which starred Paul Newman in 1961. In "The Hustler", Newman played a fast time pool shark who quit the game while he was ahead. "The Color of Money" picks up with Fast Eddie Felson, Newman, spotting a young hot billiard bum by the name of Vince Lavia, played by Tom Cruise. Fast Eddie takes Vince under his wing and offers to show him the ropes of big money pool for only a small cut. The plot revolves around Eddie, Vince and Carmy, Vince's hot girlfriend played by Mary McCormack, who wants a ticket out of nowhere, struggling to make their way to the big bucks in Atlantic City. Throughout the story Eddie tries to teach Vince to play for high stakes, but Vince wants to showboat his way through, refusing to ever lose.

They finally split up only to reunite as competitors in Atlantic City. At the conclusion you are left with the feeling that another sequel could be in the making.

Though "The Color of Money" is not as earth shattering as had been acclaimed the acting carries its weight. Newman and Cruise portray two complex and constantly changing characters. Both personalities go back and forth from scene to scene. One moment Vince cares only about putting on a show and the next he is ready to play by Eddie's rules. Eddie can't decide if he wants to play, teach Vince, or quit, altogether. Carmy, Mary McCormack, is the only steadfast character who knows what the deal is throughout the movie.

The acting of all three effectively portrays the characters which enhances the wispy washy plot development. The story is a good change for the wide screen. "The Color of Money" is worth catching for the stars alone but also for a fascinating story line.

Bands Rock Trask

by Mitch Easter a Winston Salem, NC native who produced "R.E.M.'s" first three records. Easter has been in the producing business since 1979 when he graduated from college. He set up a recording studio in his parent's garage and went from there. Let's Active sprang up along the way which is proving to be a successful venture for Easter since the coming of their new album, "Big Pimpin' for Everybody." This album is described as more straight forward and rocking than previous releases. The name "Let's Active" is still rather obscure to much of the music oriented public, but so was "R.E.M." four years ago.

Let's Active set the mood and then R.E.M. appeared around 9:30 pm to wrap up one of the best concerts I have ever seen. Unlike many groups, "R.E.M." is at its best live. Even in Trask Coliseum their sound was clear and vibrant. Lead singer Michael Stipe is captivating with his mysterious and almost spooky voice. Stipe's voice is enhanced with the aid of bassist Mike Mills, drummer Bill Berry, and guitarist Peter Buck. These four comprise "R.E.M.", a group that has been making history through out the 80's with a totally new sound which will probably surpass most of the cliché groups on the scene these days.

Michael Stipe's unique and unrelenting vocals has a lot to do with the groups individuality. He writes the lyrics for the band many of which are indistinguishable. Their latest album, "Lifes Rich Pagen", contains unusually distinguishable lyrics which suggest political overtones. Before beginning "Swan Swan H" Stipe spoke of the Civil War as an embarrassing moment in American history and that years from now

'The Enchanted Toy Shop' To Open

Creating a children's ballet is not all kids' stuff-it entails a lot of ingenuity, creativity and just plain hard work! Anne Goodrum, Director of the Wilmington Civic Ballet, agrees, but is quick to add, "Just seeing the children's smiling faces as they enjoy the ballet makes it all worthwhile."

Mrs. Goodrum says she looks forward to many smiling faces during this season's performances of THE ENCHANTED TOY SHOP to be presented at Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts November 21 through 23. The Friday and Saturday evening performances will be at 7:30 p.m. with the Saturday and Sunday matinee performances at 3:00 p.m.

THE ENCHANTED TOY SHOP grew from a smaller piece choreographed by Anne Vorus for the 1981 Spring Concert. Mrs. Vorus, formerly of the Atlanta Ballet and now Director of the Raleigh School of Ballet said, "Choreography is not as important in children's ballet as is keeping the child's attention. The aim is to entertain and create magic for the children."

The "magic" of this small piece has grown into a two-act ballet with an expanded cast of forty-five performers which includes the Wilmington Civic Ballet Company (introducing newcomers Teri Howard and Leslie Shamblin), students and faculty from the School of the Wilmington Civic Ballet and local actors and musicians. Returning guest artists will be Cary Worthy, Tony Rivenbark, Steve Cooper and Nate Freeman, who is now a professional mime and playwright with the North Carolina Black Repertory Theater in Winston Salem.

The ballet is set to the music of Dimitri Shostakovich, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Johann Strauss. The clever and colorful costumes were designed by Wilmington native, Linda Register. The ingenious set design, special effects, lighting and sound come under the direction of Bob Wallace, Ron Smith and Allen Everhart.

General Admission tickets are $3.00 and are available at Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, Belk Beery Courtesy Desk, Dancer's Choice and The Bookery.

Ancient Art of Bushin Kai Reborn

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The last several decades have seen an upsurge of interest in the theory and practice of the ancient Japanese art of karate. Although this method of unarmed combat was initially developed by the Okinawans in about 1600 A.D., the practice itself had to be shrouded in secrecy to avoid the wrath of the Samurai War Lords who governed. Prohibited from using any type of weaponry by the Samurai, the Okinawans resorted to use of their bodies as weapons as the means for their defense.

The word karate is of Japanese origin. "Kara" means empty, and the suffix, "te", means hands. Thus the word itself means "empty hands". The practice of karate is comprised of the "Karate-jitsu", which is the actual physical technique, and the "Karate-Do", which is the spiritual totality of karate as a way of life.

At the Bushin-Kai Karate school, located at 2875 Carolina Beach Road in Wilmington, karate is a way of life. Sensei Delmus C. Russ, the instructor there, stresses the philosophy that students of karate compete only with themselves as they strive to learn and practice the ancient method of defense. At the "Dojo", which means the "Place of the Way", students learn the ancient Japanese precepts of the warrior, chivalry, duty, and honor.

"Our system is very difficult. It's regimented. Our goal is to complete the body and the mind as one unit. Also, humility is a big point in karate." Sensei Russ pointed out that the bushin-Kai method of karate is one that teaches the "old" art of karate, what he termed "true karate."

Sensei Russ, a native of Wilmington, has the impressive title of American Federation Chief, Japan Karate-Do, Bushin-Kai, a title that was awarded him in Japan. One of only two Americans who were accepted into this particular practice while stationed in Japan, the Sensei spent a total of seven and a half years studying the martial arts during his tenure in the Air Force. He eventually attained the rank of fifth degree black belt in 1982.

The Sensei (instructor) no longer competes to attain a higher degree of black belt. Although progression to eighth degree is possible, he has dedicated the last fourteen years to teaching his art and has no real intention of returning to Japan to compete again. Sensei Russ, who was the "ranking belt" in Japan when he left there, was transferred to California and established the first Bushin-Kai Dojo in the United States there in 1972.

Sensei Russ also established a Dojo in England in 1975, and opened the one located in Wilmington in June of 1983 after his retirement from his position as an Air Force Police Superintendent. The Wilmington Dojo is the American Federation Headquarters for Bushin-Kai Karate in this country, and one was also opened in Delaware by the other American who trained with Sensei Russ in Japan.

The principles of the Dojo are well defined and noted in the school brochure. These include: To seek perfection of character. To be sincere and honest.

Showing their stuff: Sensei Russ and his black belt assistant, Ray Jones

To show strong spirit in all undertakings.

To practice courtesy.

To control temper.

To show modesty and humility, yet perform with determination and strong spirit.

There are approximately 140 students who participate in classes at the Wilmington Dojo. New students meet with the Sensei for consultation, and then being their classes as a "white belt". Through a rigorous series of curriculums, the students progress from the initial white belts through red, green, purple, brown (2 degrees), and finally to black.

Sensei Russ pointed out that the color of the belt is used to signify the class and degree of proficiency that the student has attained, but that the actual color of the belt is not the main point of concern. The main concern is the degree of proficiency that the student has attained.

During testing times, the student is tested on both the curriculum that they are presently involved in and the ones that they have already been through. Pre-test training involves exercise workouts, coaching in movement, and what Sensei termed "kumite", which is free-fighting to improve technique. Testing involves breaking boards, fighting, and a series of strenuous exercises. According to Sensei Russ, "We don't use hand or foot gear - just pull the punches and kick. We use no equipment." He noted that the average hard-working student can attain a black belt in two and a half to three years, but that the progression time depends on the student and his degree of dedication.

Assisted by the four black belts who frequent the Dojo, Sensei Russ observes each student during workout and frequently interrupts to give added tips and extra instruction. In addition to the offensive and defensive techniques of karate, the Sensei also teaches the defensive techniques of Judo and the nerve and joint techniques of Aikido.

The students at the Bushin-Kai Karate Japan Karate Do vary in age from small children to middle aged adults, and include members of both sexes. Special class times are scheduled for women and children, but students also frequently appear outside of class times for additional workouts.

The Sensei, who is married and has two children, dedicates all of his time to operating the Dojo and the adjoining Martial Arts Supply Shop. He has great pride in the Dojo and his students, and noted with pride that several of his students have traveled to Japan to participate in competitions.

The cost of membership at the Dojo is surprisingly low.

Although there is the cost of initial membership ($25) and the uniform (known as a gih), continued membership is $30 per month for adults and $20 for children under thirteen.

Persons interested in obtaining more information about Bushin-Kai Karate may contact Sensei Russ at 2875 Carolina Beach Road, Wilmington, NC, 28403. He may be reached by phone at (919) 395-2170 (Dojo) or 392-3244 (home).

Movin' On Up Presents Black Pride in Song

Exhilarating and motivating describes the songs and dances which set the mood and turns "Movin' on Up" into a fulfilled evening of musical entertainment. This African Production will reminisce on the "colors of ancient Africa, from slave ships and cotton fields, to railroad tracks . . . and rocking church houses." Many of the selections heard in this film are said to have helped "revolutionize American Music."

The program will be held on November 21, 1986, at 8:00 pm. in Room 100 of the University Union on the campus of UNC-Wilmington.

Sponsored by UPB/Minority Arts Committee.

the 80's will also be a remorseful decade. Other lyrics from past albums have suggested negative overtones such as, "Can't Get There From Here." Even so, political or not, it is their unsuppressed attitudes and style that sets them apart from the rest.

The stage setting created much of the conducive atmosphere. The stage was set against a large screen which flashed pictures of black and white landscape scenes and some objects which were unidentifiable through out the show. On both sides of the screen were walls with odd window shapes cut away. Through the windows and from directly above beams of various colored lights struck the stage and band. The lighting display was great and added enormously to the musics effects. At certain points Stipe would step directly in front of the screen as black and whites flashed by; his shadow cast on the screen and the lights flowing against the stage created an unforgettably surrealistic mood.

The entire show from start to finish was very impressive. R.E.M. played much longer than the expected hour you get from many bands. They did a retrospect of all their albums. They did not stick only to "Life's Rich Pagen" and also included some unexpected cover songs as encores such as, the late 60's hits "Spooky", "Mississippi Queen", and the great Led Zeppelin tune "whole lotta Love." Some songs from "Life's Rich Pagen" were: "These Days," "Begin The Beguine", "Swan Swan H", and their first cover song "Superman" done originally by "The Clique." Of course, "Driver Eight" and "Can't Get There From Here" were others in the line up of tunes done.

Over all the concert was a huge success. The UNCW campus was lucky to host two great up and coming bands like "R.E.M" and "Let's Active." I think anyone who saw the show would agree that there monies worth was well received. Hopefully they will appear again on their next tour if so make a point to be there.

Thanks should be extended to the University Program Board for arranging the event, and to IRS Records for being very helpful and congenial.

Minority Visitation Day Saturday

WILMINGTON
Approximately 100 prospective students and their parents are expected to attend Minority Visitation Day at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Saturday, Nov 22 at the University Union. Registration begins at 12:30 p.m. in room 100, and the program begins at 1:00 p.m.

Diane Zeeman, director of undergraduate admissions, said that invitations to attend Minority Visitation Day were sent to minority students within a 150-mile radius of Wilmington.

The UNCW office of minority affairs is also promoting Minority

Visitation Day as part of its series "College...A Lifetime Investment" designed to encourage urban youth to attend college.

The first session of the afternoon program will feature a welcome by Dr. Charles L. Cahill, provost and vice chancellor of academic affairs, and talks by Zeeman and Ralph Parker, director of minority affairs. Information will also be presented about activities planned for the day, admission criteria and financial aid.

During a break at 2:30, enrolled students will present a program of entertainment. There will also be sessions at 2:45, a student panel discussion and an informative session for parents. From 4-5 p.m., campus tours will be conducted. Prospective students and their parents will also be guests of the university for dinner in the cafeteria that evening.

Parking Resolution Sought

Senators Patrick Toal and Gina Mathis proposed a resolution that the Senate examine and

The five page, 102-line resolution would designate certain parking lots as being only for particular residence halls or apartments. Other lots would be designated for commuting students, freshmen, etc.

The resolution stated that the Office of Auxiliary Services sold 125 more parking stickers than available spaces on campus this year.

The Senate postponed definitely the resolution until the next meeting.

Slater on Finance Committee

In other business, Fran Slater was appointed to the Finance Committee, and two nominated positions were opened up on the Student Organizations Committee due to resignations.

Finance Chair Lee King asked and received approval of a request that the allowances provided for lodging be raised from $45 to $60.

He cited increases in motel and hotel rates in cities where conventions attended by students took place. The Senate passed the change with no dissent.

Campus Music Notes

Reggae Festival Nov. 23

The UNCW 6 O'Clock Jazz Group and Jazz Quintet will perform a mini-concert at 8 pm., Sunday, Nov. 23 in King Hall. Admission is free.

The quintet will perform standard compositions such as "Love for Sale," "On a Clear Day," "Lover Man" and an original composition by Frank Bongiorno called "Mama's Boy."

Concluding the concert will be the 6 O'Clock Jazz Group. Compositions to be performed include "Look Out," "Bluesy Basic," "That Warm Feeling" and a gospel-influenced composition called "Walk Him up the Stairs."

For further information, contact the UNCW music division, 195-3390.

Mickey Mills

WLOZ-FM of UNC-W, in association with Larry Thomas & Associates, Inc., is proud to present REGGAE FESTIVAL AT UNC-W, November 23, 1986, from 2 to 6:00 pm., at Hanover Hall, directly behind Trask Coliseum, on the campus of UNC-W. The festival will feature music by MICKEY MILLS AND STEEL, a popular reggae/soca/calypso band based in Chapel Hill, North Carolina, and GENERALS OF THE SWAMPS, a Bolivia, North Carolina-based reggae group.

This fun-filled, family-oriented event will also have reggae DJs, exotic foods and exhibits to entertain the public. Admission is $6 for the general public and $3 for UNC-W students. Children under twelve will be admitted free when accompanied by an adult. Seating will be festival style. Festival goers are asked to bring blankets and be prepared to dance!

Tickets are available at School Kids' Records, WLOZ-FM, WHQR-FM and "The Wilmington Journal." All locations in Wilmington. For more information call WLOZ-FM at (919) 395-3086.

The University Union Student Activities Office is offering a spring break you will never forget.

Spend seven days and nights aboard the fabulous S.S. Veracruz as you cruise toward the exotic shores of Cancun, Mexico, the Isle of Cozumel and Key West, Florida. Five complete meals a day is included in the price as well as tips, gratuities and port taxes.

The S.S. VERACRUZ offers a casino, disco, nightly entertainment and first-run movies. The price is $569.00!

The ship is white, displaces 10,595 tons and is 487 feet long. She has eight passenger decks and features a deep keel and stabilizers for smooth sailing, and bow thrusters for maneuvering at docksides.

The swimming pool has two adjacent wading pools. There's a casino, a cinema showing current releases, a reading room and five comfortable lounges.

Cruise price includes: Early morning tea or coffee, full breakfast, mid-morning bouillon, four-course lunch, afternoon tea, four-course dinner daily and midnight buffet or snack, cabin as booked, all fully carpeted and all with private facilities including shower; captain's cocktail party; full program of on board entertainment, including shows, feature films, disco and limited casino gaming (slot machines and blackjack)

At each port of call, the SS Veracruz offers a variety of fascinating shore excursions, specially designed to appeal to the different interests of passengers.

From Playa del Carmen you can take an all-day excursion to the Mayan ruins of Chichen Itza. Or a half-day trip to the Mayan fortress-city of Tulum, including a swimming party at nearby Xel Ha Lagoon. And there's the Cancun shuttle motor-coach to take you to Cancun. At Cozumel, there's the San Francisco Beach Party at a glorious beach a few miles from the ship.

In the evening the ship offers Fiesta Mexicana, an exciting folklore show in the little town of San Miguel.

In Key West, travelers can take different tours of this delightful port with the Old Town Trolley or just stroll through its historic districts and shopping areas.

A snorkeling program is available, and you can explore the colorful exotic undersea world at Playa del Carmen, Cozumel, or Key West — or all three! The program includes equipment, instructions and supervision.

A deposit of $150 is required in the Student Activities Office by January 15, 1987.

For more information call 395-3827 or stop by the Student Activities Office, University Union Room 202.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR GRANDPARENTS?

- Five minutes into "The Lawrence Welk Show"
- About a week before your birthday.
- When you just want to tell them you miss them, and that you ate the last of Grandma's chocolate-chip cookies this morning.

There's nothing grandparents like better than a call from a grandchild in college. But if you do accidentally happen to interrupt Lawrence, you ought to have something worth telling them.

For example, you could mention that you called using AT&T Long Distance Service because you can depend on AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

And then you can tell them that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number.

And that you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections.

Finally, of course, you should quickly reassure them that you're eating enough, then let them hurry back to the TV to catch the rest of the Lennon Sisters' Blue Oyster Cult Medley.

Where I Stand from pg. 5

money raised on the canal issue in an effort to oppose the treaties. But the conservatives mounted a massive protest that, in 1978 and 1980, helped defeat 19 treaty supporters in the U.S. Senate-only one opponent was defeated-and helped put Reagan in the white House. The Kemp-Roth tax cut was another issue, created almost out of thin air by conservative activists, that defeated scores of Democrats over a period of several years. The same sort of effort behind, say, SDI might have had similar results.

The Republican's issue-less campaign of 1986 may have consequences far beyond this election. In effect, the party broke faith with many of the groups that left the Democrats in recent elections and came over to the GOP side.

For example: In order to attain majority status, Republicans must have the support of conservative Christians who have traditionally voted Democratic. But it will take more than the endorsement of a Jerry Falwell or a Pat Robertson to get that support for GOP candidates. Only if the GOP provides a vision for America that appeals to their people -- only if Republicans address issues like busing, abortion, pornography, and judicial leniency -- will conservative Christians turn out in massive numbers for Ronald Reagan's party. This year, Republican leaders made a determined effort to avoid the issues important to this massive group of swing voters, with disastrous results in Alabama, North Carolina, and other states.

Likewise, right-to-work laws are of utmost importance to small-business people and to workers who are suspicious of labor unions. Yet GOP leaders opposed an effort to put right-to-work on the November ballot in Idaho, fearing that it would sink the campaign of U.S. Senator Steve Symms. In fact, the presence of the measure on the ballot ensured his victory; as Symms himself acknowledged, he was reelected on the coattails of right-to-work.

Understandably, the Democrats hope that Republicans will continue to avoid the issues. As soon as the results were in last Tuesday, they dispatched their leading spokesmen, including Senator Joe Biden of Delaware and the prospective Majority Leader, Robert Byrd of West Virginia, to make the round of the TV news programs. Speaking with one voice, they called for a period of consultation and compromise. Like Tokyo Rose, they called for their adversaries to lay down their arms and surrender. It's a sweet-smelling trap -- one the GOP must have the courage to walk away from.

As the Democratic Party showed in most of its upset victories this year, it is by confrontation that a minority turns itself into a majority. The electorate doesn't hand you anything on a silver platter; you have to fight for it. In order for the GOP to become the majority party, the President must develop a strategy of vetoing liberal legislation, of standing up to the new Senate, of blaming the Democrats in Congress for the disasters that will result from a return to the policies of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale.

Will a combative Ronald Reagan lead the crusade against the 100th Congress? Maybe, but regardless of what the President does, conservatives have learned their lesson regarding blind faith in any political party. After six years of Ronald Reagan in the White House, the GOP has been unable to capitalize on the enormous popularity of his personality and his political philosophy. Republicans are no closer to getting a majority in the House than they were six years ago, and now they have lost their Senate majority. Conservatives will have to give serious thought to the question: Where do we go from here?

From now on, they will depend less on the Republican Party and more on their own resources -- the vast network of small contributors, of organizations and publications dedicated to the conservative cause. They will train a new generation of political professionals so that conservatives need no longer rely on the services of "pragmatists" of the Big Business/establishment mold. They will provide their own vision for America's future, and they will regain the fighting spirit of the late 1970s that made the Reagan Revolution (may she rest in peace) possible.

And they just might purge the Republican Party leadership of those who have robbed the party of its heart and soul.

Blood Drive Exceeds Goal

By Joseph B. Allen
Staff Writer

UNCW has once more regained the plaque given by the Red Cross to the school who donates the most blood from the Cape Fear Technical Institute. UNCW students managed to surpass the donation goals set for them during the blood drive held on Nov. 12-13, said Ms. B. Jefferys, Director of Blood Services for the Cape Fear Chapter of the American Red Cross.

"The goal for Wednesday [Nov. 12] was 75 units (pints) of blood," said Ms. Jefferys.

"We collected 85 pints of blood," she said.

"During the Wednesday blood drive, 96 students presented themselves [in Room 100 of the University Union] to give blood," she said.

"Unfortunately, some students had to be turned down because of iron deficiencies in their blood," she said.

The blood of all would be donors is checked for deficiencies with blood taken from the finger before a full pint donation is taken from the arm.

Despite Thursday's (Nov. 13) low goal of 60 pints the Red Cross was hoping to collect from UNCW, 112 students presented themselves at room 100 and 89 pints of blood was collected that day, Ms. Jefferys said.

"UNCW was able to meet 129% of its goal," she said.

Three percent of UNCW's student population donated blood last week, compared to the two percent of Cape Fear's Technical Institute who donated blood during a blood drive held at the Technical Institute last month, Ms. Jefferys said.

Percentages are based by the total number of students who gave blood to the total number of students enrolled in each school.

Once the plaque is engraved with UNCW's victory over the Cape Fear Technical Institute, it will go on display at UNCW.

Continuous live musical entertainment will be a major highlight of the festival. Musical presentations will range from solos on the piano, guitar and harpsicord, to school and church bands and choruses.

A raffle will be held for an Apple IIC computer with color monitor and an intricate handmade quilt. Each raffle ticket will cost a donation of one dollar to the Wilmington Hospice.

The raffle drawing will be held on Dec. 5th and ticket holders need not be present to win.

The Festival of Trees will open with a black-tie

Mandela Publishes Books

Two new books by the imprisoned leader of South Africa's anti-apartheid movement, Nelson Mandela, have been recently published in the United States. They are THE STRUGGLE IS MY LIFE and HABLA NELSON MANDELA.

Mandela's books are published by Pathfinder Press in New York, which also publishes books by Fidel Castro, Malcolm X, and leaders of the Sandinista revolution in Nicaragua.

THE STRUGGLE IS MY LIFE brings together speeches and writings by Mandela spanning more than 40 years of his activity in the African National Congress (ANC), the major organization fighting for the end of apartheid rule in South Africa. Mandela's courtroom testimony in the 1964 trial at which he was sentenced to life imprisonment is also included. A special supplement contains accounts of Mandela in prison by his fellow prisoners.

Among the most recent material is Mandela's reply to South African President P. W. Botha's 1985 offer to release Mandela if the ANC leader "unconditionally rejected violence as a political weapon." In his reply, read by his daughter Zinzi to a mass meeting in Soweto, near Johannesburg, Mandela said: "Let him (Botha) renounce violence. Let him say that he will dismantle apartheid. Let him unban the people's organization, the African National Congress. Let him free all who have been imprisoned, banished or exiled for their opposition to apartheid. Let him guarantee free political activity so that people may decide who will govern them..."

"But I cannot sell my birthright, nor am I prepared to sell the birthright of the people to be free..."

"Only free men can negotiate. Prisoners cannot enter into contracts... I cannot and will not give any undertaking at a time when I and you, the people, are not free."

"Your freedom and mine cannot be separated. I will return."

Mandela remains imprisoned at the Pollsmoor maximum security prison near Cape Town, despite the growing movement in South Africa and throughout the world demanding his release.

HABLA NELSON MANDELA contains Spanish translations of Mandela's courtroom testimony in 1962 and 1964, and the Freedom Charter, the key document of the South African freedom struggle.

Both books contain photographs of Mandela, his wife, Winnie, and protest activities in South Africa. These books are available in local bookstores or by mail from Pathfinder Press, 410 West St., New York, NY 10014.

We would like copies of articles or reviews. Please note that any photographs used need to have the photographers credit appear as well as, "Reprinted from NELSON MANDELA: THE STRUGGLE IS MY LIFE with permission of Pathfinder Press, 410 West St., New York, NY 10014."

Rowsom eyed by NBA

Brian Rowsom has always dreamed of playing in the National Basketball Association, even four years ago when he was a skinny, 6-foot-8 senior member of a losing high school basketball team. However, at the time Rowsom was questioning his ability to play at the collegiate level, much less the NBA.

Today, pro scouts are raving over the UNCW senior, who could become the school's first alumnus to play in the NBA. Marty Blake, who is considered the guru among such scouts, feels Rowsom will be a high draft choice in the NBA's June draft.

"If the draft were held next week, Brian would go in the second round," said Blake. "Whether he makes it in the NBA is completely up to him. He certainly has the opportunity."

No UNCW player has ever put on an NBA uniform, and only two—Denny Fields and Danny Davis—have ever been drafted by an NBA club. Fields was a fifth-round pick of the New York Knicks in 1978, while Davis was taken in the seventh round by the Dallas Mavericks in 1981.

Davis, UNCW's second all-time leading rebounder (behind Rowsom) and sixth all-time scorer, was the last player cut by Dallas. Later, he signed a pro contract in England where he is currently one of the top players in the league. Other Seahawk alumni such as Dave Wolff (1976-79), Garry Cooper (1976-80) and Shawn Williams (1979-83) were considered NBA prospects but never played in the league.

"I guess just about anyone who plays basketball dreams of playing in the NBA," said Rowsom, who needs just 186 points this season to become UNCW's all-time leading scorer. "I have always dreamed of it."

After playing for tiny Columbia (NC) High School, Rowsom signed with UNCW and quickly erased any doubts of his ability to play Division I college basketball. Rowsom has started all but four games during his illustrious career and eclipsed the school all-time rebounding mark last year.

It was last season that Rowsom began to gain the attention of the pro scouts and simultaneously erase his "sleeper" label. Rowsom's statistics—20.3 points and 9.5 rebounds last season—helped him make the Colonial Athletic Association's all-conference team. This year Rowsom is touted by several pre-season publications as one of the top players in the south.

According to the "superscout" Blake, Rowsom may prove this year to be one of the nation's top seniors. Blake said he may invite Rowsom to play in the Aloha Classic and Portsmouth Invitational at the end of the season. Both are all-star games for the nation's elite seniors to show their prowess for the NBA scouts.

Blake saw UNCW play in losses to Tennessee and Navy last year, both were sub-par performances by Rowsom. However, Blake is aware of Rowsom's talents, and plans to visit UNCW's Trask Coliseum Dec. 27 when the Seahawks host Niagara. Blake would also like to catch one of the UNCW-Navy contests.

"It takes a special person to make it in the NBA, one who excels at every phase of the game," said UNCW's new head coach Robert McPherson, who signed a four-year pact with the school in April. "It wouldn't be fair for me to evaluate Brian's chances of playing pro ball. I just haven't seen him play enough yet."

Former UNCW coach Mel Gibson has seen Rowsom play more than anyone. Gibson outrecruited East Carolina and Pembroke State for his services, then helped mold him into one of the region's top players.

"I'd love to see Brian make it (in the NBA)," said Gibson, who played professionally for the 1963-64 Los Angeles Lakers after a brilliant career at Western Carolina. "I'd be surprised if he isn't drafted in the third round or before. He handles the ball and shoots well enough to play the number three (small forward) or number four (power forward) position."

"He grabbed a lot of attention last year. He needs to have another great year."

Blake says there is a shortage of centers in college basketball today. "Brian is not a 'true' center and wouldn't play center in the NBA. There are no real centers in the ACC, Southeastern or Big Ten Conferences, and only one (Syracuse's Ron Seikaly) in the Big East."

"Brian would play forward in the NBA. He'd have to play facing the basket instead of having his back to the basket," added Blake.

Rowsom knows how difficult it is to play in the NBA, and has an alternative plan if his dream falters.

"I have to be realistic," Rowsom said. "Only a select few can play in the NBA. I want to play basketball as long as possible, and I wouldn't hesitate to go to Europe if things don't work out here."

"I'd like to be drafted high, maybe the second round or so. That would mean big chances better, especially if I'm drafted by a team that needs front court help."

"This will be a very important year for me. Playing in the NBA is something I've only dreamed about. Now that I have a chance, I'm going to give it 110 percent."

For Rowsom, this could be the year that dreams are made of.

UNCW gets first taste of new-look Seahawks

'Hawks cruise in exhibition

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

UNCW Wilmington men's basketball opened its 1986-87 playing schedule with an impressive 80-46 exhibition win over the Tigers of Dalhousie University Thursday.

UNCW, under the guidance of first-year Head Coach Robert McPherson, started the contest somewhat shaky, falling behind early 5-3 when Dalhousie's Mike Gillett scored the Tigers' first five points of the game. Gillett finished with a game-high 20 points.

UNCW didn't stay down for long and once they got the wheels going, Dalhousie did little to stop them. Mark Gary hit three-pointer from the left wing at the 16:38 mark to give the Seahawks the only lead they needed, 6-5.

Ben Pittman followed up a Brian Rowsom miss and Gary assisted a Rowsom layup as the 'Hawks jumped out to a quick 10-5 lead. UNCW then proceeded to stick it to the Tigers as they pulled to a 24-7 lead with just six minutes left in the half. Dalhousie came back close to a 34-19 halftime deficit on a Brian Lennox three-pointer and two Mike Gillett jumpers.

The second half was more of a nightmare for the Tigers as McPherson's troops put on large amounts of defensive pressure and out played Dalhousie in all phases of the game. UNCW, behind the play of seniors Kevan Miles and Brian Rowsom who led UNCW with 12 points, stifled the Tigers on the inside, forcing them into many bad shots and turnovers.

"I think my guys played rather sloppy," said Dalhousie Coach Doc Ryan. "They put a lot of pressure on us. They beat us crashing the boards. They're not that tall, but they're big and wide bodied - very physical."

Sophomore Ricky Griffin and junior Mark Gary contributed 10 points to the UNCW cause, while seniors Charles Cherry and Rob Wagner chipped in seven. Miles and Rowsom led all rebounders with 11 and 10 grabs apiece.

"We had some bright spots offensively," said McPherson. "We did miss some easy shots, though, because we were a little overanxious."

"I would like to have every rebound - I'm greedy," said

McPherson. "We have spent hours on the man-to-man defense and I'm extremely pleased with it. The players have worked very hard with it."

UNCW opened the second half with a six straight points from forward Kevan Miles, but Dalhousie got some instant life with a two Gillett three-pointers and a Paul Riley jumper to close the margin to 42-29. Gillett finished the contest three for five from three-point range.

The Seahawks were not to be caught as they put it into overdrive and pulled away from Dalhousie, closing the game with a 22-10 run. The run was marked by a Griffin dunk that put the Tigers on ice.

"I thought we had a great effort out there," said McPherson after game. "I thought we had great defensive intensity and that's what we wanted out there. When we got our defensive intensity going, I thought we started playing like we were capable of."

The Seahawks outrebounded the Canadian visitors 45-36.

"Our rebounding was very good," said McPherson. "We had a good total of team rebounds and Kevan (Miles) and Brian (Rowsom) rebounded particularly well."

The dunk of Griffin ignited a very vocal and boisterous crowd of 2,100 people, over half of them being students, into a frenzy. The turnout was one of the largest in UNCW history for an exhibition game.

The Seahawks benefitted from this crowd enthusiasm as it sparked a tenacious defense and made Dalhousie struggle on the court. "They were super," said McPherson of the crowd. "I just hope they keep coming back."

UNCW will open their 1986-87 season on Nov. 29th against Army, while Dalhousie continues its American tour with stops at University of Richmond and Fairfield before returning to their native Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The UNCW game with Army will begin at 7:30 p.m. at Trask Coliseum. Last season, the Seahawks downed the Cadets 68-49 at West Point, New York.

A New-Look Seahawk!

A new-look Seahawk was introduced at the UNCW men's basketball exhibition last Thursday. The mascot is part of the new look that UNCW has for its athletic programs. The mascot uniform was designed by a Cincinnati based company who specializes in mascot uniforms. UNCW defeated Dalhousie University of Halifax, Nova Scotia 80-46. (See related story this page)

Lady 'Hawks tuning up for season opener

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

WILMINGTON, NC - UNC Wilmington Head Coach Marilyn Christoph and the Lady Seahawks have less than three weeks before their season opener against Furman University on Dec. 3, but Christoph thinks her troops will be more than ready.

Although the early enthusiasm has worn off and the season is still a couple weeks away, the Lady Seahawks have looked good in practice so far.

"Everyone goes through the practice doldrums," said Christoph. "We have good days and we have bad, but we have had more good than bad. The main thing is that the effort has been superb."

"This is the hard work time," Christoph expressed. "We will be able to see who can play and who is able to tough it out."

Practice has gone according to plan for Christoph, who is emphasizing a transition game that will be much stronger and faster than in the past. Before the Lady Seahawks can start the season, three questions must be answered.

The first is the question of depth. The Lady Seahawks lost two starters and their sixth man, however, Christoph has a strong nucleus returning from a 15-13 squad last season and so far in pre-season, she says depth won't be a problem.

"We will have as much depth as in the past," said Christoph. "And it will be experienced, depth, especially since we have six returners and six newcomers that have looked very good in practice."

Height and leadership also concerned Christoph before the season began. The question of height can only be solved by hard work and solid defense, according to Christoph. An off season weight program is also panning out as the Lady Seahawks are much stronger than in the past.

"We are working on getting a good first shot and positioning for the rebound," said Christoph. "We have a group that is very physical."

The question of leadership has yet to be answered. No player has emerged in practice as a leader on or off the court.

"It is a real concern for us," said Christoph. "I don't know who or when, but the veterans have not stepped forward to take the role like they should and it is not the place of a freshman to take the role. Somebody's going to surface, but until they do, it is a challenge to the team and a void that must be filled."

Christoph is pleased with the

Swimmers splash into win column

from Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, NC - UNC Wilmington swimming coach Dave Allen wasn't quite sure what to expect with nine swimmers out of the lineup Saturday, but a pair of victories over the College of Charleston quickly eased his fears.

UNCW's men rolled up a 67-46 triumph over the visitors and the Lady Seahawks noted out a 50-49 victory in the meet held Saturday at the Seahawk pool. UNCW's men and women are now 1-2 on the season following losses to N.C. State and Duke.

"We were hurting as far as numbers, so I was very pleased with our overall performance," said Allen. Nine swimmers were not in uniform because of team violations and health problems. "At this point in the season, we just need a lot more work and a lot more improvement."

Don Hosier (New Hanover/Wilmington, NC), Scott Stokes (Henry Ford/Sterling Heights, MI) and Philippe Roth (Montague/Rixheim, France) each figured in prominently in UNCW's victory.

Hosier placed first in the 200 Butterfly (2:02.88) and 200 Breaststroke (2:19.64) and swam a leg of UNCW's winning 400 Medley Relay (3:47.94) team.

Stokes, meanwhile, took first in the 200 Freestyle (1:49.05) and 500 Freestyle (4:57.23).

Roth was first in the 50 Freestyle (23.08) and 100 Freestyle (49.58) and also on the winning Medley Relay team.

In women's action, Laura Spanjer (Reynolds/Perry, FL) and Mary Beth Mills (Fanwood/Fanwood, NJ) earned Allen's praise for their performances. "Laura had an outstanding meet and Mary Beth also did a very nice job," said Allen.

Spanjer turned in three first-place finishes. She topped the field in the 50 Freestyle (26.56), 100 Butterfly (1:01.56) and 200 Backstroke (2:24.00).

Mills won the meter (2:20.1) and three meter (95.80) dives for the Lady Seahawks.

UNCW's women swim again Sunday when William and Mary visit Trask Natatorium. The men have a brief layoff until Dec. 6 when the Seahawks swim against American and Richmond.

Spikers finish 4th in CAA tourney

from Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, NC - UNC Wilmington's volleyball team closed out its season over the weekend with a fourth place finish in the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament.

Coach Kathy McDaniel's spikers ended the season with an 18-15 overall record. Two players, senior Martha Byrd (Forbush/Yadoville, NC) and sophomore DeDe Devoley (New Hanover/Wilmington, NC), were named to the All-CAA second team.

In tournament action Friday, UNCW dropped its opening match to eventual champion William and Mary, 15-5, 15-1. The Lady Seahawks then routed East Carolina, 15-10, 15-3.

Saturday saw the Lady Seahawks drop matches to James Madison (15-7, 15-4, 15-11) and George Mason (15-10, 15-5, 15-17, 7-15, 16-14). William and Mary defeated James Madison for the overall title.

Maybe there is a substitute for experience.

Inaugural Seahawk Banquet

The inaugural UNCW Family Tip-off Basketball Banquet will be held at the Wilmington Hilton. Head Coach Robert McPherson devised the idea to rally more support for the Seahawk basketball program.

"It's just an opportunity for basketball fans to come out and meet the team," said McPherson. "I will introduce each player and give a game-by-game preview of the upcoming season."

The dinner will start at 7:00 p.m. Tickets are $7.50 and may be purchased at The Seahawk Club, Don Kimball Chevrolet, North Carolina Precious Metals & Pawn Inc., and Athletics Unlimited.

newcomers on the squad.

"They're all freshman," said Christoph. "They are all learning and improving daily. You have to bring them along slowly so they can adjust. Until they adjust, no one will take front stage."

Besides the newcomers, Christoph cited two returnees that excelled in practice. Point guard Johnnie Smith has looked very good in the opening weeks and forward Charlene Page has shown the most improvement over last season.

"Johnnie has been a real surprise as well as Charlene," said Christoph. "Johnnie worked very hard in the off-season and it has shown so far. Charlene has been the most improved in all phases of her game. Her defense has been superb."

To help the Lady Seahawks prepare for the Dec. 3 opener, Christoph has developed a novel practice technique. Five male students have been scrimmaging the Lady Seahawks twice a week, helping UNCW's women to sharpen their skills against taller, stronger competition.

"It helps with our endurance, strength, reaction, and toughness," said Christoph. "If we can compete against the guys, it will help us a lot during the season. We (the coaches) are learning a lot as well as the kids. I think it has been a big success."

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

From Staff Reports

WILMINGTON, NC - In an unusual circumstance, the student body of UNC Wilmington has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the school's Sports Information Office.

The award, given weekly to the school's outstanding athletic performer, was presented instead to the students because of their participation and support in UNCW's 80-46 exhibition basketball win over Dalhousie University Thursday.

Approximately 1,000 students attended the first local appearance for Coach Robert McPherson's club. The student section was more vocal than usual in Trask Coliseum.

"They were super," said McPherson of the student crowd. "They showed a lot of intensity and emotion. I hope they continue to come out and bring their friends."

Thursday night's attendance was 2,100. The turnout was one of the largest in the school's history for an exhibition game.

Diver Kurt Candler won the award last week.

Senate discusses parking with administrators

By Jeff Weaver

The UNCW Senate played host to members of the administration and Residence life staff Monday night to discuss a parking resolution set forth by Senators Gina Mathis and Patrick Toal.

Attending were Margeret Taylor, Director of Auxiliary Services; Dr. William Bryan, Vice Chancellor; Dr. Richard Mullendore, Associate Vice Chancellor / Dean of Students; Charles Maimone, Asst. Dean of Students / Residence Life; R.O. Walton, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs; and the presidents of Galloway and Graham dormitories.

"The problem in the Residence Hall parking lots," said Ms. Taylor, "is that Hall '85 residents are parking in the apartment lots."

Ms. Taylor said that 76 additional parking spaces in the Residence Hall parking area and that should help solve the problem.

R.O. Walton outlined the process any changes in parking lots, construction, etc. on campus would have to go through if the Administration chose to discuss the Senate's resolution, and pointed out that many universities "more stickers are sold than there are spaces" and that UNCW does not engage in that practice.

Walton also pointed out that plans are in the works to "completely eliminate parking in the center of the campus (around the Union)" in the near future, and that students will see construction beginning of the new Cameron School of Business and on modifications of parking lots in the same northern area of campus.

The Vice-Chancellor also stated that most if not all of the traffic patterns on campus would be changed, and there would be a slight possibility of shuttle buses being brought into use but not for some time.

Walton summed up his ideas on the parking problem by saying, "You are not ever going to be able to park at your front door."

In other business, the Senate passed the resolution presented by Senators Toal and Mathis in the last meeting.

Attorney General Jefferey Clark asked that the Senate submit recommendations for three associate Supreme Court Justices.

The Senate elected Matt Kirkby, Roland Mackel, and Dean Bunn to the positions.

The president and vice-president also made their own appointments to the Supreme Court. These appointments were accepted by the Senate.

Union board discusses plans

By Anita Smith
Special to the Seahawk

The University Union Board is studying the need for expanding Student Union facilities. The board established an expansion task force committee in 1984, less than two years after the completion of the present building, and Dr. Roger Lowery, an associate professor of political science, was named to head the committee.

Lowery said that the committee's work was to determine the needs of students at this time, and the needs that will be encountered in the near future. "We have completed our findings," he said, "and we are ready to turn them over to those who will make the decisions." He added that there was a pressing need for more meeting space.

Beverly Cobb, the schedule coordinator for the union, is responsible for assigning spaces on a first come, first serve basis. She says, "The social season for the university really begins at Halloween and usually climaxes with the holidays." She adds that current requests from clubs and Greek organizations are very high and that she has to turn down 15-20 requests per week for lack of space.

Stephen Gnadi, the Assistant Director for Operations, says that the need for meeting space is actually high from August through the holidays, and then picks up again in January as the new quarter begins.

Lowery says that the committee will recommend several facilities. "We could," he says, "add on to the existing building, or we could add a satellite union near the resident halls." He also said that since future plans targeted auxiliary services, such as the warehouse and the cafeteria, to be moved to an area below the dorms, a decision could be made to buy those buildings from the state and renovate them for use. "Those decisions will be made by another committee," says Lowery, "but ground breaking should be from two to five years away."

"We knew when the present union was completed in 1983 that it would not be large enough to meet the needs of the university," said Linda Moore, the Director of the Student Union. "There was simply not enough funds at that time to do what we wanted."

Moore says that student unions are funded in much the same way as resident halls, they are both funded by student fees and revenue. "Full time students pay $35 a semester for the debt on the University Union," she says, "and another $25 per semester to operate the building." Lowery says that part of the $35 paid by students goes into an endowment fund for future expansion.

A survey analysis of UNCW students completed by the expansion committee last spring shows that eighty five percent of UNCW students say they want health club and recreational facilities in the Student Union; seventy eight percent want more complete check cashing services; eight percent of those students indicated that they would like an outdoor swimming pool; and sixty nine percent indicated that they would like magazine and news check out facilities, and weekend sales of stamps.

Cheerleading coach looks for a prosperous year

by Kim Wallace
Staff Writer

You may notice a change in the Seahawk basketball games this year and it's not the team's new uniforms. It's the UNCW cheerleaders. They have the fans up and out of their seats cheering before the game even starts.

The person responsible for the energetic cheerleaders is Teresa Jones, the new cheerleading coach at UNCW. She is originally from Durham, NC, and was head cheerleader at UNC-Chapel Hill. Cheerleading has been a part of her life since she was in the fifth grade. While not in school during the summer Ms. Jones opened cheerleading clinics statewide. After graduating from UNC-Chapel Hill in 1983 she opened a dance studio and choreographed routines for national cheerleading competitions.

Jim Bass, UNCW's athletic coordinator talked to Ms. Jones earlier this year about coaching here at UNCW. She accepted the challenge and she's making UNCW students stand up and take notice.

With the help of her assistant, Ricky Ward, a former NC State cheerleader, she intends to make UNCW's cheerleaders better than ever.

"When I first got here the cheerleaders didn't know the techniques and basics of cheerleading," Ms. Jones said. "What we're trying to do is teach them the fundamentals."

Ms. Jones is trying to change the style of cheerleading by getting them more crowd-oriented. Please see Cheers, page 3

Fourth statue stolen; Union stakeout successful

By Kim Wallace,

On November 25, the statue entitled "Dove" was stolen from the Tri-State Sculptors display. The statue was located inside the Union next to the east side fireplace.

Marine Band donates $6500

"The President's Own" Band of the U.S. Marine Corps Band which appeared in concert in Wilmington last September earned an after-expenses profit of $6,506.66. The funds will benefit the Foundation of The Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

James P. Hooten, chairman of the U.S. Marine Band Planning Committee and Chamber representative on the Mayor's Task Force for Military Affairs, called the function "a real success."

"This event succeeded because of the excellent cooperation from many segments of the community who got involved, kept expenses down, and at the same time, brought our area an excellent program," he said.

The Chamber Foundation was established for educational purposes, primarily directed at the public schools. During the past two years, the Foundation has contributed more than $40,000 toward educational projects.

Libraries are buggy

Apparently, loud talkers are not the only pests loitering in the nation's libraries, according to a recent article by Noel Vietmeyer in National Wildlife magazine. Real pests -- the insect variety -- have invaded and made mincemeat of a priceless book collection. National Wildlife is a bimonthly publication of the National Wildlife Federation.

The medieval illuminated manuscripts, which had been stored in an Italian monastery for centuries, were crawling with millions of strange, wingless insects. "They had strided from the spines and were eating into the texts," recalled a Yale professor. "There were so many grubs that those fabulous books were turning into lace doilies."

In libraries, most pests live on the glue in old book bindings. Until about 1950, boiled cattle hooves were the main ingredient of that glue, providing almost pure protein to hungry bugs. Some insects prefer to graze on fungi that blossom like microscopic alfalfa on damp pages. Others eat old covers made of leather or vellum, or new covers that are commonly filled with a starchy substance. Only a few insects actually bore large holes in pages and bindings. But librarians point out that a book-loving cockroach can do considerable damage.

In desperation, the librarians turned to Charles Remington, head of Yale's department of entomology.

"We don't usually do that kind of research," said Remington. Nevertheless, the scientist found an unidentified species of grub-like insect that was a relative of the wood-loving deathwatch beetle -- so named because its mysterious clicking sounds, emanating from the timbers of old houses, were considered an omen of death in ancient times.

Operating on a hunch, Remington tried freezing several of the insects. After a day and a half on ice, they were out cold, killed by the low temperatures. Encouraged, the entomologist and Yale's librarians wrapped every one of the precious Italian books in a plastic freezer bag and commandeered a freezer in a campus dining hall. They then froze the volumes for three days at 40 degrees below zero. A later inspection showed the embattle books to be completely bug free.

Since then, Yale has installed a large, walk-through freezer in the library and put its entire collection of more than 30,000 rare books and documents on ice. The technique is catching on elsewhere. In Illinois, a company has been established to supply libraries with book freezers. Yale's music department recently froze an infested Stradivarius violin. And the Smithsonian Institution's botanists have begun to freeze plant specimens in their vast collection.

"Freezing is intolerable for most life forms" observes Remington. "For infestations on things not living, it's the perfect pest control."

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR BOYFRIEND?

- a) When the president of Phi Gamma Delta asks you to Saturday night's Fiji Formal.
- b) After raquetball class, to tell him that the instructor with the Australian accent and those blue eyes did wonders for your serve.
- c) When you just feel like telling him you miss him after all.

Maybe you shouldn't tell him everything that's going on. But if you still care about him, why not call and whisper some sweet things he'll never forget?

Like why you call using AT&T Long Distance Service, and why you trust AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When you tell him that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number, he won't be able to get you out of his mind.

And telling him you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections will drive him crazy.

All of which will probably inspire him to drive out for the weekend, giving you an excuse to blow off that silly frat party after all.

Must have been a college student

A stop sign is stolen from a corner near campus. Must have been a college kid.

A woman calls the Seahawk office to place a classified ad to find her bicycle. Seems that since she lives near campus, the Sheriff's Department told her a college student probably stole the machine.

Several thousand dollars worth of statues are stolen from the University Union. Undoubtedly a college student.

We are not claiming that all the students at this university are of sterling character and candidates for sainthood. Yes, some students do "borrow" a bike on occasion, and more than one street sign graces a dorm room or apartment.

It is almost assured that Adam and possibly the others were stolen from the Union grounds. The majority of the people who saw the statues were students, so it could be justly assumed that somebody on or off campus "borrowed" him.

It just seems that the populace of UNCW is being credited with quite a few more crimes than we really deserve.

Not a whole lot that we can do, except possibly try to improve our image in the eyes of those people who readily accuse students of about anything that happens in their neighborhood but twice as readily will accept our money if we go into their place of business.

Who was it that spends an average of $60 a week in the stores, gas stations, and restaurants surrounding campus?

Must have been a college student.

Ode for a speedbump

Anyone who drives near Trask Coliseum has noticed that that "Trask Mountain", everybody's favorite speedbump, has finally been removed from one of the highest traffic areas on campus.

One can only wonder what caused this to happen.

A regular (albeit more expensive) asphalt bump would not be as objected to as highly as the "portable" bump that destroyed at least one automobile front end that we know of, resulting in $180 of repairs.

Notes from the

Editorial staff coffee break

On a more positive note, the editors were assured the other day when we received a letter from Southern Central Stores.

She requested that we print a thank you to the come man who returned the boxes of paper which had been somehow misplaced.

The gentleman went "out of his way and his needs" (as appropriate).

Southern Central Stores thanks you, and so do we.

One of the major arguments for the upped drinking age was that it would reduce the number of alcohol-related accidents on the nation's highways. At the time, this seemed like a rational approach to the problem, at least in the eyes of lawmakers.

One hundred more deaths occurred in traffic accidents over the Thanksgiving holiday this year than last year.

A state motor club reported that more than half almost three-quarters of those deaths were directly related to alcohol.

Oops.

What caused this turn of events? Were too many front ends left by the wayside?

We really want to believe that the bump was taken up because it proved to be, to say the least, a dangerous experiment that resulted in a few car repairs and did not cause any injuries or accidents.

However, one still wonders if it was taken up because someone "important" sustained a few more damages to his or her car than they should have.

It is really a shame that students cannot have access to their own University Union building late at night. Students are simply going to go somewhere after 11:00 p.m. They should be able to stay on campus.

We wish that the Union could be open 24 hours a day as it is on most other campuses in the University of North Carolina system.

And it would certainly be nice if the Union restaurant could be open more hours in the evening and on weekends. We really believe that it would have enough business to justify being open longer, and students would appreciate having somewhere to go for a late-night snack other than going off-campus.

Right now the nearby fast food eateries are getting the late night and weekend business that could stay right here on campus.

Rainbow's End

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

THE DANGER OF AMATEUR PSYCHOLOGY

Just a little bit of knowledge can be a dangerous thing.

Take a little bit of knowledge of psychology for example.

When folks come in contact with people who have some type of mental illness or mental disorder, they usually try to do what they think is the best course of action based on their limited knowledge of psychology and mental illness.

And that is the danger of playing amateur psychiatrist.

People who are suffering from mental illness really need the support of family, friends, people in the community and people at work.

Usually, the support the mentally ill get out of family and friends is nine times out of ten not enough.

The mentally ill need some type of professional help, not the wild speculative help in the form of guesses from an amateur psychiatrist.

It is important for people playing amateur psychiatrists to realize that mental illness specialists are specifically trained to treat all categories of mental illness.

The major problem with family and friends when they play the role of amateur psychiatrist is that they all too often fall into the trap of forget that their help is limited.

The support of family and friends is vital for the mentally ill person to get over his illness and maintain his ability.

Family members and friends often take on too much responsibility for the mentally ill person and as a result he may not be able to take care of himself because of that dependence.

Dangers also lurk when family and friends start giving advice on the medication or treatment that a mentally ill person is taking.

For example, two people who know mentally ill persons may meet by chance in the supermarket and start to exchange notes on their mentally ill acquaintances.

What they fail to take into account is that everybody is different and what works for Mr. Smith is not a sign that the same treatment or medication will work for Miss Johnson.

The best way a family member or friend can help someone who is suffering from a mental illness or disorder is by giving support and listening.

You're bright enough to master Cobol and Fortran.

And you're still smoking.

This has been a stressful semester for the students, faculty, and staff at this University. We have had more personal crisis in our academic community in the last three months than I have known in any comparable period of my twenty-one years in campus ministry.

Such things teach me once again how little control we have over life and how very vulnerable we are when we depend on future plans and expectations to bring a sense of meaning into our lives.

As a matter of fact, I believe that the goal of our striving needs to be a development of our capacity to live more fully in the present moments of our lives. It is one thing to have dreams that motivate us to live in the future. It is another thing to have memories of much of our past that sustains us. But the positive effect of both dreams and memories comes in any given present moment when we can savor them in a way that adds a sense of goodness to who and where we are right now.

But there is a lot in our past and our future that really contaminates the possibilities of living fully in the present. We bring into any present moment the regrets, mistakes, guilt, advantages us and binds the potential of our self-esteem and freedom to relate effectively with others. We also look into the future and see a lot there that causes fear, insecurity, and anxiety and those things also contaminate our present period.

The only way that I have personally found out of this dilemma is by means of my faith in Christ. What has come to me in my faith journey is the understanding that a fundamental goal of human existence it is to live fully in the present moment in love.

And what makes that possible is the experience of forgiveness in relation to the destructive part of our past that takes away to power of the past to contaminate the present. Faith also leads me to the conviction that a loving God awaits me at every moment of my future which provides a deep kind of security that takes away the power of the future to contaminate the present.

You may find some other means, but for me it is through my faith that I am able to clear away the negative aspects of past and future in order to live in fullness of all the present moments that come day by day into my life. And the desire to live each moment fully and lovingly is the only hedge I know against anything that may come our way that disrupts our life and our plans and our dreams.

This day is a real gift. I hope you are free to use it well and with love.

Listen, my children and you shall hear, the harrowing story of canoeist (right here)...

Okay, okay, don't throw it down. I never claimed to be a poet.

I am haunted by the memories of my first spring break, when I decided to be different. I didn't go to Europe, or the beach, or skiing. I decided to explore the vast reaches of a small river near Clinton, just up the road piece from here.

I figured I ought to be able to make it in about three days; it was only about twenty miles or so, and after the first twelve I would run into some of the best scenic canoeing in the state.

According to the map, my little river would run into a bigger one on about the second day out, and there would be smooth sailing all the way home.

One fine Easter afternoon I piled a rifle, two ecstatic Labrador retrievers and three weeks worth of freeze dried food into my yellow Coleman canoe and set out for an adventure to rival only those of Mark Twain's Mississippi.

I kept my handy map in an easily accessible pocket, checking the mileage every so often while I searched for the sight of the branch of the river that was a mere five miles downstream from my embarkation site.

After continuing to check my map for several hours, I suddenly learned a valuable lesson about maps.

They are the concoctions of evil Nazi war criminals who work for the Communists when they aren't plotting our maps that are absolutely nothing like the area they supposedly represent.

I eventually began to wonder if I was on the right river. My dogs loved it.

Now, I pride myself on keeping a cool head under the hainiest of circumstances. The ability to merely make a droll comment such as "Oh, dear" when being surrounded by a pack of wild dogs really has an interesting effect on your companions -- especially when all the dogs are frothing at the mouth with rabies, and you are standing unarmy in the middle of a completely flat and empty forty-thousand acre field.

Unfortunately, I was not surrounded by a pack of rabid wild dogs in the middle of a forty-thousand acre field.

I was in the middle of a clogged-up, half-dry prehistoric swamp and the only drooling dogs present were trying to get into my food pouch.

A real woodsman, Daniel Boone, once found himself hopelessly lost in the wilderness. Undaunted, Ol' Dan'l simply dropped his bag and said something like, "Just where I was looking for."

Of course, that was before toxic waste dumps, fast food, and Madonna in Playboy.

I didn't get too disturbed when the Indians came out to meet me in their hollowed out log canoe - things.

I didn't get too upset when this joker in a funny looking hat asked me if I was with Sir Walter Raleigh's group from Virginia.

When I saw the dinosaurs, though, I really knew I was in trouble, big time.

The last thing you need to bother you when you are hopelessly lost is a bunch of lizards trying to learn how to fly.

Anyway, I made map that afternoon late, got a fire going on the second match, cooked dinner, and about broke my thumb falling down the bank into my canoe.

Building a quick shelter, I made my bed under gloomy forbidding skies and settled down to sleep.

Or rather, I tried to sleep. A herd of cattle, five deer, one owl, and a tornado made sure I got little or no rest. I sat up most of the night, occasionally making a droll comment about that damn big pair of eyes over there in the underbrush or about the funnel cloud which passed over so low I could actually hear two different wind currents.

Next morning, I tuned in my little radio to hear a local announcer reporting on the tornado which had touched down.

My first droll reaction? "Noooo, really?"

So, with a full belly and the outlook that nothing else could go wrong, I launched off with two still overjoyed dogs, to discover exactly how big of a fool I was if I really thought that there was no way that this fellow and his mutts were going to have any more troubles.

Three hours and six portages later, I found myself washed broadside up against the biggest, ugliest, meanest rottenest log ever to cross a river. This sucker was so big and bad that he hadn't even died when he hit the water; he had kept on growing.

Suddenly, the canoe started to slip underneath the log in a current that was just a shade shy of those generally encountered in a hurricane.

Impressions Of London

(Columnist Anne Simpson went to England last March with a group of UNCW students. She shares her impressions of London with us in this column.)

London certainly has a reputation as a charming and fascinating city. Depending on your preferences you will have different favorite areas of London, but there is something here for practically everyone -- sightseeing, history, art, shopping, theatre, eating, drinking, carousing, and other popular sports. By all means, wear your most comfortable shoes, and resolve yourself to walking a lot.

Speaking of walking -- go ahead, do the tourist bit, gawk at the well-known landmarks; the sightseeing here is among the best in the world. Try the double-decker bus tour, but in cold weather the windows are likely to steam, interfering with your view.

Among the highlights of sightseeing:

The Tower of London is one of the oldest structures in London still in use; it was built on the site of an old Roman wall, some of which still stands. The name is a bit misleading since the Tower is really a walled fortress on the north bank of the Thames and contains several towers, the Royal Jewels and other valuables, an antique armory (with real antique armor), the Royal Hunting Museum, a chapel, and a lot of very grisly history.

The people who work at the Tower actually live there with their families. The tour guides in their beautiful red costumes are called "Beefeaters," but they are actually part of the Royal Guard who qualify for the job by many years of military service. Ghosts go with the deal, since the Tower is supposed to be thoroughly haunted; in fact, it is said to be one of the most haunted places in the world since more than one Britisher lost his or her head (and then some) in London's most famous fortress.

Seeing the Tower could occupy a half-day easily, but it is worth the time.

The nearby Tower Bridge is possibly the most picturesque of the several bridges of varying quality in the area; it is much more attractive than the London Bridge (which is not falling down). The Albert Bridge is pretty too, but you must get up close to appreciate the detailed designs on its sides.

Moving right along, Buckingham Palace is much more impressive up close than in pictures. Not bad for a town house. I saw a horse-drawn carriage pul' up inside the fenced courtyard and deposit someone important -- I'd sure like to know who.

Westminster Abbey can only be experienced. Allow plenty of time for this gothic church, and go to Evensong on Sunday afternoon. It's a feast for eyes and ears, and more, take my word for it.

The gothic arches soar heavenward, the altar and the pipes of the huge organ are beautifully ornamented; these sights plus the sense of history here make for a memorable experience. The clergy were helpful with directions; like most Londoners, they are used to tourists.

From the churchyard looking toward the Thames, we could see the tower of Big Ben which had been cleaned recently and was dazzling with its gold ornamentation.

Marble Arch near the Speakers' Corner end of Hyde Park is a good navigational point in what was a ritzy residential area, now all commercial offices.

Galleries and museums -- there are plenty of outstanding quality, but regrettably, we missed all but the Tate Gallery, which houses many works by Van Gogh, Degas, Turner, Blake, Rodan, and all the best European artists.

Shopping -- there's Harrods, an experience in itself; one can, they say, buy practically anything there, including an excellent lunch in the fourth-floor cafeteria.

For the gun enthusiast, the Holland and Holland Gun Works is Mecca. H+H has outfitted royalty from all over the world with their outstanding weaponry, from fowling pieces used by Theodore Roosevelt to a maharaja's double-barreled elephant rifle inlaid in gold, silver and mother of pearl.

Oxford Street, Regent Street, Piccadilly and Park lane surround the Mayfair area, famous for luxurious shops. Famous for avant-garde fashions is Carnaby Street, where one haggles with shopkeepers for bargains.

For the really serious shopper there are Rolls-Royce and Mercedes dealers in nearly every block of central London. If you wonder where all that money comes from, there are Arab Banks in the area.

Local color -- the traffic is formidable, and riding in a London taxi is a heart-stopping experience.

A fellow traveler asked a taxi driver how they manage all those close calls; he said, "We close our eyes." Good advice to faint-hearted passengers, too. The "panic bars" in these cabs are quite useful -- indispensable, even.

As in all cities, there are stark and ironic contrasts; under the rail bridge near The Embankment we saw some bums sleeping a short distance from the Treasury Department.

Many adolescents and others who have nothing better to do sport bizarre hairdos, strange but meticulously applied makeup (red eyeshadow, black lips), even pierced noses. Talk about your local color. But in London these styles are commonplace, and you get used to it.

Sloane Rangers, those aristocratic young conservatives named Sloane Square, can be spotted too; a favorite watering place of theirs is a pub near the New London Theatre named "Charlie's," with pictures on all the walls of HRRH Prince Charles playing polo. I wonder who owns it...

You really must ride the "tube," as the British call their subways. The trains are a good way to get around town, and there are often performers -- singers, dancers, musicians -- putting on a show for whoever will throw them a coin. Some are quite good.

Theatre -- London has some of the best in the world, from musicals to Shakespearian plays. The two I saw, "Cats" and "As You Like It," were very professional and enjoyable. The theatres themselves, The New London (with its revolving stage) and the plush Barbican, were impressive.

The immense, modern Barbican Centre For The Arts is a sharp contrast to the venerable old buildings in the area, such as the two-hundred-year-old pub nearby named "The Bear's Head."

You will never be able to see everything you might want to in London, but go ahead and try -- and you'll probably resolve to return someday.

Local musicians release record to benefit hospital

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The conceptual "We are the World", "Farm Aid", and "USA for Africa" concerts that have recently rocked the music world are inspirational in their concert-for-a-cause humanitarian efforts.

Last spring, a group of Wilmington musicians joined forces to launch a similar effort on the local level. The result is "Call This Place Home," a live concert recording, video, and documentary produced as a benefit whose funds are earmarked for the children's floor of the New Hanover Memorial Hospital.

"Call This Place Home" was originally presented as a concert at the Mad Monk on Sunday, April 13th. That concert featured the musical sounds of Lahn & Loftin, T3W, Black River Band, Innocent Bystander, Nouvea Riche, Blue Water Band, and the Squirrels. The highlight of the event was when fifty musicians, (comprised of the above listed groups and a number of other independent artists) gathered on stage to perform a song about Wilmington.

Vocalists Shannon Wyatt, Kathy Davis, Stephen Bradley, and Randy Drew are among the artists who joined the likes of Chaz Lahn, J.K. Loftin, Brad Thomas, Jeff Reid, Pat Kent, Polar Bear, and numerous other people in both performing and recording the song.

"Call This Place Home" was written and produced by Cleveland native Brad Thomas, who relocated to the Wilmington area several years ago. A talented singer, songwriter, guitarist, and producer, Thomas decided to develop a project that would enable him to contribute his creation to a local cause while also utilizing the many talents of the other local musicians.

"There is a vitality that exists in the greater Wilmington music community that is equal to anything happening on the west coast or in New York," Thomas explained. "That's what allowed us to tap the collective spirit of the musicians and work together. All I did was be a piece of grease on an existing piece of machinery that was just sitting there. These people don't just get together on a whim. There was a purpose. Once they had a reason to act together it built its own momentum."

Nearly a hundred people, including technicians, worked together at both Lahn & Loftin's Silver Sound Recording Studio and for weeks at Twin Oaks Recording Studio. Local radio personality Fred Allen was among them, and has, along with Thomas and the others, put countless hours into the project.

The sea of faces meticulously combined an infinity of talent into a gift for the Cape Fear area children. I spent numerous hours observing the artists during the production stages, and was thoroughly impressed, for a variety of reasons.

First, Thomas carefully selected a wide range of talented entertainers who compliment each other nicely. The result is a catchy, pleasant song whose inspirational message and intriguing array of voices is an enjoyable musical experience.

Second, I was extremely impressed by the calibre of all the artists and technicians themselves. Their collective talent became astoundingly obvious during the weeks that they worked together. One would have never thought that such an infinity of talent could be just a part of what's happening in Wilmington. The inspiring video, taped live by the Telemedia Group, attests to that fact.

Third, the song describes a feeling about living in the Cape Fear area in a truly unique way, and one cannot help but get caught up in the feeling behind it. Not only is the song well written, it describes a heartwarming perception of life in this region.

Twenty-one of the "Call This Place Home" artists whose record will benefit a local hospital.

And of hope. Because, after all, it was written to help the kids who might for some reason be on the children's floor in New Hanover Memorial Hospital. Fifty cents from the sale of each record is to go immediately to the floor, but several thousand dollars is still owed on production costs. After that debt is paid, all sales monies will go directly to the hospital.

Inspired by the talent and spirit of the seven musical groups and various vocalists who agreed to participate in the fundraiser, and most of all, by the children, Thomas and Allen's Plus Records and the Positracks Recording Group have committed themselves to getting airplay and selling copies of the multi-artist 45 rpm record. At this point, it is played on quite a few Wilmington radio stations, (including WLOZ, our campus station) and simultaneously broadcast by most of them when the record was released.

The record company is currently approaching more stations, along with record distributors. Copies of the record are on sale for $2 at School Kids Records in Wilmington. Video copies describing the whole project are also selling for $20, or can be rented from School Kids. They are also available through the offices of Plus Records at Positracks Record Group, 108 N. Kerr Avenue, Suite A-2, Wilmington, NC 28405, telephone 799-8303.

Call This Place Home

The Lyrics / The Artists

There have been so many nights
On oh so many times now
In a life of change and uncertainty
A place means a place to call home now - Pat Kent
And a warmer place
To be a part of something
Even if it's just always there
Once it used to be just a feeling on some highway - Chaz Lahn
Now every road is leading to
This place that we all share - Chaz, Shannon, Brad, Pat
We call this place home - all artists
Here is where we all want to be - J.K. Loftin, Kathy Davis
You and me
Shannon, Brad
Sitting on the sand
H.E.
Rising by the sea
Steven Bradley
Everybody is here and me - J.K., Kathy
We call this place home - all artists
Everybody is here and me - Lynn Wolff
Everybody is here and me - Kathy Davis
In a land of where we all can be
A Carolina dream - Kathy, Lynn, Steven

As time goes by we come to learn - Steven Bradley
That we really need each other - Steven, Brad
We don't realize we really are - Tony, Patrick
That our neighbor, who's not brother - Tony, Pat, Brad Sometimes when a love-thanks
I look into his eyes
There's just some old dear
Right beside my eye
It's a feeling you can't lose
Unless you try
And you've got to look around
To see the reason why
We call this place home
Here is where we all want to be - all artists
You and me
Sitting on the sand
Rising by the sea
Everybody is here and me
We call this place home - all artists

The cast of "Same Time Next Year"

"SAME TIME, NEXT YEAR"

A two-character comedy that one critic hailed at its opening on Broadway as "a love letter to the world," will be the next UPB Arts & Lectures attraction in Room 100 of the Student Union. It is "Same Time, Next Year" by Bernard Slade, which ran for well over three years in New York and broke house records in theaters all over the world.

The show, which will be presented at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, Dec. 3rd. It features that acting talents of Donna Orzano, Scott Cory, and Russell Lynne, all of the nationally acclaimed Alpha-Omega Players. They will star in this show about lovers who are married, but not to each other.

The entire action of "Same Time, Next Year" takes place in the same guest cottage of a country inn in Northern California. During the 25 years that are covered in the six scenes of the play, the couple spend a weekend there every succeeding year.

As the play opens, they are in bed. They meet only hours earlier in the motel's restaurant. He is from New Jersey and on a business trip. She is from Oakland and on her way to a religious retreat. The year is 1951.

Slowly they become acquainted. They fall in love with each other, but not out of love with their respective mates. They decide to meet again the following year.

And so we see these two at regular intervals in their extended relationship. Both of them change drastically through the years. They have arguments, they make up, they compress into the short time they have together all the appearances of a marriage.

The laugh-laced action of "Same Time, Next Year" will be directed by Drexel H. Riley, producer and director of the Alpha-Omega Players.

Barbara Ferris

On Stage

Live jams to catch

Jazz singer Barbara Ferris will be one of the entertainers appearing during the UNCW Jazz Ensembles Holiday Jazz Concert at 8pm Dec. 10th in Kenan Auditorium. The multi-talented vocalist has performed extensively throughout the area and is a delightful and impressive act to catch. Admission is free for UNCW students, and $2 for the general public.

JAMS, the new Wilmington area club geared especially for the underage crowd, has scheduled the local group Interface to perform there on Friday, Dec. 12. The band will be spotlighted in three 45 minute shows starting at 8:45pm.

Jazz pianist Margeret Shaw And Friends will be appearing at Roy's in The Riverboat Landing on Dec. 12 & 13 and Dec. 26 & 27. Ms. Shaw is a relative newcomer to the Wilmington area performing scene, but has been turning heads with her impressive piano style. The Friday and Saturday night shows are from 9pm til 1am, and there is a $2 entertainment fee.

Cinderella opens in Thalian Hall

Richard Rodgers' and Oscar Hammerstein's musical comedy, "CINDERELLA," will open December 4 in historic Thalian Hall and continue through December 8 with evening performances at 8 and a 2 p.m. matinee December 7.

This second offering by the Thalian Association community theatre group features a cast of local talent headed by Amy Parrish Leonard as Cinderella, Stephen Schmidt as Prince Charming, Elise Milligan as the Stepmother, Molly Humble and Hollie Horton as the Stepsisters, John Burn as the King, and Lindsay Timmerman as the Queen.

Additional cast members include: Amy Maliga, Erin

Redfern, Kristen Brandon, Steve Long, Gregg Page, Annette Horton, Da, J. Francis Garcia, Chad Lundeen, Carol McCune, Leslie Shamblin, Leanne Reese, McCall, Joshua Parks, Bob Daum, Pat Burns, Don Schmitt, Suzy Schmitt, Linda S. Pacic, Kimberly Kirby, and Kristi Sanders.

The play is being directed by McCall Thompson with Larry Mitchell as music director and conductor. Technical coordinator for the musical is Ron Smith, scenic designer is John Bob Wallace, and lighting design is by Allen Evarhart. Stage manager for the production is Michelle Lee.

The boxoffice opens at Thalian Hall for members of the Association November 19 and for the general public November 24. Ticket prices are $10, $8, $6 for students with valid ID's, $5 for seniors on Sunday and Monday, and for all performances children under twelve years old will be admitted for $4.00. Reservations may be made by calling 763-3398 Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. and on Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m.

Sunday matinee audience will be invited to attend a "Meet the Cast" reception after the play at the Cotton Exchange which is being sponsored for the Association by the Women's Pavilion of Cape Fear Memorial Hospital.

Additional information may be obtained by contacting managing director Sam Garner at the Thalian Association office, 251-1788 or the Thalian Hall boxoffice.

Arts Notes...

The Academy Foundation announces a new series of services and events for the local theatre community. The Academy Players, a non-profit company which produced musical plays in stock this summer, offers a monthly selection of structured readings of plays set for future presentation by local producing organizations such as The Thalian Association and Opera House Productions.

John Bonitz, Director of the Foundation, described the program as an effort designed to benefit the rapidly growing numbers of actors in the community. "Suddenly," Bonitz said, "the increase in both numbers and quality of actors available for both the film industry and for local theatre productions means that competition for parts will be stronger than ever." The "vocational actor, wanting to play once or twice a year, may find his pleasure prompted by a would-be Deniro anxious to show his talents.

In order to be competitive now, the candidate must know the nature of the play and be knowledgeable about the characters for which he may be suited. "The readings will provide an opportunity for the theatre community to easily obtain some of this knowledge prior to auditions," Bonitz continued.

The first of these readings was of the play "How the Other Half Loves" by Alan Ayckbourn at the Academy's new studio "upstairs at Stemmerman's, 1332 South Front Street, on November 19. Admission was by reservation only and for those interested in participating in the Thalian Association production scheduled for March 12-16 in Thalian Hall.

Bonitz emphasizes that these readings are neither performances nor auditions for the upcoming spring production.

Additionally, the Academy has started a series of graded classes and workshops to assist the actor in furthering his skills. They are to take place at the Front Street

Studio as well and will be scheduled to meet the student's availability. They are programmed to increase the students' competence as the student progresses from basics through advanced sessions and, ultimately, into performing in films and the theatre.

Local actress, Karen Durda, will conduct a class for novices. This class will introduce the beginner to the vocabulary of performing and will teach theatre customs and manners. It will meet for four sessions and will prepare the student for entry into an ongoing intermediate class which will give the student the opportunity to continue his study through scene work. The fee for each class is $20.00 monthly.

Both Durda and Catherine Schoew, actress, singer and highschool teacher will conduct young peoples' classes in acting. A special class entitled "So You Want To Be In Movies" will deal in interview and audition procedures. Special emphasis will be placed on cold reading techniques and control of stage fright.

Several advanced workshops will be offered to those qualified. Laurence Rush, a student of S.M. Barry, Stella Adler, Mikel Kahn, and Teresa Hayden will use "method" or Actor's Studio techniques in programmed exercises where-in experienced actors will be able to explore and develop their instruments in a non-judgemental atmosphere.

Bonitz, who studied with Lee Strasberg, will use similar techniques where-by scene studies will be used to develop the actor's analytical abilities and to relate use of the actors self to performance needs.

Jean Valjean Cutler, Ph.D., former producing director of Washington Theatre Wing, Artistic Director of the Virginia Shakespeare festival and Director of Theatre and film Departments at the University of Oregon will conduct a class in Styles of Acting. Classical, realistic, and romantic styles will be studied through script analysis and scene work. The actor will learn how to discover and display levels of relationships to his character, environment and audience.

All classes will lead to the formation of an ensemble of actors who will ultimately perform both the classics and contemporary drama. All classes are open to the public but advanced students must be qualified by interview and/or audition. For further information contact John Bonitz at the studio 251-8009 or at his home, 270-4119.

*****

Women's Pavilion of Cape Fear Memorial Hospital will host a "Meet the Cast" reception after the Sunday, December 7 matinee performance of the Thalian Association's production of the musical, "Cinderella."

The reception is for all audience members of the matinee and is specifically designed with children in mind.

Costumed cast members will be present for the event including Amy Parrish Leonard as Cinderella and Stephen Schmidt as Prince Charming.

Special guests at the matinee performance will be twenty-five of the "Big Buddy" program participants, a program conducted by Family Services, a United Way organization.

All children under the age of twelve will be admitted to the production of "Cinderella" December 4 through 8 for the reduced ticket price of $4.00.

The Women's Pavilion reception is being held in cooperation with the merchants of the Cotton Exchange in downtown Wilmington who are providing space for the event.

Sam Garner, Managing Director of the Thalian Association, was elected vice chairman of the Community Theatre division of the North Carolina Theatre Conference recently at a convention held in Boone.

In this position, Garner will be responsible for setting up classes in community theatre operations for upcoming NCTC conventions and assisting in staging community theatre play competitions for festivals conducted in cooperation with the American Association of Community Theatres.

In addition, Garner will represent the Thalian Association at a meeting of twelve leading community theatre organizations and representatives of the North Carolina Arts Council in High Point December 8.

College hoop is out of sight except.....

The leaves are turning up their toes and here we are, ready for another go-round, and I have to say right off the top that hoops, buckets, nets, roundball -- whatever you want to call it -- it's out of sight. Everything is beautiful, and it's going to get better, but:

It's time we stopped whipping that automatic punching bag in Shawnee Mission, the NCAA, and put the blame on the downside problems of college basketball -- and our inability to handle them -- where is really belongs. I'm talking about the problems we have now with recruiting violations, academics, payments under the table, student-athletes who aren't educated -- let's put the blame for all this right where it belongs, in the laps of the presidents of the Division I universities.

First off, you must realize that these people are a unique combination of scholar, educator, politician, fundraiser, and labor negotiator. And that, in addition, most are also uniquely self-centered -- academic Captain Queegs who are out of touch, walking around thinking there's nothing more important than finding out who stole the strawberries.

Too often, when it comes to something important, university presidents are too content to play Pontius Pilate, washing their hands of whatever comes their way. Or, acting like an ostrich with its head in the sand, or a whale that doesn't come up for a blow quite often enough.

Sad as it may seem, their relationship to college athletics is like that of the bachelor who's dating: He likes the girl on Saturday night, because she's dressed like Astor's pet horse. But come Monday morning, when she has diarrhea and curls in her hair, he doesn't want to know her. That's how they feel when it comes to college sports.

The truth of the matter is, the president of the university should be where it's at -- like the Oval Office when the red phone rings. He should be the Frank Sinatra, the Lee Iacocca, the Bruce Springsteen. He should be the boss. Whatever happens at the athletic department, the buck should stop at the president's desk. And if they don't realize that, then what are they doing, out walking around the stadium on Saturday afternoons, wearing their ascot?

No university president can expect that he can have automatic alumni meetings every Saturday in the fall and on the weekends in wintertime, without being aware that there are certain yeses and nos that have to be answered. Like the idea that, somewhere down the line, student-athletes are going to have to receive some type of financial compensation -- even if, by comparison, a migrant worker tips more than the student-athlete is given to live on.

Hey, the world of income-producing sports is truly no inventory, no union, no pensions -- and yet, if any of these young people so much as sell a complimentary ticket, it immediately calls for the creation of a committee to have Devil's Island re-opened.

What I'm trying to say to you presidents of the universities is, you don't need the committees. As Harry S. Truman put it, the buck stops at your desk. You can put up as many studies and committees and athletic boards and consultants, with all their buffalo chips, and what it still breaks down to is that you're the boss. You're the only one that can say, enough is enough.

Think about it. What happens to the wagon, if you won't keep the reins in your hands?

You're great at giving a test. So let me give one to you. Just lay on a few questions here, questions that don't need explanations, or long memos with paper clips. Questions you can answer simply, with just a yes or a no.

Should freshman be eligible for varsity play? Yes or no. Check which one.

Should student athletes be given a monthly stipend? Yes or no. Check which one.

When there's a need at home, a parent's death, sickness, or a family problem, will the school pay for the student-athlete's plane ticket? Yes or no.

Is commercialization or undergraduates for revenue acceptable?

Should coaches, after a three-year probationary period, receive faculty tenure? Yes or no.

Should the student body be allowed representative seating at income-producing sporting events? Yes or no.

And finally, would you explain to your coaches what a "representative season" is, in relation to wins and losses? Yes or no.

I'm going to say it once again: The people who should answer for these problems are not the guys at the NCAA because they work at the pleasure of the presidents of the universities. The presidents should decide the policies, instead of hiding behind committees or boards that never say anything, that dance in the shadows until the band goes home.

Hey guys, come out from behind your desks. You're the only person in the stable. It doesn't make any difference what the jockey says, what the trainer says, what the groom says, or even what the horse says. You own the stable. You should set the rules. You have the authority to put responsibility in the proper area of your athletic departments.

For example: If we claim that we have the best facilities in the world at our universities, then why is it so difficult to educate a person who gets a 650, rather than a 700, on his SATs? If it's that difficult, then I think we'd better start checking on the ability of our faculty. Or are we there to educate or just to educate the educated?

To sum up, I'd say, college presidents, make decisions. Make 'em even if they are unpopular. It's time for hardball, or college sports is going to lose its credibility throughout the country. Right now, there's a credibility gap in discipline, in the academic end, and perhaps most importantly, on the moral side of things.

So far, you've been content to put the spotlight on the wrong people -- the athletic departments, the coaches, the student athletes. They're not in charge. And yet, you'd want everybody to believe it's them who have egg on their tie.

On top, senior forward Ben Pittman slams home two of his seven points as UNCW won its season opener. The win was Head Coach Robert McPherson's first at the UNC Wilmington helm. The win was also the 150th for UNCW on the Division I level.

To the right, senior Sandy Anderson shoots over an Army defender to bag two of his nine points.

run that closed out the first half with the Seahawks holding a commanding 27-11 lead.

The 11 first half points tied a school defensive record for the lowest scoring half by an opponent, which was set against St. Francis, NY four years ago.

In the second half, the 3,010 fans in attendance, saw the Seahawk almost self destruct. When Greg Bender, who scored eight points, banked a jumper in from the left side with 14:42 left in the game to give UNCW its biggest lead at 36-18, many Hawk fans sensed it was in the bag.

But that wasn't the case as the well-disciplined Cadets stormed back to cut the lead to three at the 6:18 mark. Kevin Houston's jumper pulled the score to 44-41 and the Seahawks felt things slipping away. The Hawks called a much needed timeout and promptly responded to McPherson's words and put Army away.

The clincher was a 14-0 spurt that helped UNCW run away and hide for good. With strong defense throughout the game, UNCW put the final nail in Army's coffin, holding them scoreless for five minutes and 17 seconds down the stretch to coast to their opening victory.

The Seahawks outrebounded the Cadets 36-24, with Rowsom's nine caroms leading the way.

Army's Kevin Houston topped all scorers in the contest with 24 points, including 10-of-10 from the charity stripe. At the three-point line, UNCW missed both of their attempts, while Army connected on 3-of-10.

UNCW carries its 1-0 record to Chicago for a match with DePaul's Blue Demons Tuesday night, before returning home for a game with Big South conference member, Augusta.

'Hawks gun down Army

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

If you asked the U. S. Military Academy, they would have probably said that they got mugged. If you asked first-year UNC Wilmington Head Coach Robert McPherson and his Seahawks, they would say, you get what you work hard for.

"It was safer at 42nd and Broadway than it was under the basket against those guys," said Army Head Coach Les Wothke. "They were very physical under the basket and that was the difference. They taught us a lesson."

That would describe the atmosphere on the Trask Coliseum floor as the Seahawks gunned down the visiting Cadets from Army 61-47 Saturday night. UNCW got 23 points from senior center Brian Rowsom and Kevan Miles chipped in 10 as they Seahawks gave Army all they could handle.

The Seahawks, who tallied their 150th Division I victory, jumped on Army early. Miles scored the first UNCW points of the year, with a follow up a Ben Pittman jumper. Rowsom added a nice turnaround jumper and Sandy Anderson hit from the right corner to give UNCW a quick 6-0 lead. Anderson finished the contest with nine points.

Head Coach McPherson, who has worked very hard on the Seahawk defense during pre-season, saw his troops put tremendous pressure on the Cadets and holding them scoreless for the first six minutes when Army forward Scott Whipp nailed a three-pointer to break the scoring drought.

UNCW continued to apply strong defensive pressure as they held Army to 3-21 (140) shooting in the first half. Rowsom chipped in 12 of his 23 points in the half and along with senior forward Ben Pittman, starting his first collegiate game at UNCW, stoked UNCW to an 8-0

Lady Seahawks ink two cage recruits

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

UNCW Wilmington women's basketball coach Marilyn Christoph has announced the signing of two recruits to scholarships for the 1987-88 season.

The recruits, Regina Brown of King's Mountain, N.C., and Cindy Makowski of Bayonne, N.J., signed with the Lady Seahawks during the NCAA's early signing period and are the first of the season for UNCW.

Brown, a 6-1, 145-pound center, has been a two-year starter at King's Mountain High. She averaged 17.0 points and 13 rebounds per game in being named All-Southwestern Conference last season.

"She will definitely help us in the paint because we are so short," said Christoph. "She has unlimited potential and we are so very excited to have such a solid player as Regina."

Brown is also an excellent student as she owns a 3.66 grade point average and ranks 18th in her class. She is a member of the Beta Club and National Honor Society.

"She is an extremely good player," said Brown's high school coach, Diane Bridges. "She is an excellent student and should make an excellent college player."

Makowski, a 5-6 point guard, averaged 18.0 points, 6.0 rebounds, and 8.0 assists per contest in leading Holy Family Academy to a 17-9 record last season and a berth in the finals of the state sectionals.

"Cindy is a quick, good-shooting point guard who knows the court very well," said Christoph. "She is solid in all aspects of the game and does all the things you want her to do."

Makowski has started since the middle of her freshman year and has won numerous awards, including Rookie-of-the-Year her freshman campaign, Most Promising her sophomore season, and All-County during her sophomore and junior years.

"She is a tremendous athlete who plays with great hustle and determination," said Holy Family Academy Coach Pat Longo. "She is truly a competitor."

The two signings are only the first for Christoph.

"I would like to bring in four more six-footers to beef up our entire lineup," said Christoph. "I don't know if that is realistic or not, but that is our goal."

The Lady Seahawks finished the 1986-87 season 15-13 overall and 5-7 in the tough Colonial Athletic Association (CAA), good for a fourth place finish. UNCW lost in the CAA tournament semi-finals to eventual conference champion James Madison.

Saturday night the UNCW men's basketball team opened its 1986-87 season with a new scoreboard. The new 60,000 dollar scoreboard was purchased from Dak Tronics of Brookings, South Dakota. It was sponsored in part by Pepsi Cola and Don Kimball Chevrolet.

The new scoreboard contains a message center. Glenn Robbins, Project Manager from Dak Tronics, trained Paula Cummings, Office Manager, and Pat Howey, Assistant Athletic Director, to program the message board.

The installation of the scoreboard took three days. Trask Coliseum was closed during this time. Greg Dalton, Business Manager for the Athletic Department, supervised the project. The rafters had to be reinforced by welding to handle the new 1500 pound hoist.

Mid-State Sign Company of Lexington, South Carolina constructed the Pepsi Cola and Don Kimball Chevrolet signs that appear on the scoreboard.

The old scoreboard was placed on state surplus.

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

From staff reports

Senior Brian Rowsom has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the UNC Wilmington Sports Information Office for his performance against the U.S. Military Academy in the season opener for UNCW Saturday.

Rowsom, a native of Columbia, NC, poured in 23 points and grabbed nine rebounds in the Seahawks' 61-47 win over the Cadets of Army, including seven points during a crucial 14-0 spurt by UNCW in the last five minutes. Rowsom finished the contest 8 for 11 (72.7) from the field and a perfect 7 of 7 from the free throw line.

Defense was also a highlight for Rowsom as he blocked two shots and helped a tenacious Seahawk defense limit Army to just 11 first half points and a paltry 3 for 21 (14.0) first half shooting performance. For the game Army was a disappointing 12 of 50 (24.0) from the floor.

The 12 field goals and 24 percent shooting by Army were both Seahawk defensive records. The 11 points in the first half tied a UNCW record for lowest scoring half by an opponent was set against St. Francis, NY four years ago in the Siena tournament.

Rowsom fueled the 14-0 spurt by hitting both ends of a one-and-one with 5:16 to go in the game and then followed with a three-point play less than a minute later to increase the Seahawk lead to eight points, 49-41. He later converted on another one-and-one situation to help put Army away down the stretch.

The UNCW Student Body was the last recipient of the Seahawk award (Nov. 19).

Feelings are mixed on new three-point play

from NCAA News

Lou Carnesecca calls the three-point goal a Mickey Mouse shot.

Denny Crum calls it a step backward.

Stu Starnes says it can't hurt to try it.

A shot through the net from 19 feet, nine inches means three points in college basketball this season, one of the most drastic changes in the game since James Naismith invented it in 1891.

"It could put the smaller man back in the game, and that's good," said Edward S. Steitz, secretary-rules editor of the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee and athletics director at Springfield College.

Steitz said that it also is aimed at reducing rough play under the basket and opening up the zone defenses that have held down scoring over the past several years.

"Teams are going to have to play more defense away from the basket," he said.

Not everyone is thrilled with the change, including Carnesecca, coach at St. John's (New York), and Crum, coach of NCAA champion Louisville.

However, Starnes, coach at Montana State, urged his peers to be open-minded. "Try it. You might like it." The Bobcats belong to the Big Sky Conference - one of 15 conferences that experimented with the three-pointer from varying distances during the past five years.

"We've probably gotten more questions about this than any other change we've made excepting the shot clock," Steitz said. "There's still a lot of comment about whether we've chosen the right distance, and we may have to make some adjustments."

Of 744 college coaches surveyed by Steitz at the end of last season, 64 percent said no to the three-pointer.

Crum said he was surprised the committee adopted the rule despite the coaches' opposition.

"It's aimed at cleaning up the play on the inside, but I think it's going to benefit the big man because teams are no longer going to be able to afford to double- and triple-team him underneath," Crum said. "I just don't see the need for it. Why mess with a game that's at its peak?"

They may not like it, but coaches haven't wasted any time figuring out how to deal with it.

"We spent three hours in practice just working on defenses against the three-point shot in the closing minutes of the game," Villanova's Rollie Massimino said. Starnes' team connected on 47.1 percent of its three-pointers last season: overall field-goal shooting nationwide last season was 47.7 percent.

"It was an interesting part of our offense," he said. "The game is not going to change as much as many skeptics fear. You still need to establish your inside play to use your perimeter shooters effectively, and the good teams will have that offensive balance."

"It's a momentum play, like a dunk, that gets the emotions up," he said. "Unquestionably, it extends the defenses four to six feet from the basket; and in rebounding, it gives a little more value to quickness. But the good are going to make those adjustments."

"The one thing it could lead to is creation of a three-point specialist who could come into the game when you're down and get things going."

Starnes said the average accuracy of the three-pointer was about 39 percent, based on the trial runs in different conferences. To score the same number of points with two-point shots, a team would have to shoot 57 percent from the field. Michigan State led the nation in field-goal shooting percentage last season with 56.1 percent.

Starnes said fouls -- a three-point shooter gets only two free throws if fouled in the act of shooting -- were not a problem "because one of the basic rules of coaching is don't foul the perimeter shooter."

Steitz said the rules committee "considered awarding three foul shots as is done under international rules, but decided to go along with the two until we can get some data."

UPB Talent Show a hit

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The recent UPB open mike talent show spotlighted an array of talents within the university community. An interesting assortment of acts, some of them more unusual than the others, presented an enjoyable evening's entertainment.

Three acts were chosen as winners. First place went to Rupert Bryan, who did an impressive job on acoustic guitar with vocals, particularly on his Mike Cross number. Second place was awarded to the record-scratch rap act known as The New Style. Third place went to the talented pianist/vocalist Lisa Cash.

Each of the winning acts will be "gigged" by the UPB during spring semester. Also noteworthy, though, were the will soon forget the memorable Liquid Gorillas, who offered a somewhat avant garde, bongo-reinforced poetry reading of "Discourse With A Field Mouse and Undeveloped Film," and other interesting works.

Also unforgettable was the short acappella "Today My Love" offered by Frankie P., who is extremely talented. Dad Blamed, another rock band, played their hearts out but were hampered by severe equipment problems. The same technical difficulties resulted in an early end of the talent show.

Hats off to all who competed.

acts that did not win but provided the audience with an interesting range of entertainment styles.

The two other male soloists, Bedford Mundell and Paul Klueh offered enjoyable and impressive sets of acoustic music. The hard rock of the Hedge Toads contrasted nicely with the Blue Nation Band, who incidentally, have a very talented young lead guitarist in their midst.

Stress Often Affects College Students

Take This Stress Test

1. If you feel you have a supportive family, give yourself 10 points.
2. If you have a hobby you enjoy, give yourself 10 points.
3. If you belong to a social activity group (other than your family) that meets at least once a month, give yourself 10 points.
4. If you are within five pounds of your ideal weight, give yourself 15 points.
5. If you practice form of "deep relaxation" at least three times a week (e.g., meditation, yoga, imagery, etc.), give yourself 15 points.
6. For each day during the course of an average week that you get at least 30 minutes of brisk exercise, give yourself 5 points.
7. For each nutritionally balanced, wholesome meal that you eat during an average day, give yourself 5 points (maximum : 15 points.)
8. If during the course of an average week, you plan and do something you really enjoy (that's just for you), give yourself 5 points.

9. If there's somewhere in your home you can go to for relaxation and to be by yourself, give yourself 10 points.

10. If you practice "time-management" skill in your daily life, give yourself 10 points.

11. Subtract 5 points for each pack of cigarettes you smoke in an average day.

12. Subtract 10 points for each time during the day of an average week that you use alcohol or other drugs to help you relax.

13. Subtract 5 points for each evening during an average week that you use alcohol or other drugs to relax.

14. Subtract 5 points for each evening during an average week that you bring office work home.

A "perfect score is 120 points. Short of that, the higher your score, the greater the likelihood that you cope well with the ups and downs of life. (An "average" score is about 50 or 60.)

Sex and the Seahawk Are coolers really low-cal?

Myths about Sexually Transmitted Diseases

1. Receiving a blood transfusion is dangerous, because blood donated by a stranger may be contaminated with the AIDS virus.
2. AIDS cannot be transmitted if a condom is used.
3. If you have sex with someone who has genital herpes, you will get herpes.
4. Genital herpes cannot be transmitted if a condom is used.
5. If you get a sexually transmitted disease, you will end up sterile.
6. If a woman has genital herpes, she shouldn't get pregnant, because the infant will get herpes.
7. Women with herpes have a higher risk of cervical cancer.
8. Gonorrhea is more common than chlamydial infections.
9. Chlamydial infections are incurable.

Answers:
1. False. All donated blood is tested for AIDS antibodies by the blood banks before it is transfused into anybody. This test and other screening techniques have proved to be nearly 100 percent accurate in eliminating AIDS from the blood supply.

2. False. Although clinical studies have shown that the AIDS virus doesn't penetrate the condom, experts are reluctant to say that a condom will absolutely prevent AIDS. However, it is the best protection currently available.

3. False. The risk of acquiring genital herpes is reduced if your partner has no active sores or other symptoms such as itching. Herpes sores are highly contagious until completely healed.

4. False. Genital herpes can spread when any part of a person's body touches a sore. Condoms often don't cover the entire area on which sores appear. Therefore condoms aren't sufficient protection.

5. False. Only certain sexually transmitted diseases, such as gonorrhea and chlamydial infections, may lead to sterility if untreated, but prompt treatment can prevent this. AIDS and herpes are examples of sexually transmitted diseases that do not cause sterility.

6. False. The newborn child will not be infected unless the virus is in the genital tract at the time of delivery. A doctor should monitor the herpes throughout the pregnancy to ensure safe delivery. If necessary, a cesarean section can be done so the baby doesn't pass through the infected birth canal.

7. True. Women with genital herpes should have Pap tests at least annually to detect the cancer early.

8. False. Chlamydia, an organism which causes a series of sexually transmitted diseases, accounts for 50 percent more infections than gonorrhea per year. Common symptoms of infection include, for men, a mild inflammation of the urinary passage characterized by painful urination and a watery discharge. For women, symptoms — if they occur — include itching and burning in the genital area, vaginal discharge, pelvic pain, and bleeding between menstrual periods.

9. False. Most chlamydial infections can be cured by antibiotics within a week of diagnosis. Your partner should also be treated for infection.

Fast food admitted to hospital

Burger King, McDonald's, and Wendy's all have restaurants located in hospitals, according to the American Hospital Association. This is a good deal for the hospitals involved — they typically receive a percentage of the restaurant's revenues, as well as a refurbished cafeteria.

"It's no secret that the American diet — with its heavy concentration of cholesterol, fat, and sodium — is a fast ticket to a coronary care unit," says the People's Medical Society Newsletter. "So why are these hospitals doing this? They clearly don't know what they're doing — and are just interested in the revenue involved — or they absolutely don't know what they're doing."

Vitamins Not Needed By Healthy Eaters

People who eat properly and who have no special health problems don't need to take vitamin pills, the American Medical Association (AMA) says.

So why do so many Americans — 40 percent at last count — take vitamin and mineral supplements every day?

Perhaps because they think they can get away with poor eating habits by downing some pills. Not so.

The interactions of vitamins and minerals are too complex for pills to do the job alone. For example, the bioflavonoids, found in many fruits, help your system to process vitamin C.

Moreover, overdosing on nutrients — easier to do by popping pills than by eating food — can throw your system out of whack. Too much vitamin A or E, for example, can be toxic.

Before you take more than three times the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) for any nutrient, consult with your doctor or a registered dietitian, available through any hospital.

Instead of trying to use pills as a shortcut, the AMA recommends you eat items carefully selected from the four major food groups — lowfat dairy products, lowfat protein foods, fruits and vegetables, and breads, cereals and grains.

Eating these food can also help you to avoid extra fat and calories, thus lowering your risk for many diseases.

Vitamin Facts

Quiz

1. People who drink heavily need to bolster their intake of
  - a. Iron (in protein & wholegrain foods)
  - b. Calcium (in dairy products)
  - c. A number of B vitamins (in all food groups)
2. Women who exercise excessively are often deficient in
  - a. Vitamin C (in fruits & vegetables)
  - b. Iron (in protein & wholegrain foods)

c. Vitamin B<sub>12</sub> (in animal products)

3. People who never eat meat, fish, eggs or dairy products are certain to lack

a. Vitamin B<sub>12</sub> (in animal products)

b. Vitamin C (in fruits & vegetables)

c. Iron (in protein & wholegrain foods)

4. Which class of drug deprives people of some of the nutrients they need?

a. Oral contraceptives
b. Aspirin
c. Antihistamines
5. Research shows that vitamin C

a. Prevents colds when taken in massive doses

b. Prolongs the lives of terminally ill cancer patients
c. Neither a nor b

6. The safest, most complete sources of vitamins and minerals are a. Multivitamins containing 300 percent of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowance

b. Tablets of vitamins and minerals extracted from "natural" sources

c. Balanced meals every day

Wine coolers as high calorie as 'hard stuff'

The truth of the matter is, most coolers have about 200 calories in a 12-ounce serving, and an alcohol content of four to six percent by volume. Cocktails vary a lot, but the alcohol content for all is five percent or more, and the calorie count per serving ranges from about 150 to 300. These figures top most beers.

Yet coolers and cocktails are promoted as "light" beverages that are ideal for an audience of aerobically-fit, health-conscious people. They represent the alcohol industry's latest attempt to up flat beer and wine sales and reverse a decade-long decline in sales of hard liquor. What are coolers and cocktails, and why are they so popular?

Frank Prial, wine columnist for The New York Times, has described coolers as a "combination of reconstituted fruit juice, cheap white wine, sugar, and carbonated water." In fact, although ingredients vary, the end result is always a sweetened, highly gulpable drink that hardly tastes like alcohol at all. Most cocktails are blends of fruit juice, sugar, distilled spirits, and flavorings. Some contain cream. Both beverages appeal primarily to people who have a taste for sugar but no alcohol — often young drinkers — and to women, who may choose coolers because of their perceived "light" quality.

The reason that coolers and cocktails are so attractive to a young, figure-and-fitness crowd is probably because they're cleverly packaged and advertised. Taking advantage of the popularity of sodas, producers are marketing their products as "adult soft drinks." Coolers are sold in 12-ounce bottles and cans, either individually or in four-packs. Coolers also come in one- and two-liter plastic bottles, and some brands can even be purchased in kegs. All of this suggests that it's appropriate to consume coolers in relatively large amounts, like soda. Currently, pre-mixed cocktails are sold in individual 200-milliliter (6 3/4-ounce) bottles and cans.

Nearly all coolers have catchy, cute names, such as Sun Country and Calvin Cooler; names which suggest juice or designer soda, not booze. It's entirely possible that the unwary and the young might think that a bottle of California Cooler is just a fancy name for soda. And the confusion is likely to grow as manufacturers start spiking soft drinks to compete with the exploding wine cooler market. Currently, Squirt & Company is testing a new drink called Squirt Wine Cooler in several cities in Michigan.

What's more, coolers are almost as ubiquitous as soft drinks. In some states, they can legally be sold in supermarkets and drug stores. They're everywhere on television, too: Video spots show tanned, fit young people romping on beaches, riding waves, and drinking coolers, or svelte actors and actresses in their physical prime. And while advertisers are careful not to make outright claims that their products are for dieters, still, they imply it by stressing that coolers are low in alcohol.

To avoid deceiving people, manufacturers ought to label their coolers and cocktails with calorie counts. Otherwise, consumers can easily be duped into thinking that a sugared, flavored cooler contains no more calories than a wine-spritzer (which is essentially diluted wine) or a light beer. And since obesity is an ever-growing problem for millions of Americans, calorie labeling might avoid compounding some serious nutrition and health problems.

BREATH MINTS WON'T DO

Forget trying to use breath mints to conceal the odor of liquor on your breath. Like onions and garlic, alcohol produces perspiration of a particular "fragrance."

Lungs, brain damage can result

Pot as bad as tobacco

Even if marijuana were legal, smoking it would be hazardous: it's at least as harmful as smoking cigarettes.

Heavy marijuana smoking causes bronchial irritation and reduces lung capacity. It increases the risk of lung cancer, since marijuana smokers draw in more tar and cancer-causing chemicals than do tobacco smokers. The way marijuana is smoked — deeply inhaled, then held in the lungs — worsens its effects on the lungs.

Marijuana also affects your ability to think. It distorts perception, weakens critical judgment, frays concentration and impairs short-term memory. It makes learning especially difficult.

A driver toned on marijuana is as impaired as a drunk driver.

The percentage of THC — the chemical that makes marijuana smokers high — in the average "joint" has increased dramatically since the mid-1970s, from 0.4 percent to its current level of 4 percent. The health risks posed by THC are unknown. Still, health experts are concerned.

THC is not water soluble, so the body has trouble getting rid of it. Even a month after you've smoked marijuana, measurable traces of THC remain in your body.

Early research suggests that marijuana smoking causes:

- *increased heart rate which could induce a heart attack
- *lowered resistance to illness
- *higher health risks to unborn children
- *psychological dependency.

Potato chips contain fat

Potato chips still the champs of fatty snack foods. Quite a few snack foods can leave your fingers greasy, but potato chips are still number one in the fat department. Potato chips (at 40 percent fat) recently nudged out cheese puffs (38 percent), corn chips (35 percent) and tortilla chips (24 percent) in an analysis conducted by food scientists from the University of California at Davis.

Q. Is it true that smoking can cause facial wrinkles?

A. Yes, reports Douglas Model, M.D., in a recent issue of the British Medical Journal. To test smoking's facial effects, Dr. Model recently conducted a study and was surprised to find how easily - based on visual inspection alone - smokers could be identified. With a "highly significant" degree of accuracy, Dr. Model was able to distinguish smokers from nonsmokers (the people were mostly in their fifties) by one or more of the following facial characteristics:

- ☒ lines or wrinkles on the face, typically radiating at right angles from the upper and lower lips or corners of the eyes (crow's feet)
- ☒ deep lines on the cheeks or numerous shallow lines on the cheeks and lower jaw.
- ☒ a subtle gauntness.
- ☒ a leathery worn or rugged appearance.
- ☒ a slightly pigmented gray appearance.

As for why smoking causes these changes, Dr. Model could only say that they "suggest a toxic process," due possibly to smoking's known effect of depriving the skin of normal blood flow. (A smoker in Dr. Model's study was defined as anyone averaging ten cigarettes or more per week - or fourteen grams or more of tobacco - for a period of at least ten years.)

Don't Rush the Brush!

How much time do you spend brushing your teeth? Not as much as you think: The national average is less than 30 seconds.

Brushing and flossing is the best way to scrub away gum-rotting plaque, but half a minute won't do it. One consumer panel recently recommended three minutes at least once a day. But even that's not enough. It takes at least five minutes of toothbrush action to defeat plaque, according to a University of Iowa study.

Periodontist Benny Hawkins and colleagues recruited 82 dental students and told them to report for toothbrush duty. They held off brushing for 24 hours to allow plaque to build up. Then plaque levels were recorded, and the students were told to brush for differing time periods. The researchers wanted to know how long it would take to brush plaque down to acceptable levels. The "ideal": 5.1 minutes!

The typical 30 seconds removed only 10% of the plaque; 90 seconds rated a 20% reduction; 150 seconds got rid of only 25%. "Brushing takes more time than most people think," says Hawkins.

The study also found that no amount of brushing removes plaque adequately from between teeth. For that, Hawkins recommends flossing, and the American Dental Association agrees. (A national survey finds that though most of us know flossing is important, only 37% of us do it.)

Should we all rush off to brush several times a day to get in the allotted time? No, says Hawkins: "It's far more effective to do a very good job once a day (especially at night when plaque-producing bacteria are most active) than to brush three or four times a day and do a lousy job."

If five minutes is too trying, a three-minute brush-up plus flossing is reasonable. "Time and thoughtfulness are what's really important."

Aerobic exercise is any exercise that is vigorous and sustained, and is done at least 3 times per week. (Jogging, swimming, biking) Non-aerobic exercise involves sports where there is a rest between activities. (Volleyball, tennis, golf)

Aerobics For Your Health and Welfare

To help you decide whether aerobic exercise has any application to you personally from the physiological standpoint, here is a group of yes/no questions:

|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|-------|
| 1. I have adequate control over my eating, smoking and drinking habits.                      | _____ | _____ |
| 2. I can run a few blocks or climb a few flights of stairs without becoming short of breath. | _____ | _____ |
| 3. My resting heart rate is usually in the efficient 55-to-70 beats per minute range.        | _____ | _____ |
| 4. I rarely have trouble with acid stomach, heart burn, or indigestion.                      | _____ | _____ |
| 5. I have nice firm muscle tone -- no flabs or sags.                                         | _____ | _____ |

If your answer to any one of the above questions is "no", you should seriously think about an aerobic exercise program.

Aerobics For Your Ego

On the psychological, ego-building side, here are some questions to help you discover what your reasons for exercising might be:

|                                                                                | Yes   | No    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|-------|
| 1. I'm satisfied with my weight, my body countours, and the dress size I wear. | _____ | _____ |
| 2. I get sincere compliments on my appearance from family and friends.         | _____ | _____ |
| 3. I eat what I please and don't have to worry about calories.                 | _____ | _____ |
| 4. I can get through the average day without feeling tired and depleted.       | _____ | _____ |
| 5. I feel fit and energetic and eager to start each day.                       | _____ | _____ |
| 6. I'm seldom tense, irritable, or depressed.                                  | _____ | _____ |
| 7. I sleep beautifully and wake up feeling refreshed.                          | _____ | _____ |
| 8. I feel confident that I'm doing my best for my body, inside and out.        | _____ | _____ |

If you checked "no" for even one of these questions, you've got a good reason for aerobic exercise.

How Do I Love Thee

Visualize love as a triangle: the more commitment, intimacy and passion you have, the larger the triangle and the greater the love.

Intimacy, is the emotional component of love. It is expressed by communicating inner feelings, sharing one's possessions, time and self and offering emotional support.

Commitment, is the cognitive component of love. It can be expressed by fidelity, by staying with the relationship through the hard times that occur. It increases gradually and grows more rapidly as the relationship develops.

Passion, is the motivational component of love. It is obviously expressed by kissing, hugging, touching, being close.

Alone, and in combination, these components can form many kinds of love combinations.; When all three come together, you get consummate love, or complete love.

Many people strive for this kind of love- and once you've reached it the true work begins in keeping it alive.

Wintertime bad on the throat

No part of the body feels the onset of winter as sorely as the throat. Between the cold dry air we breathe outside and the warm dry air we breathe inside, our throats take quite a beating. Add some spirited Christmas caroling and it's small wonder that sore throats account for as many as 10 percent of all visits made to doctors this time of year.

So what's the best treatment for a sore throat?

That depends on the sore throat. If it's due merely to irritation, soothing drinks or over-the-counter lozenges may be all you need. A sore throat due to infection, however, is a different story.

The Viral Sore Throat

If your sore throat hasn't been caused by simple irritation, chances are it's been caused by a virus. Eighty percent of infectious sore throats are caused by viruses. They're not usually serious (most will run their course in less than five days), but they can be painful and they can cause a fever. The best things to do for a viral sore throat-particularly if it's accompanied by symptoms of a cold or flu-are to:

- *rest
- *drink plenty of fluids (at least eight ounces per hour)

- *take aspirin for pain or fever
- *gargle with warm salt water frequently (one teaspoon of salt in eight ounces of water)
- *use lozenges to relieve rawness
- *stop smoking (and don't start back up again)
- *wash hands frequently to reduce chances of spreading your misery feel really sick. Another clue to strep is how long it lasts. Most sore throats run their course in two to five days. One that hangs on more than a week is probably strep. The only sure way to determine that is to get a "throat culture" — a simple test that can be done at little or no cost by your doctor or local community health center. There are even kits (check with your doctor) that allow you to conduct the test yourself.

The Strep Throat

More serious than a viral sore throat is one caused by bacteria known as streptococcus. If not treated by an antibiotic prescribed by a doctor, a strep throat can lead to serious complications (rheumatic fever or even kidney disease) so it's important not just to soothe a strep throat (via the recommendations above) but also to get a strep throat proper medical attention.

But how can you know if a sore throat is a strep?

Strep usually (but not always) starts suddenly and hurts like the dickens. A fever, tender neck nodes and general misery are also clues that what you've got is more than a simple virus and that you should see your doctor. But not all strep infections will make you

You Owe Your Sore Throat Some Thanks

So what makes the throat so vulnerable to infection in the first place? If you've got children, you know sore throats can be especially nagging (ages five to seven are the worst).

The reason is germ warfare. We tend to take our throats for granted (thinking they're good for little more than helping the food we eat turn the corner to our stomachs), but in truth the throat is a vital, life-protecting organ. Packed with lymphatic tissue responsible for producing antibodies and germfighting while blood cells, the throat is engaged in battle constantly. Only when its skirmishes become especially difficult do we know about them.

Some Facts About STDs

Sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) are a group of diseases that are passed on from one person to another by intimate physical contact (sexual relations, other close body contact, and occasionally kissing).

The term STD is used to refer to all sexually transmitted diseases, although not all STDs involve sexual contact, and some do not affect the sexual organs. STDs are commonly referred to as venereal disease or VD, meaning related to sexual relations.

In all, more than 20 different diseases are now considered to be sexually transmitted.

Until recently, gonorrhea and syphilis were the most common STDs. Now, herpes, venereal warts, chlamydia, and various forms of vaginitis are becoming equally common.

Less common STDs include: lymphogranuloma venereum (LGV), chancroid, hepatitis B, and certain intestinal diseases.

Several parasitic diseases, such as crabs and scabies, are also classified as STDs since they are easily spread from person to person through physical contact.

What are the most serious STDs?

Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS) is a life-threatening disease for which there is no effective treatment. Syphilis is also a very serious STD that can be fatal, but only if it is not successfully treated.

Gonorrhea and chlamydia are potentially serious diseases if not properly treated. Both can result in pelvic inflammatory disease (PID), which can lead to permanent sterility in men and women, or ectopic pregnancy.

Some studies have associated herpes and venereal warts with cervical cancer in women.

If you think you have an STD . . . .

If you know the symptoms associated with STDs, you will know when to suspect a possible infection.

Many symptoms that are associated with STDs can also be caused by other diseases that are not related to sexual activity. The only way to know for sure if you have an STD is to have a medical examination. (Don't wait and "hope it will go away.") The following symptoms may be caused by an STD and should be checked by a health care provider.

- *Burning or pain in the genitals, anus, or rectum
- *Pain in the abdomen during sexual activity
- *Unusual discharge from the vagina or penis
- *Sores, growths, warts, rashes, or itching in the mouth or in the anal or genital areas

The following symptoms are probably not indications of STDs but should be checked by a health professional if there is reason to suspect that you might have an STD or any other disease:

- *Sores, growths, warts, rashes, or itching on any part of the body other than in the mouth or in the anal or genital areas

- *Flu-like symptoms including aching, pain in the joints, diarrhea, fever, swollen lymph nodes, extreme fatigue, persistent cough.

- *Unexplained weight loss, night sweats, and other symptoms that continue for a long time with no sign of improvement.

(Sexually Transmitted Diseases)

Things To Remember

- *Sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) are extremely contagious.
- *There are more than 20 different diseases that can be sexually transmitted.
- *The risk of getting an STD is greater than ever—over 10 million people in the United States get some form of STD each year.
- *Some STDs can lead to serious medical complications—even death—if not properly treated.
- *You can have an STD and have no noticeable symptoms.

- *The more sexual partners you have, the more likely you are to get an STD.
- *You can spread an STD to other people and not know it.
- *Precautions can be taken that will reduce your risk of getting an STD.
- *The more you know about STDs, the less likely you are to get one.
- *If you contract an STD, you must talk with your partner(s) so that they can be treated too.
- *The use of a condom is one important way of reducing exposure to an STD.

Stress, diet cited

Zits and the college student

Stress, anxiety and inadequate sleep can aggravate that No. 1 facial enemy — acne, otherwise known as zits.

That's not to say that the approaching deadline on that major research paper is the sole cause of acne. Oily cosmetics, suntan lotions, greasy hair, moisturizing creams, and a host of other factors contribute to the inflammatory skin disease.

Surprisingly, recent research has shown that foods, such as chocolates, play no role in causing acne flares.

"There are many factors that play a role in acne, including heredity, but food is not a factor," said Dr. John C. Murray, a dermatologist at Duke University Medical Center.

Murray said acne is a very common skin condition affecting 80 to 90 percent of young people, and some older people as well.

Most acne is gone by age 25 in 99 percent of males and 95 percent of females, Murray said.

Acne most often occurs at adolescence when endocrine gland activity (especially of the ovaries and testes) increases. These glands secrete hormones that affect oil glands, which are the largest in the face, chest and back.

Only material, called sebum, produced by the oil glands is in part responsible for acne. People with acne produce more sebum than people without acne. Studies have shown that this excess oil probably stimulates the formation of more acne pimples. Sebum also contributes to the blockage of skin pores and to the formation of plugs called blackheads and whiteheads.

Murray said acne is not usually a medically serious disease, but it can cause permanent scarring if not treated properly.

Although there is no instant and permanent cure for acne, treatment will help to minimize acne inflammation and scarring.

Murray said that treatment can be inexpensive. Here are some ways you can help control acne:

- Wash twice daily with a mild soap, such as Dove or Purpose, and apply a mixture containing 10 percent benzoyl peroxide, a topical antibiotic. "If you scrub too hard it can make matters worse," Murray said.

- Avoid facial trauma. "Sweatbands and motorcycle helmets can aggravate the condition," Murray said.

- Keep your hands off your face. Don't hold your head in your hands in class, or sleep on your hands.

- Don't pick or squeeze the pimples since this can cause inflammation and scarring.

- Avoid greasy preparations for the skin or scalp. A special, oil-free, water-base makeup, should be prescribed for women. "Generally, the thicker the makeup the more serious the problem," Murray said.

Women should also try to keep hair spray away from the face. Men and women should avoid working in greasy areas, such as around restaurant grills and commercial dishwashers.

- Wash your hair often enough to keep it clean and free of oil. "The more bacteria, the more acne," Murray said.

If severe acne inflammation persists, visit the infirmary, where doctors can prescribe other treatments, such as oral antibiotics, topical antibiotics, injection of steroids in lesions, or even surgery.

Murray said advances have been made in research in the treatment of acne.

A promising new medication is a Vitamin A derivative called Accutane. Used for severe cases, it has demonstrated remarkable results.

However, Accutane has troublesome adverse effects, such as birth defects, and patients on this medication need close supervision. Murray said other treatment approaches are being developed, which make the future bright for controlling acne.

Bladder infections a well-known woe

Cystitis not uncommon

Bladder infections are not uncommon in most people. One common type of bladder infection in women is cystitis, or lower urinary tract infection. This type of infection is caused by bacteria that has found its way to the urethra (a short tube connecting the bladder to the urinary opening which is between the clitoris & vaginal opening). This infection is also common after a period of sexual intercourse with a new partner, and has been referred to as "honeymoon cystitis".

Some of the symptoms women should be aware of include frequent and sometimes urgent need to urinate, and burning during urination. It is not uncommon for blood or pus to be present in the urine. If you are suffering from any of these symptoms, you should seek medical treatment immediately. The infection may travel to the kidneys and cause serious problems. For help or more information, contact the UNCW Student Health & Wellness Center located in the Student Support Center.

Know your greens

Question: I've always heard that iceberg lettuce has no vitamins. Are the darker green varieties of lettuce any better?

Answer: You're right about iceberg lettuce. With less than ten percent of the USRDA for most vitamins and minerals, it's not a good source of anything. However, since each one-cup serving does contain eight percent of the USRDA for folic acid, it does have some redeeming value.

Darker varieties of lettuce are more nutritious, as the chart below shows. Most are good sources only of vitamins A and C and folic acid, but spinach also provides 11 percent of the USRDA for magnesium.

The Best Lettuce

| Type of Lettuce | % of USRDA in one cup |    |

Student activities office offers spring break cruise

The University Union Student Activities Office is offering a spring break you will never forget.

Spend seven days and nights aboard the fabulous S.S. Veracruz as you cruise toward the exotic stops of Cancun, Mexico, the Isle of Cozumel and Key West, Florida. Five complete meals a day is included in the price as well as tips, gratuities and port taxes.

The S.S. Veracruz offers a casino, disco, nightly entertainment and first-run movies. The price is $569.00.

The ship is displaces 10,595 tons and is 487 feet long. She has eight passenger decks and features a deep keel and stabilizers for smooth sailing, and bow thrusters for maneuvering at docks.

The swimming pool has two adjacent wading pools.

There's a casino, a cinema showing current releases, a reading room and five comfortable lounges.

Cruise price includes: Early morning tea or coffee, full breakfast, mid-morning bouillon, four-course lunch, afternoon tea, four-course dinner daily and midnight buffet or snack, cabin as booked, all fully carpeted and all with private facilities including shower; captain's cocktail party; full program of on board entertainment, (including shows, feature films, disco and limited casino gaming with slot machines and blackjack).

At each port of call, the SS Veracruz offers a variety of fascinating shore excursions, specially designed to appeal to the different interests of passengers.

From Playa del Carmen you can take an all-day excursion to the Mayan ruins of Chichen Itza. Or a half-day trip to the Mayan fortress of Tulum, including a swimming party at nearby Xel Ha Lagoon. The Cancun shuttle motor-coach will take you to Cancun, and at Cozumel, there's the San Francisco Beach Party at a glorious beach a few miles from the ship.

In the evening the ship offers Fiesta Mexicana, an exciting folklore show in the little town of San Miguel.

In Key West, travelers can take different tours of this delightful port with the Old Town Trolley or just stroll through its historic districts and shopping areas.

A snorkeling program is available, and you can explore the colorful exotic undersea world at Playa del Carmen, Cozumel, or Key West — or all three! The program includes equipment, instructions and supervision. A deposit of $150 is required in the Student Activities Office by January 15, 1987.

For more information call 395-3827 or stop by the Student Activities Office, University Union Room 202.

Liberal arts majors more vulnerable to job pressures

TUCSON, AZ, (UPI)—A new study by the American Association of Colleges and Universities says liberal arts majors are more vulnerable to job pressures than science and engineering majors.

Last week, for example, 2,000 students jammed the University of Arizona's Main Library in protest of the library closing at midnight. It used to be open until 2 a.m.

Two weeks ago, 600 students sat in at the Perry-Castaneda Library at the University of Texas at Austin, and then held a candlelight study-in outside the building.

And, trying to defuse student threats to hold similar library sit-ins, University of Wisconsin officials appropriated money to extend library hours, which had been shortened as a belt-tightening measure this fall.

Tom Swan, head of the United States Student Association in Washington, D.C., predicts there'll be more such demonstrations across the country as more colleges, scrambling for ways to save money, cut back library hours.

"The issue is not so much the hours," says Michael Whalen, a senior at UT Austin who heads the student protest group. "The things inside have not been updated."

"It is more important in the long run that books are bound properly, periodicals are kept in order and preserved, and that we are able to order new books."

"We don't want to be incomplete or second rate," he says.

The energy industry slump has left the state about $3 billion short of what it thought it'd have to spend this year, forcing state officials to tell public colleges to cut their budgets.

UT's library was just one campus service to feel the pinch. "We've been in a hiring freeze since March," says library spokesman John Kupersmith. "We've had to cancel over 400 journal subscriptions and we're likely to cancel more, and we've reduced our book budget."

"The hours are a short-term effect, but the long-term effects of not buying books and journals is significant."

Arizona students were most upset by the 19-hours-a-week cut in library hours. Their big protest won seven more hours of open stacks a week.

Librarian David Laird, however, warns "(only) when the budget is restored will we return to regular hours."

Moreover, "when people get into research and finals (hours are) going to be a big deal," says UT Austin's Whalen.

Other libraries have chosen not to cut back hours as a response to budgetary cutbacks.

"We have not cut back service hours, but we have cut services and the level of staffing here," says Barbara Kemp, a librarian for the Washington State University library.

"The amount saved compared to the upsurge it causes is not worth it," she says. "But things are definitely resolved more slowly."

Our three-year and two-year scholarships won't make college easier.

Just easier to pay for.

Even if you didn't start college on a scholarship, you could finish on one. Army ROTC Scholarships pay for full tuition and allowances for educational fees and textbooks. Along with up to $1,000 a year. Get all the facts. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Private companies take over public colleges

NASHVILLE, TN. (CPS) -- Just as private companies have taken over public hospitals and even prisons, a new one in Nashville is hoping to "take over" some colleges.

"We think that there's a place for a private company to manage education programs just like Hospital Corporation of America has done for hospitals and Corrections Corporation has done for jails," says Roy Nicks, head of the Education Corporation of America (ECA).

Nicks, who headed Tennessee's state board of regents for 10 years, says his company often can do a better job managing certain parts of a campus -- janitorial services and maintenance operations are his favorite examples -- than educators themselves can.

For anywhere from $995 to $12,990 a year, ECA will manage a college's janitorial services, preventative maintenance programs, work order systems, painting and other tasks, says ECA salesman Jeff Jones.

"School and industry tend to do a lousy job of managing their physical plants," Nicks says.

"That's because most of the people who do the work are at the low end of the salary scale."

Keeping campuses up physically has indeed become a major crisis for some campuses. Colleges, trying to cope with inflation in the seventies and then federal funding cutbacks in the eighties, often have deferred maintenance on their structures and equipment.

Now buildings and equipment have become so bad that colleges can't afford new ones. In 1984, architect Harvey Kaiser, in his book "Crumbling Academe," estimated colleges needed $50 billion to rebuild themselves after years of physical neglect. The White House Science Council concluded in 1985 that colleges needed about $10 billion to renovate themselves.

Two weeks ago, Virginia's Higher Education Council estimated its state colleges need $90 million to replace worn-out buildings and equipment.

Nicks figures ECA can make maintenance cheap enough for colleges to avoid falling into disrepair again.

Colleges, Nicks estimates, can save 10 to 30 percent of their current budgets by letting ECA manage the maintenance instead of doing it themselves.

The savings have gotten the attention of some campuses.

ECA recently won contracts to manage programs at Carson-Newman College, Tennessee Tech, Middle Tennessee State and Walters State Community College, all in Tennessee.

"A lot of colleges use (these programs) for a combination of things -- maintenance, the total management process, to strengthen and upgrade their own management programs -- and they have proved very beneficial," says Wayne Leroy of the Association of Physical Plant Administrators of Universities and Colleges.

But Leroy adds ECA would appeal mostly to smaller colleges.

Larger campuses are more likely to have a "fairly stabilized, tenured work force that's been in place for many years."

"I don't think a management company can be as diversified as we are here," says Alton Leake, the University of Virginia's operations director.

"We have our own cabinet shop, locksmith shop, paint force, plumbers, plasterers and electricians. It would be very difficult for a private firm to come in (and manage our physical plant), and not as practical."

The company does manage several kinds of academic programs, too, but not even on a higher education level, Nicks says.

Colleges face budget woes

LOS ANGELES, CA (CPS) — Students have become less interested in liberal arts, are more vulnerable to job pressures, are probably less liberal but aren't necessarily more conservative than they were 20 years ago, a report released last week by the Higher Education Research Institute (HERI) at UCLA says.

UCLA, along with the American Council on Education, surveys some 200,000 college freshmen a year about their college plans, their social attitudes and their political beliefs.

To mark the 20th anniversary of the surveys, HERI officials issued a report summarizing some of their major finds.

The most obvious change, says HERI's Dr. K.C. Green, is in the majors students choose. There have been sharp drops in the numbers of math, humanities and liberal arts, science, and education majors. Green says the biggest increase has been in business.

"Students are going to college (armed with) job preferences," he says. "For the first time, we're seeing the (number of) students aiming primarily) to be financially well off increasing."

By the same token, Green notes, student interest in developing "a meaningful philosophy of life" is decreasing.

"We're in the materialistic age now. The country is just emerging from the worst economic period since the thirties," he says. "It cut a wide swathe across (the nation). Students are saying 'I don't want this to happen to me.'"

Such "materialism" also keeps showing up in surveys by the Institute for Social Research (ISR) at the University of Michigan, which runs another annual nationwide survey of student attitudes.

"We're seeing similarities (to the UCLA study) in freshman statements on desired and preferred work settings," the ISR's Dr. Jerald Bachman reports. "Students prefer to be employed by large corporations now."

Bachman suspects it's because the job market is "too crowded now. These kids are at the tail end of the Baby Boom, and they are going to suffer the most."

Whatever the reasons, Green thinks "the declining interest in certain majors — like engineering (which has lost about 68,000 students) — doesn't bode well for the nation's future."

"Every major has gone through 'boom/bust' cycles," says Bachman. "When engineering was flooded several years ago, fewer students went in."

Perhaps most surprisingly, Green says the HERI surveys disprove the popular notion that college students are becoming more conservative politically.

While fewer students now call themselves "liberal," about the same number of students call themselves "conservative" today as 20 years ago.

The "real growth" area of the collegiate political spectrum, he says, has been among students who call themselves "middle of the road."

But when asked to take a position on specific issues, even students who label themselves as "conservative" tend to espouse traditionally liberal stances, Green says.

The vast majority of students support abortion rights, want a bigger federal role in social issues and would like to see defense spending cut.

"The students know the issues," he explains. "There is a very clear, very strong student support (base) for typically liberal issues. The only real place we saw a decline was in 'law and order.'"

Increasingly conservative on that point, more students agree that "there is too much concern in the courts for the rights of criminals" than ever before. Similarly, more students support the death penalty than 20 years ago.

Michigan's Bachman notes some other political changes, too. "Democrats had a preponderance (of student loyalty) ten years ago. We've seen some modified shift. There's more balance now between the Republicans and Democrats, but the largest number by far is still not committed to either party."

"Students are really not that much different from the rest of the country as a whole," Bachman notes, "and that's true in just about anything."

Penn, Alabama, experiment with student integration

PHILADELPHIA, PA (CPS)

- Haltingly and without much success, black and white student groups on a handful of campuses have experimented with integration in recent weeks.

At the University of Pennsylvania here, for example, a white student tried to join the Black Student League until finally being rebuffed last week.

At Alabama, several black greek groups moved to the previously all-white fraternity row, and a black sorority admitted a white pledge. Mississippi's Black Student Union, hoping to improve campus race relations, appointed two white students to its board.

But some whites and blacks on some of the campuses don't believe the experiments are worth doing, or ultimately workable.

The trend across the country is that one person is accepted (in a fraternity or sorority) for a short period of time, and then they leave or drop out," said University of Alabama President Joab Thomas upon hearing of a white student pledging a black sorority.

At Penn, freshman Sydney Thornbury applied for membership in the Black Student League (BSL) in early September.

BSL leaders initially told Thornbury, who said she wanted to join because she is "sincerely interested" in helping advance black student causes, that they didn't want her.

"Offering (Thornbury) a full membership would have changed our organization," explains BSL spokeswoman Traci Miller. "It wouldn't have been a black student's group any longer."

But after some public controversy, the BSL offered Thornbury an "associate membership." BSL leaders then could not decide just what an "associate member" could or could not do, and Thornbury last week withdrew her application.

"She really only wanted to cause trouble in the ranks," Miller says. "She proved it by backing off when we offered her an associate membership."

Black student groups, of course, began to crop up on campuses in the late sixties, when mostly white colleges first began admitting minority students in large numbers.

The new arrivals complained they felt isolated, out-of-place and ignored at the colleges, which often had to be forced by court orders to admit them.

To promote their special concerns, protect their hard-won gains and, ultimately, to give themselves a social center of gravity, the black students often formed their own groups.

"There's a profound rejection for (black students) in white schools," says Barnard College psychology Prof. Jacqueline Fleming, who wrote a book called "Blacks in College."

She says "students don't expect (the rejection), and it's very painful, so they retreat into black organizations."

But black student unions at Michigan State, Cal-Santa Barbara, Illinois State and Loyola-New Orleans, among others, struggled for members in the early eighties as black students began gravitating toward newly robust minority fraternities for social sustenance.

Minority fraternities and sororities, though, also have stayed to themselves.

At the University of Illinois-Urbana, for example, "only one or two (black) greek organizations choose even to belong to the Interfraternity Council or the Panhellenic," says Bruce Nesbit, director of the Afro American Cultural Program.

"They choose to have their own identity, but they do interact with non-black greeks on occasion. There is no one campus establishment blacks identify with. Most of their socializing outside of black-only groups is at house parties."

Alabama sociology Prof. Donald Muir, who has been surveying black-white race relations for 20 years, contends social integration on American campuses has proceeded a lot more slowly than classroom integration.

Indeed, many blacks on predominantly white campuses now complain more about vague, social feelings of "discomfort" than overt racism.

At Penn, "black students aren't restricted," Miller reports, "but they don't always feel comfortable. Feeling welcome on campus has been a problem."

At Illinois, blacks are "very aware of racism, but most choose to ignore it or adjust to it."

There are, in fact, plenty of reminders of racism on campus.

Last spring, two Alabama white students burned a cross in front of a house on "sorority row" after a black sorority announced it was relocating there.

At Texas, two whites wearing Ronald Reagan masks tried to push a former Black Student Alliance president through an eighth-story residence hall window.

And at The Citadel last week, five white students accused of dressing in white sheets, yelling obscenities at a black student and burning a paper cross on his floor were suspended for the remainder of the year.

Citadel officials set aside the "suspension on five" promise of good behavior, but the cadets were demoted and must serve "room confinements" for the rest of the year.

"There have been no previous incidents here," claims Citadel spokesman Ben Legare. "This is a military college, and one is looked on for his ability to function as a cadet in a regimented environment. A cadet's attitude is 'when I put on that uniform, I'm cadet-guy, not black or white.'"

But the persistence of such incidents at other campuses has convinced many black student leaders they need to keep whites out of their groups, whether they're social fraternities or more political black student unions.

Psychologically, Barnard's Fleming says, students are saying "The rest of the campus rejects us and won't let us in, so why should we let them in?"

"Fraternities and sororities usually are dedicated to social life and center around sex, dating, dancing and such activities," UA's Muir says. "So there's reluctance to desegregate in that area based on the premise of genetics."

"And although there's considerable concern on many white campuses to ease such tensions, there's really not much happening. Worrying about it is a far cry from doing something about it."

Students fear 'pink slips'

By Pam Simmons,
Special to the Seahawk

Though most of us are struggling to keep our jobs rather than to lose them, it seems that employers are finding more reasons to hand us our pink slips.

According to the Student Career Planning and Placement Center, a large number of UNCW students hold at least one part-time job. Though we have a "good reputation" among the Wilmington and surrounding area employers, it is not uncommon for college students to get fired from their jobs.

Some of the most common reasons for getting fired, according to career counselor Sandra Harkin, are lack of motivation, not fulfilling employer's expectations, asking for too much time off, or personality conflicts either with co-workers or employers.

Some other common reasons that college students are notorious for are tardiness, socializing on the job, dishonesty, and being rude to customer.

Since most students find employment in restaurants (waiters/waitresses), night clubs, and retail sales, it is imperative that they are able to deal with the public. Having some previous job experience also helps.

Supposing that one is lucky enough to find a job related to one's field of study, he or she must be able to perform with a higher level of professionalism and responsibility.

Dressing appropriately to represent one's employer is also very important. Projecting a bad image of the employer or company may be valid grounds for dismissal.

Cases in which the employee is on a work-study program, failing to maintain academic standards could result in the loss of a job, not by firing, but by mutual agreement of worker and employer. Mrs. Harkin also pointed out that although sexual discrimination exists, it is not as wide-spread as it was a few years ago.

It is not often that one's sex constitutes firing. However, there are some cases in which females were not permitted to return to work after a maternity leave.

In most of those cases, the woman challenged her employer and won her job back.

Nearly all of us will go through a series of part-time jobs while in school learning our chosen profession, and though the majority of jobs open to college students are not the most meaningful, it is still important that one does his best.

Counselor Harkin cited that the key to keeping any job is maintaining a high level of enthusiasm and energy for the job. Distributing quality time evenly and equally will help to prepare one for their real job.

Aquarium offers whales and workshops

The N.C. Aquarium at Fort Fisher will be offering the following programs during December:

A "Children's Story and Craft Hour" will be held Tuesday Dec. 9 at 9:30 a.m. Registration is required.

A workshop on Seafood Cookery will begin at 2:00 p.m. Tuesday Dec. 16. Registration and a small fee are required.

Bill Martin will present "Whales of North Carolina" Sunday Dec. 21. The program will discuss the 27 different species of whales that travel through North Carolina's oceans and is free to the general public.

Examine the lives of shellfish in "The Shell Makers" at 2:00 p.m. Dec. 23 at the Aquarium. This live animal program will feature both shellfish and their homes.

The Aquarium will be closed Thursday Dec. 25 for Christmas but will reopen Friday Dec. 26. For more information call the N.C. Aquarium at 458-8257.

No. 2 Indiana slips by UNCW 73-72

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

You could say tradition kept the UNCW Seahawks from beating second-ranked Indiana University in the Hoosiers' own Indiana Classic.

You could say that it wasn't in the cards for the Seahawks as they tried to become the first team to ever beat legendary Head Coach Bobby Knight's Hoosiers in its own tournament.

"The one thing that can definitely be said is that the Seahawks were very impressive."

"We're one of the best 2-3 teams in the country right now," said Head Coach Robert McPherson after the Seahawks dropped a 73-72 decision to Indiana Friday and a 86-85 setback Saturday to Southern Illinois.

"I thought we gave a tremendous, gutsy effort against Indiana. The kids played their hearts out and they should be commended. We showed we could play with the big boys."

UNCW opened strong against the Hoosiers, taking a quick 12-5 lead behind eight points from senior center Brian Rowsom. Rowsom scored 35 points and grabbed 18 rebounds on the night. His 35 points were a tournament record that he would later break Saturday night.

The Hoosiers' legendary Bobby Knight did not stay down for long as they caught the Seahawks at the 11:32 mark and then went ahead to stay for the half when Steve Alford hit from the left baseline to give IU a 24-21 lead. Indiana lead at intermission 43-29.

The second half was a completely different story. The Hawks scored the first six points in the half and the Hoosiers got a hint that it wasn't the last of UNCW.

The Seahawks, behind tremendous defensive pressure and excellent shooting, to cut the Hoosier lead to five points with 10:08 to go in the contest. The Seahawks continued to pressure the Hoosiers who no longer looked like the No. 2 team in the country. The defense the key as the Hoosiers couldn't get anything done.

Brian Rowsom skies for two of his 35 points against Indiana. The Seahawks fell by one point to the second-ranked Hoosiers.

The Seahawks closed the IU lead to one with 7:54 to go when Adam Porter who finished with 14 points, hit a three pointer from the right wing.

The Hawks tried everything, but just couldn't regain the lead. The game came down to a two minute run to the wire that UNCW had a chance to win.

Indiana clung to a 73-72 advantage with 1:14 remaining when freshman guard Tony Freeman tried to put the Seahawks away. The 5-7 sparkplug shot the lane and layed up a attempt that hit the rim and Rowsom had the rebound and a chance for UNCW to stun the basketball world.

The 13,725 partisan fans fell quiet as the Hawks worked for the winning basket. Adam Porter worked it to the left wing and got it to Rowsom. He then turned and put up what might have won it for the Seahawks, only to see Indiana center Dean Garrett slap it away.

The Seahawks still had 10 seconds left and the ball. Porter brought the ball to the right side to See Seahawks edged in Classic, page 8.

Student reports solicitation near library

by Robin Hudson
Staff Writer

A female UNCW student was solicited in the Randall Library parking lot Dec. 11, but was not harmed, according to police.

According to Chief Joe Johnson, Director of Public Safety at UNCW, there was no physical harm done, but the subject was caught and asked to leave the premises.

Recently, other female students have reported other incidents of similar nature around or in the library.

Campus police reported two automobile accidents this week on Reigel Road and "B" Street.

Both accidents occurred because the drivers failed to stop at duly erected stop signs.

"Due to this increase in auto accidents caused by stop sign violations," said Chief Johnson, "officers have been instructed to pay closer attention to stop sign violations."

Graham Hall residents were forced to evacuate the building about 10:30 p.m., Dec. 14, when a fire triggered a smoke alarm in one of the fourth floor suites.

According to police reports, the fire started when a resident threw a burning cigarette onto a towel.

Larceny, forgery, and uttering were reported Dec. 10 when a subject took two blank checks from a student's checkbook, forged the owner's name, and cashed the checks at Wilmington's State Employee Credit Union.

A Calloway Hall resident received harassing phone calls Dec. 13, when the unidentified subject made several verbal threats to him.

Four incidents of larceny were reported last week, including the removal of a bookbag and its contents from the bookshelves in the University Cafeteria.

A student reported a class ring valued under $400.00 taken from her vehicle Dec. 12.

Four incidents of larceny were reported last week, including the removal of a bookbag and its contents from the bookshelves in the University Cafeteria Dec. 12.

A Belk Hall resident reported a jewelry theft from her residence hall room Dec. 11. The subject in this incident is unknown.

An unknown subject removed a large box of toilet tissue from a storage closet in Graham Hall Dec. 12.

The driver of a blue pickup truck is being sought after the vehicle was driven into a wall at campus apartment "B" Dec. 12. The vehicle was found in parking lot "P".

Campus Police found two bicycles Dec. 12.

The first bicycle, a Schwinn ten-speed, was found southwest of Hinton-James Building.

The second, a Murray ten-speed, was found on the walkway between "F" street and parking lot "P".

There were 636 parking tickets issued over this past week.

Christmas In Wilmington has much to offer

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

If you will be around for a couple of days before leaving for home, or if you just need to get away from the books for a few hours, Wilmington's historic Riverfront has quite a bit to offer this holiday season.

For what may well be its farewell performance, the old oak tree at the Hilton is once again decorated for the season. The tree is billed as the oldest and largest living Christmas tree and is an old Wilmington tradition.

The tree was the subject of recent controversy when the city decided not to use the tree this year citing the age of the tree and the possibility of workers being injured while decorating it.

A movement to save the tree succeeded, at least for this year. The old oak's future fate is not certain. The big tree isn't the only thing up in lights.

Many of the downtown merchants have decorated their display windows and storefronts in a string of lights that continues from Market Street to Riverfront Park, where one can look across the Cape Fear to the Battleship North Carolina, also decorated for the season.

Of course, Santa and Mrs. Claus are stationed in a little house near Riverfront Park, so all children young and old may come and whisper holiday wishes to Old Saint Nick.

Various youth groups are stationed nearby with hot doughnuts, cider and coffee to ward off the winter chill.

If you are more of an inside person, Opera House Productions will be presenting the classic play "A Christmas Carol" Wednesday through Sunday at Thalian Hall. Matinees are scheduled for 3 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday, and showtime nightly is 8 p.m.

Tickets are $8 and $10, and theatregoers should call the Thalian box office at 763-9328 or 763-3398 for reservations.

A wide variety of music, from carolers and handbell choirs to jazz and blues can be heard nightly along the Waterfront.

Many of the stores from the Cotton Exchange to Chandler's Wharf will be open extended hours for those who still haven't finished their Christmas shopping.

So bundle up, stack the books for an evening, and go to that place nobody thinks about except during Riverfest and the Azalea Festival. You'll be glad you did.

UFO may hit in Wilmington area next Wednesday night

An anonymous source within the U.S. Air Force has reported to the Seahawk that an unidentified flying object has been sighted making what appear to be practice landings and takeoffs in the area surrounding the North Pole.

The source would not comment as to whether this is the same UFO sighted in the same area about this time last year.

At present, the UFO has not responded to attempted radio contact, except that pilots and technicians have reported what sounds like an elderly man laughing.

The Seahawk will have all the details in the first issue after school starts.

Affemann says that games may cause stress

By Jenni Brown,
Special to the Seahawk

Since video games became a craze, there have been a number of studies done on people who play them, but what about the people who don't?

A counseling psychologist here at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has done research on a new health hazard connected to video games — and you don't have to play the games to suffer from it.

Dr. Michael Affemann, who is new to UNCW this semester, has done his research on stress vs. relaxation in regards to video games. He directed a study at the University of Wyoming to reveal that people who watch others play video games suffer physiological stress that they aren't even aware of.

Affemann noticed the popularity of the video games and the reaction to playing them and wondered what the video games were doing to the players.

Affemann's study, done as part of his doctoral dissertation, involved 75 students in three groups.

The first group played a home video game for ten minutes as members of the second group watched. The third group was the control group — they were used to prove that those persons in the same room encountered stress, even when they weren't watching.

"The stress is caused from the 'get-it-before-it-gets-you' idea of the games," Affemann said.

"Physiological stress in the students was detected by changes in skin temperatures, and the students' awareness of their stress was determined through a psychological test given after the games were played."

Now that all the research is done, Affemann is writing articles and making presentations on his studies.

He is also working on developing a game with a goal not to encourage stress, but relaxation.

If financing can be found and the technology can be worked out, he has his concept ready to go — although, he wouldn't reveal details about his concept.

"The main conclusion is that video games should be limited to homes or places where people have a choice whether or not to watch them, as in arcades," Affemann said, "not in bars, laundromats, or grocery stores, because watching is stressful and any kind of added stress can pose a significant danger to us because we already have plenty of stress in our lives."

Bingle jells? Merry Christmas Seahawks

As we cram for finals, growling and snarling at everyone around us as we prepare for the worst time of the semester, everyone seems to forget what else happens in December.

The winter holidays — whether yours be Christmas, Channukah, or Olde Christmas — have many origins, from the traditional solstice celebration of the Norse marking the longest night of the year to the Jewish celebration of the victory over the Syrians to the birth of a saviour. One thing they all have in common is the theme of goodwill towards one's fellowman.

Who me? You ask. I don't have time for goodwill toward my fellow anyone. Bah Humbug.

Bingle jells, as the reindeer on the poster says, a cynical look on his face. Whoop-pee.

Goodwill doesn't mean buying your detested roommate a new Mercedes (though he or she might like that very much). It is much simpler than that.

Refill their cup of coffee when you are sitting at Hardee's cramming for your physics exam. Offer them a light for their cigarette — and don't fuss about the smell.

Leave off lighting up that next tobacco stick. It won't kill you to miss one.

Try smiling and meaning it. A smile is very good exercise and doesn't hurt one bit.

Try wishing your grumpy roommate a Merry Christmas. The reaction should be worth it.

Merry Christmas, Seahawks. Have a safe and Happy New Year.

Give yourself and your family a great present. Don't drink and drive.

THE OUTLAWING OF CHRISTMAS

Christmas is less than a week away.

Already sleighbells are ringing, carolers are singing and chestnuts are roasting in open fireplaces. Children everywhere are gleefully awaiting the arrival of Santa Claus and trees are being bought from lots and are being brightly decorated.

And at businesses everywhere, windows and glass countertops are being smudged by the fingertips of joyful, last minute Christmas shoppers.

The special traditions associated with Christmas have their roots in Victorian England and the propriety of that period in England's history.

Victorians loved Christmas and the joy the holiday season brought with it.

Christmas joy touched all of England's masses, the young and old, the rich and the poor.

One reason for Victorian England's devotion to Christmas was that the celebration of Christmas had been banned two centuries earlier. Parliament had abolished the celebration of Christmas acting under the influence of the Puritans in 1647.

The English Puritans charged that Christmas was "popish," extravagant and a waste of resources.

Parliament made the celebration of Christmas a serious criminal offense, punishable by imprisonment.

But in banning Christmas, Parliament made the holiday into the most treasured of holidays.

Refusing to honor the anti-Christmas law of Parliament, families secretly celebrated Christmas and shopowners defied the law by closing their stores on Christmas Day.

The British learned to love Christmas dearly after being robbed of it.

For thirteen years after it had been outlawed, King Charles II restored the right to celebrate Christmas to the people.

In honor of the royal proclamation, people danced in the streets, vowing to celebrate Christmas Day as it had never been celebrated before.

Poor Robin's Almanac, the leading British journal of the day, had expressed the popular opinion of Christmas Day 11660 when the journal the following lines:

*Now thanks to God for Charles return Whose absence made Old Christmas mourn;
Whether it Christmas were or no...*

Answer to parking proposed

Editor,

Here is an answer to the problem of parking at UNCW that nobody thought of. Instead of restricting freshman parking or building more lots, why not teach students something about themselves - that they have the ability to walk. For example, how many times do you see students drive from Campus Edge or the dorms and sit waiting for a parking space, just so they can be right outside their class. This may sound like it's coming from mommy and daddy, but where I went to school in N.J. the parking lot with the only available space was a mile from the rest of campus (and no, the walk wasn't uphill both ways). I suggest that students stop relying on their power steering and power brakes, and park a little farther from their building - you know where the empty lots are.

Roy H. Morfit
Senior, Mkt. Major

P. S. And I don't like the Campus Police anymore than you do!

Let us make note that it is not that we don't like the Campus Police — it is just that one of their branches seems a bit overzealous.

Visit to prison is like stepping into Dark Ages

We are not concerned about the treatment of prisoners in our penitentiaries, for we are a society that is goal oriented, geared toward self-reliance, success, by and for ourselves. The more independent, the better off we supposedly are.

So then why should we worry about this individual who has broken the law and is now confined to a prison so that his or her debt to society can be paid off? We've been conditioned to believe that we really shouldn't worry, and this conditioning is sad but accepted as the norm. Truly if the message of the nineteen-eighties had to be stated in ten words or less it would probably say, "Be all that you can be." Or, in other words, "You're the best, forget the rest."

Today most commercials tell the public which foods to choose for better health, ask us if we are getting the recommended daily allowance of vitamins, flash cut-rate specials for health spas and show us a machine for twenty-five dollars that will redefine our body in thirty days, guaranteed or your money back.

Gyms and health spas offer youthful bodies in three months or less while all the branches of the armed forces extend tuition for a college education so that a degree in any field is attainable if we but join for a term of four years.

We are a society that strives to better itself every day and when one of us fails, he is looked upon not as a wounded soldier who failed in his search for the "American dream" but as a flawed being who has given up or simply not tried hard enough.

With this thought in mind I question the treatment of our prisoners. Is it humane? Is it morally right? Is this justice?

One need look no further than the New Hanover County Jail for the answers. Keeping in mind that we are dealing with the visitation rights of human beings, not animals, here are the guidelines as stated by the Sheriff's Department: You may visit a prisoner once a week on Saturday or Sunday but not both days and for half an hour only. You must make an appointment a week in advance to obtain a visit. The prisoner is allowed one phone call a week, and if the phone line of whomever he or she calls is busy or if no one answers the line, then his or her turn is considered used.

As if the visitation rules weren't bad enough, consider the degrading conditions under which visitations occur. This is the place where you may actually sit face to face across from your relative or friend in jail and have two inches of glass separating yourselves. There is supposed to be a phone terminal in each of these little booths with a phone on either side so that communication is insured, but this is simply not the case. Out of twenty-two

In conclusion it seems evident that even now in the twentieth century there is evidence of barbaric treatment of law breakers. True, these people have broken the rules of man and society and deserve punishment for their crimes, but they also deserve to be treated as human beings capable of feelings and emotions. No one should deny them this.

By Bebe Brewton

booths only one has a workable phone terminal and the remaining visitors are left to scream questions along with expressions of love so that the whole room may hear. This belongs in the Dark Ages.

Tongue in Cheek With Jefferson Weaver

The Morning after the night before... Christmas

Santa collapsed into the easy chair, hitting the button on the side, and sighed deeply as the chair stretched out below his ample bottomsides.

What a night.

One of the deer had suffered a torn hoof in Burbank and had to be shipped back. They were delayed a full hour waiting for the relief sleigh to come down so the animals could be switched, and one of the elves who was driving had picked up a heat-seeking missile after passing over the Air Force radar stations in Alaska.

Barely made it out of range before running into a flight of geese. Just wasn't that boy's night.

Then came the rogue 747 near LAX, and the ensuing scratch and dent down the side of the sleigh.

"Santa popped the tab..."

Santa popped the tab on some of the booty picked up from tables across the world. The cold beer felt good against the back of his throat.

Then there was that kid in New York. Stepped out on the roof and pulled a switchblade on him, told him to fork over the dough.

"But I'm Santa Claus," sputtered the sleigh-driver.

"And I'm Mayor Koch," sneered the punk.

"What about my reindeer?"

"You think I'm a dummy? I know a greyhound when I see one. Fork is over."

Mr. Claus was trying to figure out how he was going to justify the $53 to his accountant.

God only knew how much the insurance was going to run up.

Some smart Georgia boy thought that since Santa Claus drove reindeer, Christmas Eve would be a good time to fill his game tag.

Of course, when a Georgia Game Warden caught the culprit with a Q-beam pointed up at the night sky, he figured the good ol' boy was doing one of two things: A) he was signalling one of them cocaine smugglers, or B) he was a plain old jacklighter out for a quick deer.

Santa had Ho-Ho-Ho'd a few times after hearing that one on the scanner.

Of course, there were one or two warm fuzzy feelings over the night-long journey (in case you didn't know, Santa invented the Warm Fuzzy).

Like the crippled child in the orphanage to whom Santa personally gave a drooling little Lab puppy.

And the little old lady who lived near the railroad tracks in southern Mississippi.

She always had a new scarf knitted for the gentleman in red who came by for a cookie each Christmas Eve.

Santa sipped his beer again. Mrs. Claus's favorite cat, Snarfunkle, climbed into his lap with a purr.

"...he was signalling one of them cocaine smugglers..."

She (the old lady in Mississippi, not the cat) had the sweetest smile of anyone he had ever met, and he really looked forward to spending that minute or two each year with her.

Mrs. Claus always sent one of her prize-winning fruitcakes, and he always had a big hug for the lady's elderly beagle.

Santa sipped again.

Might just retire next year, he thought.

As the caroling elves came around again, he thought, naaahh.

I hate fishing.

all our faithful readers for their support so far this year. YOU'RE THE GREATEST!

Meat Loaf

'Getting Away With Murder' and coming back strong

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The December 10th airing of the David Brenner show, Nightline, featured an appearance by the memorable rocker Meat Loaf, whose "Bat Out Of Hell" album was one of the best-selling LPs of the seventies. The show was meaningful to me in light of the fact that the husky rocker recently spent a month or so in the Cape Fear area, leaving just in time to make that television appearance.

Meat Loaf (whose physical stature contributed nearly as much to his notoriety as his music) has been in town for the filming of his eleventh movie, "Skip Tracer". The Tri-Star production is a comedy starring actor Michael Keaton and actress Rae Dawn Chong.

Aside from giving us such classics as "Two Out Of Three Ain't Bad" and "Paradise By The Dashboard Light", Meat Loaf is a talented operatic tenor and a trained actor who appeared in the stage production of "Hair". His film credits include "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" and "Americathon". Accompanied by his family, his band, and joined by an assortment of roadies, the rocker managed to make progress in several of his fields of interest while he was in the area. After several years of laying low, he is now determined to make a comeback and climb the charts again.

Consequently, he filled in the time gaps of his filming schedule with the production of a music video and preparations for a European concert tour to promote his newly released album, "Blind Before I Stop".

The video, which included the talents of actress Rae Dawn

Chong, spotlights Meat Loaf's album cut "Getting Away With Murder" and is already airing on MTV. Production was done locally, using the local rock band The Squirrels as extras and the videotaping expertise of The Telemedia Group. After the video was completed in early November, the rocker concentrated his spare time efforts on getting his band ready for the promotional tour.

The band consists of eight people, including background vocalists. They spent the last three and a half weeks working daily at Twin Oaks Recording Studio in Rocky Point, going over the material meticulously, and honing all of their musical efforts to a level acceptable to the portly rock star.

I had the opportunity to observe rehearsals on several occasions, and was impressed by the excessive number of man hours involved in getting everything together for a major concert tour.

The instrumentalists worked for hours every day to insure that their act would indeed be together, for both the Brenner show and the tour. Their concentrated efforts left very little time for small talk, hence I did not interview the rocker or his band, though I saw them hard at work numerous times.

MOVING ON

Meat Loaf and his entourage left the Wilmington area last week, leaving just enough time to attend to the details of appearing on television. The band will play several northern concerts, then take a holiday break till early January.

After several weeks of rehearsal near Meat Loaf's Connecticut home and a ten day tour of major U.S. cities, the rocker and band will spend late February and all of March touring Europe. Shows are planned in England, Sweden, Norway, and Germany, with possible stops in France and Italy. They'll return to the states for another tour, and then head out for Japan.

THE ROADIES

The excitement about heading out to "get the show on the road" was obvious on the band's last night in the Port City. After a last rehearsal and detail-straightening meeting with Meat Loaf, everyone went their separate ways to party or get back to the wife or whatever. Except for the roadies, whose work was just beginning, again.

As the roadies were packing up the band's equipment, I had the opportunity to talk to them about their life behind the scenes. Though all had been employed by the rocker just one week before, they had some interesting tales to tell about life on the road in the unusual world of music.

The roadies, Tom Morrongiello (of Lyndon, N.J.), Jim Olbrys (of New York City), Eric Anderson (of Monroe, CT) and Charlotte native Ken Kutsch (who has lived in New York for the past six years), all received calls from various members of the Meat Loaf entourage offering them their jobs. Even after the one short week of their employment, they've got working with Meat Loaf pretty well figured out.

"He's just a good ole boy from Texas. He's into theatre, movies, and opera. Stuff that's interesting," explained Morrongiello. Meat Loaf's attitude, he said, is "Let's do it now." Some people procrastinate; he just does it. In a way it's good, but it makes for craziness.

But craziness is a way of life for these people. Jim Olbrys attended New England Conservatory of Music with Frank Doyle, Meat Loaf's keyboard player. He had just sold his business when Doyle called and asked him if he'd like to go on a European tour.

Eric Anderson wound up a tour with ex-Rolling Stone Mick Taylor on Monday. J.R., Meat Loaf's road manager, called him two days later to offer him this gig. Ken Kutsch knew J.R. from when he worked in reggae, on the Blackroo - King Surrey O'Day tour. Though Kutsch manages struggling bands, like the New York group Hard Fax (which is produced by Tommy Ramone), he decided to just on the tour bandwagon, too.

As for what life will be like on the tour?

"Nothing ever goes as planned," explained Morrongiello, who is also a guitarist and songwriter and knew band member Corky Lane from when he worked for Ian Hunter. "But we're having a good time being irresponsible. Basically, it's like being in the Army. You get to see the world and just hope you meet women who like men in uniform."

The others agreed. Then they continued with the several hours worth of sorting, packing up, and loading equipment that is a necessary evil in the music business. Two of them, Anderson and Kutsch, left Wilmington with a rental truck full of equipment that same night, heading out to enjoy more of the road life that the whole entourage has come to thrive on.

Sidewinder is one of several live bands that will appear over the holidays at the Mad Monk.

'An American Tail' is a delightful story

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

"There are no cats in America and the streets are paved with cheese," Poppa Mousekewitz tells his family one night before a vicious attack by Cossack cats.

The attack and subsequent burning of their home helps the Mousekewitz family to decide to leave their homeland of Russia for the promise of a new life in America.

Thus begins "An American Tail," a full length animated musical that combines the creative talents of former Disney animator Don Bluth and mega-hit producer and director Steven Spielberg.

The animated musical focuses on the adventures of Poppa Mousekewitz's young son Fievel, who becomes separated from his family during the long ocean voyage to America.

Fievel is washed overboard during a violent storm and finds refuge in a beer bottle adrift in the sea. He washes ashore on Ellis Island and is immediately befriended by Henri, a French pigeon who has come to America to help supervise the building of the Statue of Liberty.

Fievel thinks his family is lost to him forever, but Henri encourages him to keep looking and to "never say never."

Fievel's search for his family encompasses the rest of the film.

The charm of "An American Tail" lies in the parallel development of the mouse civilization along side human civilization. "An American Tail" is not the first successful animated movie to deal with a parallel mouse civilization along side ours.

Disney's animated feature, "The Great Mouse Detective," followed the adventures of Basil-a mouse Sherlock Holmes who lived at 221 1/2 B Baker Street.

Both "An American Tail" and "The Great Mouse Detective" owe their success to mice.

Bluth owes his own success as an independent animator to his last motion picture, "The Secret of NIMH." "The Secret of NIMH" was also a tale about mice.

Animators have usually been extremely successful with the adventures of mice. There's Micky Mouse, Mighty Mouse, Jerry Mouse, Danger Mouse, Minute Mouse, Basil-The Great Mouse Detective; and to that list of successful animated mice can be added the name of Fievel Mousekewitz.

From the moment Fievel appears on the screen, he captures the audience's attention and holds it throughout "An American Tail."

See Fievel, p.6

Stores to sell benefit record

In an unprecedented show of support, Zip Mart Inc., the areas largest convenience store chain, will make Call This Place Home by Artists United for North Carolina available in 14 of their 22 Wilmington stores.

According to Plus Records spokesman Fred Allen, "Zip Mart's support for this project should allow us to meet our present fund raising goals ahead of schedule." "Zip Mart division manager Teresa Tucker has been very enthusiastic about involving her stores in a project that will benefit the community where we all live and work."

In addition to the original sales location of School Kids Records on Kerr Avenue and at Wrightsville Beach, Call This Place Home is also on sale at The Record Bar on Oleander Drive and at Camelot Music in Independence Mall.

The support video, The Making of Call This Place Home, produced by The Telemedia Group, will be aired by Al Watkins Productions on their local cable TV channel beginning on December 13th. The video will be on vision Cable channel 3 between 7 p.m. and 12 midnight, and will be shown in between movie selections.

Profits from the sale of Call This Place Home, (50 cents per record), will be donated to the children's floor at New Hanover Memorial Hospital by Plus Records. If any local merchants are interested in becoming sales outlets for Call This Place Home they should contact Fred Allen at Plus Records, 108 N. Kerr Avenue, Suite A2, Wilmington, North Carolina, 28403, or call (919) 799-8303.

Opryland to hold auditions in Winston-Salem Jan. 7

NASHVILLE, TENN. - Representatives from Opryland, the Nashville theme park that highlights live musical productions, will make their only North Carolina audition stop in Winston-Salem on Jan. 7 during a 28-city tour. The coast-to-coast audition tour continues through January.

Opryland will hire approximately 400 singers, dancers, dance captains, conductor/pianists, musicians, stage managers and technicians for shows staged in the park, at industrial shows and conventions, and for performances on the General Jackson, a multimillion-dollar showboat operated year-round at Opryland USA.

The Winston-Salem auditions are Jan. 7 (Wednesday) from noon-3 p.m. in the Dormitory Studios at 1281 West Fourth St. No appointments are necessary for the open-call auditions.

Bob Whittaker, Opryland's director of entertainment, offers these suggestions to those auditioning.

"When you audition, it is very important that you're relaxed. Do the material you feel you do well, material you are comfortable with. Most importantly, do what you do best, and do it first."

According to Whittaker, Opryland is looking for performers proficient in virtually all styles of American music, with versatility being the key factor. Both non-country and country entertainers are being sought.

Conducting the auditions will be the park's entertainment director, manager, choreographer and musical director.

Singers should be prepared to perform two numbers, on ballad and one more upbeat song. A piano accompanist is part of the audition team, and singers should bring music in the proper key.

Dancers will be asked to perform a routine of no more than one minute. A record player and a cassette tape player will be available at the open-call auditions.

Instrumentalists will be asked to sight read, and woodwind players must be proficient doublers. Conductor/pianists must submit a resume and references, and a piano audition will be required. Stage managers and technicians should bring a resume.

Stage managers will be interviewed at the auditions, while technicians' resumes will be forwarded to Opryland's technical director.

For the first time this year, Opryland also will be accepting original songs for possible publication by the recently-formed Opryland Music Group. A cassette tape with no more than three songs and lyric sheets should be brought to the audition site along with a self-addressed, stamped envelope. No more than three songs per person will be accepted.

"Performers who hire are some of the best in the nation, and versatility is a key factor. In many cases, we need singers who can dance and act, as well as dancers and actors who can sing. And we certainly look for both country and non-country performers," said Whittaker.

Performers who are cast are placed in one of two companies. The first company begins performances on March 28, when the park opens for spring weekend operation.

The second company joins the first for the park's season of daily operation in summer. Performers drawn from both groups work during the fall weekend season.

Opryland is part of Opryland USA Inc., an entertainment facility that also contains the Opryland Hotel, the 300-foot General Jackson paddlewheel showboat, the Grand Ole Opry and The Nashville Network, a national cable television network. THESE AUDITIONS ARE NOT FOR THE GRAND OLE OPKY.

The tour's November stops included Birmingham; Oklahoma City; Provo; San Francisco; Los Angeles; Arlington, Texas; Denton, Texas; New Orleans; Atlanta; Bloomington, Ind.; and Memphis.

December stops were Chicago; Columbus, Ohio; Richmond, Va.; Boston; Baltimore; Pittsburgh; Detroit; Decatur, Ill.; Nashville; and New York. January audition sites are Winston-Salem, N.C.; Cincinnati; Knoxville; Mobile; and Orlando.

For more details about the audition tour, contact the Opryland Entertainment Department, 2802 Opryland Drive, Nashville, Tenn. 37214; phone 615/871-6656.

Theodore appointed

WILMINGTON - Dr. Theodore, professor of drama in the creative arts department at UNCW, has been appointed by George Lucas of Lucasfilm Ltd. to be the area representative for his Theatre Alignment Program or TAP. Theodore will monitor and evaluate print conditions during the first 10 days of selected film releases to isolate problems in the theatre so they can be fixed. His first assignment was the new DEG film TAI-PAN.

TAP is a comprehensive quality-control production service designed to improve the technical presentation of both 70mm and 35mm release prints. TAP endeavors to eliminate the variables that can detract from the technical presentation of a film.

The first variable is that of print quality. Through TAP's reel review operation films are checked as they are systematically processed to detect manufacturing defects. TAP then coordinates the technical alignment of all selected theatres on a given release with selected engineers and service personnel.

Evaluating presentation quality can be a highly subjective process so individuals are chosen carefully who are fully knowledgeable about film processing. TAP strives to obtain objective information by standardizing print reviewer evaluation forms and providing reviewers with a standard glossary of print condition terms.

Maybe there is a substitute for experience.

Fievel Captures Audience in 'An American Tail'

Philp Glasser—a seven-year-old boy—supplies the voice of Fievel. Glasser naturally gives Fievel the pluckiness that all young children have.

Fievel is cute as a bug and extremely clever. He is also very curious and has a knack for getting into all kinds of trouble when he searches for his family. His sister Tanya desperately tries to convince their parents that he is alive with no success. Tanya clings to her belief that her brother is alive despite being told by her parents that he's dead.

"An American Tail" greatly succeeds in showing the trials and tribulations of old world immigrants as they step on American shores for the first time. When Tanya wants to know why the authorities at Ellis Island changed her name, Poppa Mousekewitz simply and quite tediously replies that that is the way things are done in America.

The movie also succeeds in portraying a Russian-Jewish family of the 18th century. Bluth and Spielberg took a big chance in making the Mousekewitz family Jewish, put the chance pays off in the sincerity of the feelings the family has for one another.

Fievel has many near misses in finding his family. During his search he ends up in a sweat shop and manages to escape by remembering the fairy tale Poppa Mousekewitz told him about the girl mouse with long hair.

He also falls into the clutches of Warren T. Rat—who is really a cat in disguise—and Digit—a calculating cockroach—who is Rat's accountant.

Escaping from Rat, Fievel runs into Gussie Mausheimer, the richest, most powerful mouse in all of New York. Madeline Kahn supplies the voice of Gussie Mausheimer.

The character of Gussie is simply wonderful. She is a champion of her people's fight against the cats of New York, but she can not understand why cats will eat both poor mice and rich mice.

At a public meeting of all the mice in New York sponsored by Gussie, Fievel whispers a plan on how to get rid of all the cats in New York based on another fairy tale he was told. Gussie likes the idea and immediately rallies all of the mice in the city in the fight against the cats.

To reveal anymore of the storyline would be a great disservice to all those who are planning to see this new classic of animation. Bluth and Spielberg are rapidly overtaking Disney's matel as family filmmakers.

"An American Tail" is a real holiday treat for the whole family and is definitely a must see during the season.

Some teams are playing too many games

Bylaw 3-3-(a)-1 of the NCAA guidebook tells us that every Division I and II member institution "shall limit its total playing schedule in each sport to any one year to the number of contests...set forth in this section."

For basketball, the magic number for the regular season is 28. Plus, the powers that be in Shawnee Mission allow another six additional games that it would take for any team to win the NCAA post-season championship.

Now unless my addition fails me, that means 34 games a season, max.

Or does it?
How then, did Louisville—last season's NCAA champion—end up with a 32-7 record for 1985-86? And why was Duke, the team the Cardinals beat in the final game, 37-3?

What I'm talking about is what I call inching. The NCAA's practice, in recent years, of allowing the schedule to grow a tiny bit more each season, till now we've got to the point where the colleges are playing about half the number of games the pros are—a situation that I feel is detrimental to college basketball in general, and the student-athlete it depends on, in particular.

The problem, over the last few years, is that the NCAA has allowed teams to play more and more "extra" games. Games that don't count against their season total of 28. There are a number of reasons for this, which I'll get into as we go along, and take a look at all the "extras" the NCAA allows today.

First off, there's the Coca Cola Big Apple NIT—a 16-team, pre-season get-together in New York, which can add as many as four "freebies" to any team's schedule. My gut feeling is that the NCAA gave this their blessing, hoping it would be successful, and thus further lessen the influence of the post-season NIT—which they want to go the way of the buffalo anyway.

Second, there's the pre-season and Christmas tournaments that are allowed in Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico—more "extra games" okayed and exempted by the NCAA, and in which, believe it or not, there is no limit on how many contests a team can play. Once they get out of the Pacific time zone, they can rock around the clock, as Bill Haley said, controllers of their own destiny. Little wonder, then, that schools like Georgetown go over and play "Aloha from Hawaii" about the time we're all unwrapping presents and watching Kriss Kringle specials on TV.

Talk about unrestricted. Any team heading for Don Ho land can schedule games against any NCAA member school on the islands—the University of Hawaii, Hawaii-Hiwa, Hawaii-Hula, Hawaii-Bikini, Hawaii-Whatever. Believe me, there are schools on those atolls that even the government doesn't know about, and if a team is really desperate, it can always play the US Navy squad at Pearl Harbor.

Come on, guys. Let's be realistic. Going to Hawaii has nothing to do with improving the caliber of the basketball teams involved. It's a trip, a junket, and if it's used for anything, it's as a recruiting tool for promising high school players, so the coach can tell them, "Hey, sign with us. We're going to Hawaii, where we'll play some guys 5-10 and eat coconuts."

Also allowed is the Alaska Shootout, which gives us great insight into that famous phrase "Call of the Wild" by Jack London. If you're going up there, it's either because you're worried about the Abominable Snowman, trying to find him, or you want to see where the movie guys shot "Nanook of the North" to impress your social studies teacher.

Think about it. What other reason is there for coaches to bring their teams all the way to Alaska, where the nights are long and they play in a Quanset hut in front of 1,200 people—if there isn't a snowstorm?

Then we also have the post-season conference tournaments, which are only important because they give a seventh or eighth-place team in the conference a chance to get hot and win it—and automatically get an extra slice of the NCAA tournament pie.

The post-season conference tournament was set up by the ACC a quarter-century ago, and now there's only two or three conferences that don't have them. That's because it's like a Tyne Machine in reverse: It puts money back into the conference. To my mind, the post-season conference tourney is a fifth wheel, a complete waste of time, because now 64 teams go into the NCAA tourney anyhow.

I guarantee you, next year, that a minimum of four teams from the Big Ten, the Big East, the ACC, the Southeastern and probably the Big Eight and PAC-10 conferences, will all go to the NCAA tournament. And if a sleeper wins the post-season tourney, it automatically means five.

Next on our list of NCAA "freebies" are the foreign trips, the Summit Tours, that any member school is allowed to take once every four years. We're talking 10 days of practice time here, and up to 20 basketball games being allowed.

Off they go, to the continent, to the Mediterranean, Asia and the beat goes on. And then there's the ACC All-Star teams, the World Games, the Nicaragua Round Ball Classic, and of course, the Olympics. Today, there's more of these trips than there are slot machines in Las Vegas.

Finally, there's the pre-season warm-up game the NCAA allows against a foreign team—and usually it's that country's B or C team—which also doesn't count. Every year, around the first week in December the scoreboards are flooded with names like the Russian Nationals, the Czech Nationals, the Hungarian Nationals, the Bulgarian, the Rumanians, and so on. And then there's the Athletics in Action teams—and there must be 20 of 'em—and as long as you let 'em practice at halftime, they'll be sure to show up.

The real point of all this is the price that's paid by the student-athlete. He misses a ton of class, and normally he does not see or enjoy the area he's going to, because he plays two or three games in as many days, rather than playing one game and then getting a couple days off to soak up some culture.

What's happening here is a slow trend—a slow edging towards pro ball. It's crazy. Everything's topsy-turvy. Today it seems like anything the student-athletes do can make them illegal—while the institutions can do just about anything.

This inching by the NCAA and the institutions has got to stop. We've got to have some kind of rule that allows 28 regular season games, plus the NCAA tournament—period. That way, the only two teams that are going to play 34 games in a college season are the finalists in the NCAA.

UNCW loses to 2nd-ranked Indiana 73-72

Seahawks edged in Classic

Greg Bender. Bender who finished 0-for-six from the field, couldn't get the ball to Rowsom, but darted past his defender and pulled up for a 10 foot jumper on the baseline.

It is normally a shot he always hits, but not tonight. As the crowd held its breath, the ball went straight towards the hoop, destined to go in. Yet it caught a tad of iron and popped out, only to have a mad scramble for the ball run out the clock.

"We won the ball game in all the statistical categories but the score," said McPherson. We played really tough defense through the game and the kids never quit. For the first time in their careers, they experienced the big time at Indiana in front of a hostile crowd.

"All in all it was a great weekend. We gained a lot of respect for our basketball program. Indiana has probably got the top program in the country."

In the consolation game, UNCW sort of fell asleep. After coming out strong, scoring the first 11 points of the game, they let the Salukis of Southern Illinois back into the ball game.

"I don't think it was a letdown," said Rowsom. "We thought SIU would rollover and they got back into the game."

UNCW, who had once led 11-2, trailed at intermission 38-32. Things didn't get any better in the second half as UNCW could not gain the advantage.

With 43 seconds to go in the contest, UNCW tied it up on a Sandy Anderson jumper at 83-83. SIU then went down the court, only to squander a chance at taking the lead when guard Steve Middleton was called for charging. UNCW then got a chance to take the lead, but Rowsom got fouled.

Feeling no pressure, Rowsom canned both to give him 36 points on the night (a tournament record) and the Seahawks a 85-83 lead with five seconds remaining.

The Salukis then took the inbound pass and pressed uncourt where they found a wide open Doug Novsek. Novsek, who hit on 6-of-9 three-pointers on the night, then launched a prayer from 21 feet, only to see it answered.

A stunned UNCW bench watched the ball fly true and Southern Illinois had a 86-85 win.

The weekend wasn't a total loss for McPherson. All-Colonial center Rowsom dominated the inside in both games, guards Sandy Anderson, who scored 22 points in the SIU game and Mark Gary combined for a brilliant defensive effort against All-American Steve Alford. Forward Kevan Miles blossomed and the team's free throw shooting was excellent.

The first-year coach termed Rowsom's showing as "spectacular" and, indeed, it was. The 225-pounder set five tournament and tied one other in being named the tournament's Most Valuable Player. He scored 71 points in the two games and pulled down 28 rebounds.

"It's an honor to receive the award, but I'd give it all back for just one more basket," said Rowsom. "It's a small consolation, but it means a lot especially in a tournament like this and the tradition of Indiana."

"It was just a great effort," said McPherson. He showed how well he can play. We're going to expect him to play hardoffensively all the time. He doesn't have to score 35 points every night, but he must work hard."

Anderson and Gary sacrificed the offensive side of their games to put the clamps on Alford, a highly-publicized consensus All-American selection last season. Alford was held to a season-low 20 points on 8-of-21 shooting from the floor and only stepped up to the free throw line once on the night.

McPherson said, "Mark and Sandy just did a great job defensively on Alford. Sandy blocked one of his shots and Alford doesn't get his shot blocked very often. Sandy also showed a tremendous level of intensity against Southern Illinois and had an intense desire to win."

Miles, meanwhile, played very steady in the tournament and posted career-highs of 17 points and nine rebounds in the last-second loss to the Salukis in the consolation. "Kevan made some big strides in becoming a great basketball player. He showed a lot of determination and confidence."

UNCW carries its 2-3 overall record to Winston-Salem, N. C. Saturday to challenge the only Atlantic Coast Conference team on the 1986-87 schedule, Wake Forest. It's the final game of the pre-holiday schedule for the Seahawks.

Lady Seahawks extend record to a perfect 5-0

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The UNCW women's basketball team finished the week with two impressive victories over in-state rivals, Pembroke State and Campbell. Wednesday the Lady Hawks traveled to Pembroke, N. C. to take on the 4-1 Lady Indians whom they have never beaten on the road. The win was an important one for the Lady Hawks because it gave them momentum for their home game against a very tough Campbell squad.

So far this season it appears to be one of career bests with Elizabeth Bell and Wanda Carroll scoring career highs in points and Johnnie Smith a career high in assists. Against Pembroke State it was no different as Wanda Carroll hit her personal best, 30 points. Carroll's performance was instrumental in the victory.

On several occasions she made important baskets that interrupted the comebacks attempted by the Lady Indians.

The game started evenly with both teams exchanging baskets. This pace continued until the 6:06 mark of the first half when Sissy Morse nailed two consecutive baseline jumpers to give the women cagers a 13-point lead 34-21, their biggest of the first period. Pembroke State fought back, but were only able to get the score within seven before halftime, 42-35.

After the intermission the Lady Hawks continued their attack building another 13 point-lead early in the second half. It was a second half in which Wanda Carroll scored 18 of her 30 points. Carroll bullseye shooting seemed to break the moral of Pembroke State as they never regained their composure and were only able to get within seven points of the Lady Hawks. The game ended at the free throw line where the Seahawks sank their final 13 points. The game ended 89-82, leaving the Lady Hawks with a 4-0 record as they headed home to play Campbell.

The second game of the week pitted UNCW against Campbell University. The Lady Camels with their 3-1 record are competing in their first year of NCAA Division I play. Campbell, a longtime NAIA power have troubled the Lady Hawks in the past.

The Lady Hawks were led by the by the strong inside play of Sharon McDowell and the precise passing of Johnnie Smith. The Lady Hawks trailed at halftime 35-32, but never looked discouraged as they appeared confident throughout the contest.

At the 13:30 mark of the second half Elizabeth stole an errant pass as went coast to coast laying in the go head basket. UNCW took the lead for the first time since the early going 47-46 and never looked back. From this point on the Lady Hawks began to run an unstoppable fast break led by Johnnie Smith. Smith gunned the team to an impressive 11 point victory, 84-73.

Carroll lead all scorers with 24 points. McDowell was a force in the middle grabbing 11 rebounds.

The Lady Seahawks finished the week with a 5-0 record. UNCW women's team faces Coastal Carolina College at home Friday night.

Coaches want freshman to be ineligible

courtesy of NCAA News

By Rick Brown
The Des Moines Register

University of Kansas basketball coach Larry Brown is in a compromising position.

He doesn't think freshmen should be eligible to play. He may start two of them this season.

"If we're thinking of the kids, there's no reason to have freshmen eligible," said Brown. "I don't see any positive thing about the rule, other than if you're in deep trouble and the freshman group can come in and help you right off the bat."

Brown, whose Jayhawks made last season's Final Four, isn't in deep trouble; he returns multitalented Danny Manning.

But until the freshman-eligible rule is changed by the NCAA, Brown will continue to start his best players...no matter what class they're in.

Brown and the big Eight's other coaches gathered in Kansas City recently to discuss their teams and other issues. Freshman eligibility was a hot topic. Most favor making freshmen ineligible. In the minority was the University of Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs.

"Why shouldn't Danny Manning or Wayman Tisdale be able to play if they can handle it?" Tubbs asked. "I think we should get some rules and stick with them."

Freshmen were made eligible by the NCAA in 1972. In recent years, the number of transfers has skyrocketed. Many blame freshman eligibility, citing the difficult adjustment from star status in high school to college ball.

The argument for making freshmen ineligible is that young players need a year to get adjusted socially, academically and athletically.

"It's a tough situation for kids coming right out of high school," said University of Colorado coach Tom Miller. "They step into that pressure cooker and they're supposed to carry their team to the Final Four. At the same time, they're still growing and very vulnerable."

Miller does see some imposing hurdles, including cost, in the way of change. Miller claims that adding a freshman team would dramatically increase expenses for coaches, travel, uniforms and meals.

Brown thinks having a freshman team would cut expenses.

"Every program has part-time coaches and graduate assistants, so I don't think that would be a factor," Brown said. "And I would hope with a freshman schedule you wouldn't have to travel. We could play a local schedule. The purpose of having a freshman team is to give them an opportunity to study and adjust."

"We would save money because the varsity wouldn't be as large, and we would save on travel expenses. Instead of taking 15 guys, you would probably take 10 or 11."

Freshmen were not eligible when Lon Kruger, Kansas State University's new coach, joined the Wildcat program for the 1970-71 season.

"I benefited from being on campus all the time, not traveling or worrying about varsity competition," Kruger recalled. "We did play a 12-game schedule, so we got game experience to a certain degree without the great pressures.

"I think not having freshmen play would be outstanding. Putting freshmen in a situation where so much is involved is a little bit unrealistic and unfair. We hear talk of putting a greater priority on academics; well, here's a chance to do it."

Danny Nee of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, is wrestling with the real reasons for making freshmen ineligible.

"I do think we have to put in some kind of guidelines that show we are making a commitment to athletes," he said. "I think making freshmen ineligible might be one of the ways to do it, but it has to be done for the right reasons."

Nee doesn't like the underlying theory that if you're for freshman eligibility, you're against academics, and vice versa.

"I know one thing," Nee said. "If freshmen are ineligible and not playing basketball, they won't be in the library studying. If the presidents think they are going to be studying, they're out of their minds. I'm for freshmen being ineligible, but I don't think it will happen."

Iowa State University coach Johnny Orr has come full circle on the subject. He said when he started building the Cyclone program in 1980, he never would have succeeded had freshmen been ineligible. New Oklahoma State University coach Leonard Hamilton is in that same position now.

"Now that the program is established, I think it would be better to let a kid sit out and become adjusted," Orr said. "We're closer to changing the rule than we ever have been."

"If I had a well-established program, maybe I would think that way," Hamilton said.

Seahawks to play Wake Forest Saturday

From Staff Reports

The Christmas break will feature a number of UNC Wilmington basketball games. Most by the men's team which is coming off an impressive showing at the Indiana Classic which saw the Seahawks finish just two points from stunning the second-ranked Hoosiers of Indiana University.

The first game will be a date with Atlantic Coast Conference member Wake Forest. The game is scheduled for 7:30 at Wake Forest Memorial Gym in Winston-Salem, N. C. Call the Wake Forest Athletic Department for ticket information.

The holidays will also bring to excellent teams into Trask Coliseum. On December 27th, UNCW will play host to Niagara University, while on the 30th, NAIA power Atlantic Christian will come to town.

After the holidays, UNCW will host conference rivals William & Mary and Richmond. The Tribe of W & M will enter Trask Jan. 10, while the Spiders of Richmond will be in Wilmington Jan. 12. The Jan. 10 game will be Wilmington Merchants Association Night. Gifts and prizes will be given away to the fans attending the game in appreciation for their support.

The Jan. 12 game with Richmond will be Sprite T-Shirt Night. The first 1,000 people in the door will receive a T-shirt.

The women also have their share of games, starting with Coastal Carolina Dec. 19. After a lengthy break, the Lady Seahawks will face American University Jan. 5 and UNC Asheville Jan. 8 in Trask Coliseum.

Students are admitted free with a valid UNCW student ID.

Rowsum named CAA Player-of-the-Week

From Staff Reports

UNC Wilmington's Brian Rowsum was named Player-of-the-Week in the Colonial Athletic Association Monday after his record-setting performance over the weekend in the Indiana Classic.

The 6-9, 225-pounder from Columbia, N.C., snapped five tournament records as UNC Wilmington nearly upset No. 2 ranked Indiana in the opening round and lost on a last-second shot in the consolation to Southern Illinois.

Rowsum, the tournament's Most Valuable Player, scored 35 and 36 points for total of 71 in the two games and pulled-down 18 and 10 rebounds for 28 caroms in the two-day tournament. He is the only non-Indiana player to win the MVP honor in the event's 13-year history.

Rowsum established new Indiana Classic marks for Most Points in one game (36), Most Field Goals Attempts in one game (32), Most Points in two games (71), Most Field Goals in two games (29), and Most Field Goal Attempts in two games (52). He also tied for Most Field Goals in one game with 15 buckets against the Hoosiers.

The Seahawk senior is already the school's all-time leading rebounder and needs just 57 points to take over the scoring parade. Rowsum has scored 1,450 points in 90 appearances over the last four seasons for the Seahawks.

"Brian represents the best inside player we've seen all year," said Joby Wright, top assistant to legendary coach Bob Knight. "If he continues to play at this level, there is no question that he will be a very high draft choice."

Indiana edged UNCW 73-72 in the opening round game Friday night and sharpshooter Doug Novsek sank a desperation three-pointer at the buzzer to lift Southern Illinois to an 86-85 victory over the Seahawks Saturday in the consolation matchup.

Brian Rowsum receives the most valuable player award for the Indiana Classic. Rowsum broke five tournament records in route to the award.

New library addition now open

Text and photos
by Anne Simpson
and Jefferson Weaver

The long-awaited addition to the William Madison Randall Library at UNCW is now open and ready for use, and Head Librarian Eugene Hugel points out that while improvements are mostly finished, space will be cramped until this summer.

"We will have less space than we did (until May) but we still have as many students to serve," Hugel said.

Only the new part of the library is in use this semester, while the old section is being renovated. A new computerized filing system should be in place by mid-August.

The addition to the library consists of 23,500 square feet of space, and when combined with the west end in June will contain 300,000 volumes spread out over 93,500 square feet.

The old entrance on the west side of the library (facing College Road) is closed until renovation can be finished. The only entrance open to the public to the library is on the east side facing G Street.

The automatic opening doors on G Street will eventually lead into a covered mall joining Morton Hall, the soon-to-be-constructed Cameron School of Business, and the Social Behaviours building to the University Union.

For the first time, the library is fully carpeted. In the old section, only the downstairs floor was covered, the upstairs being tiled.

A skylight near the stairs and a lounge with glass walls bring sunlight into the building, allowing a comfortable atmosphere as well as more light.

The addition to the library has 93,500 square feet, just 23,500 more than the old library, so the library is not as spacious as it will be when both sections are in use sometime next summer.

"Spring semester it will be a little tight, but students will be able to get whatever materials they need," Library Director Eugene Hugel said.

UNCW Chancellor William H. Wagoner described the new library as "Fantastic" and reminisced about the library's old days.

"I remember when the library was in the back of Alderman Hall," Wagoner said. "It had about 30,000 volumes, and many were literally stacked on the floor."

"We moved about 60,000 to the new library," he said, referring to what is now the old section of Randall Library, "and all the help was volunteer labor."

About fifty employees of the William B. Meyer Moving Company moved 300,000 volumes to the library's new section over a six day period beginning Dec. 27 and Jan. 4. The movers, most of whom were UNCW students, were given New Year's Eve day and New Year's Day off.

Daniel resigns Vice-presidency; Pressley may take position

Pressley

Daniel

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

Citing "circumstances beyond my control", K. Allen Daniel has resigned as Student Government Vice-President.

In a letter to the Senate dated Dec. 29, Daniel resigned effective January 5. Daniel is a Criminal Justice major and will be attending basic Criminal Justice classes at Cape Fear Technical College.

State law requires that any person desiring to be a law enforcement officer in North Carolina must complete approximately 370 hours of training in an approved institution.

The 22-year-old former vice-president attended Louisburg college for two years before entering UNCW. Daniel was known for frequently wearing a tuxedo while conducting business at Senate meetings.

Joseph Pressley, senior class president and speaker pro-tempore of the Senate, will fill Daniel's position until a special election can be held.

According to an amendment to the SGA constitution passed by the Senate just before breaking for Christmas, a special election must be held within ten days of the resignation of the president or vice-president of the SGA if the speaker pro tempore declines the position.

As of Jan. 12, Pressley had not officially declined the position of vice-president.

Pressley, 21, has been a member of the Senate for two years and may resign as senior president if he is elected to the position vacated by Daniel.

Police seize shotgun, pyrotechnics in dormitory after fire alarm sounds

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Campus police responded to a false fire alarm Jan. 11, but when they arrived at the scene there was much more to be found.

According to reports, the person who caused the alarm to go off "climbed onto a stool [and] cut the wires in a smoke detector" in suite 201-203 of Hewlett Hall.

"The male student's attempt failed when he disabled the entire system," says Chief Joe Johnson, Director of Public Safety at UNCW, "which triggered the alarm to go off."

While investigating the alarm, officers discovered a 12-gauge shotgun and several pyrotechnics, including smoke bombs, all of which were seized by investigating officers.

Chief Johnson believes the gun to have been in possession of the student for hunting purposes. He pointed out that UNCW Public Safety provides a service for student hunters who live on campus.

Students are allowed to bring firearms to campus police where they are locked up until the student wishes to "check [it] out" for hunting purposes. Then, the student is responsible for returning the firearm to campus police.

The subject was cited for triggering a false fire alarm and possession of a dangerous weapon.

Scoters "rolled"; four cited

Four female UNCW students were cited late Friday night, Jan. 9, for tampering with state property.

Police reports say the subjects wrapped toilet paper around police scooter #4 and around the fence in the campus police station parking lot. According to Chief Johnson, the act was "probably just a prank."

An unknown person reportedly broke into an on-campus apartment Jan. 6. The victim reported the theft of a Led Zeppelin flag from one of the apartment's common area walls.

Driver cited

One citation was issued Jan. 5 for failure to use a seat belt while operating a motor vehicle.

Between Jan. 1 and Jan. 12, 143 parking tickets were issued.

Student killed in tragic crash over semester break

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Tammy Lynn North, a 20-year-old UNCW sophomore, was killed on Dec. 19, 1986, when the Chevrolet Chevette she was driving collided with a Neagle truck that was carrying a crane and welding equipment.

The Neagle truck then collided with another truck carrying furniture. Both trucks burst into flame.

Onslow County Memorial Hospital authorities pronounced Ms. North dead upon arrival.

Ms. North, a native of Richlands, North Carolina, worked in the office of Vice-Chancellor William A. Bryan, while attending classes at UNCW.

A memorial book will be placed down stairs in the lobby of the University Union for all those who wish to sign it.

He said the physical transportation of the books, which will cost approximately $100,000 when finished in May or early June, had been done on paper months before.

"We worked it all out (on paper) some time before moving the first book or file cabinet," he said in an interview Jan. 5.

When the renovation of the original library is finished, the moving process will be repeated. All volumes will be spread out and placed in permanent locations, except for government documents which are in their permanent location now, according to Documents Librarian Arlene Hannerfeld.

Hannerfeld stressed the need for student cooperation and understanding through the Spring semester.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Yankee, go home!

The middle aged couple in the checkout line were talking loud enough to draw attention to themselves, but they didn't seem to care.

"Everywhere you go, there are lines. Is that all these Southerners do, raise children?" They were from New York City.

"This is the sunny South? If I wanted cold I would have stayed home." Her husband nodded.

"And none of them can drive either. That kid about ran us over in the parking lot."

"And they just don't have any selection in the stores..."

And on and on.

This conversation was overheard when two of the editors had the dangerous assignment of going to a local grocery store during the Christmas holidays.

The couple berated the South for a solid half hour, loudly voicing their opinions on everything from the cars we drive to our supposed lack of education. (According to an Associated Press survey, New York City has one of the highest illiteracy rates per ten thousand people in the United States. Atlanta and Charlotte were in the top forty on the other end of the scale.)

All through our first summer in Wilmington and Wrightsville Beach, we met only one New Yorker family that said anything positive about this area. They planned to enroll all three of their daughters in school here this fall, and they planned to make a permanent move to Wilmington.

They said they loved the area.

Seems folks from up North have never really liked it here from as far back as the Great War of Northern Aggression. In a letter to his family back home in Pennsylvania, a sailor onboard a ship blockading Wilmington's port called the Cape Fear the "Miserablest, stinkiest place on earth."

And they talk about our lack of education?

Just one question for all those good folks from the other side of the Mason-Dixon line.

If you hate it so much down here, why don't you go home?

York Vs. Winchester

Remember the stink some time back about the Sergeant York Anti-Aircraft System?

To refresh your memory, this device was supposed to be the ultimate in plane-shooter-downers, and it would keep away the bad guy's jets.

Well it wasn't — it broke down, jammed at critical moments, was hard to operate, and unless the operator was an expert marksman who had said his prayers recently, it couldn't hit a thing.

Maybe the people who build the Sergeant Yorks and other such things should take a lesson from what happened to that ill-fated flight from Wilmington to Raleigh on New Year's Eve.

The person who shot at the aircraft took aim on a two-hundred mile an hour aircraft that was over five hundred feet high and hit the dam thing — using a rifle that was developed almost a hundred years ago for defending the homestead (from Indians and other bad guys who only had horses — no fighter-bombers.)

The 30-30 Winchester rifle the suspect allegedly used against the American Airlines flight cost roughly $200 in your local sporting goods store. A box of ammunition cost about $10.

The total is less than what it cost to fire the Sergeant York once, according to Time magazine.

And the rifleman hit his target.

Aides should have pushed harder sooner

By Richard Viguerie
Sindicated Columnist

WASHINGTON, VIRGINIA - "Ronald Reagan's advisors are kicking themselves as they survey wreckage of the election," reported U.S. News and World Report. "A post-mortem convinced conservative aides they should have pushed the President sooner and harder to 'nationalize' the campaign by linking election of Republicans to his programs. Voters responded to the pitch, officials said, but the drive started too late to avoid loss of the Senate."

In fact, conservatives both in and out of the White House spent months trying to convince GOP leaders to campaign on national issues, to no avail. But the moderates, the self-styled "pragmatists" in the Republican Party, won the argument about strategy... and lost the November election.

The same moderates, you will recall, proclaimed loudly throughout the 1970's that the nomination of "extremist, far-right" Ronald Reagan would destroy the party. Reagan's "simplistic thinking" was "far out of the centrist mainstream" of the party, said Senator Charles Percy (R-Illinois). Likewise, the moderates ridiculed Reaganite policies such as supply-side ("voodoo") economics and the Strategic Defense Initiative ("Star Wars") until long after those ideas proved successful.

In the 1986 election, they designed a Republican campaign that was devoid of ideas. As I wrote last May, "the GOP has developed no national theme this year...The Democrats still seem intent on raising taxes, surrendering to the Cuban occupation forces in Nicaragua, and preventing the appointment of judges who are tough on crime. Yet the national Republican Party leadership claims it can find no national issues on which to turn the election."

Republican Chairman Frankahrenkopf explained that the party planned no national campaign because "There are no overarching national issues that cut the same everywhere." And there weren't, because the GOP had failed to latch onto an issue, develop a unified party position, and educate the American voter on the importance of the issue and the differences between the two parties. The Panama Canal giveaway, for example, would not have been an issue if Ronald Reagan and the conservatives had not made it an issue.

Conservatives organized rallies, held news conferences, and wrote hundreds of articles (and entire books!) on the Canal issue. They mailed millions of letters. Reagan debated the issue on national television. Months after they lost on the actual treaty vote, conservatives kept the issue alive by forcing roll-call votes on matters relating to the treaties, even in the House of Representatives which had not voted on the treaties themselves. At the time, the moderates made fun of us for doing this.

Then, in 1978 and 1980, 19 pro-treaty Senators were defeated for reelection. Only one anti-treaty Senator was defeated.

The Kemp-Roth tax cut was another issue which conservatives "created" by that process. We determined that the political establishment was pursuing a course contrary to the interests of the people (that is, raising taxes); designed a yes-or-no question based on that issue (Will you vote for the Kemp-Roth tax cut?); and created a national network of activists for whom the issue was a top priority. In the following election, the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee was among the Congressmen defeated largely because of their positions on the tax issue.

The lesson for Republican is clear. When they draw a clear line between themselves and the Democrats, concerning issues on which the GOP is closer to the people, Republicans win. But when they let the Democrats set the agenda, pork-barrel politics dominates the campaign and the undisputed masters of bringin' home the bacon — the Democrats — win.

For a minority party, the issue-avoiding strategy of the moderates usually fails. If that's what they mean by "pragmatism," it's a new variety: pragmatism that doesn't work.

STUDENT FORUM

Parking yet again

Editor,
Here is an answer to the problem of parking at UNCW that nobody thought of. Instead of restricting freshman parking or building more lots, why not teach students something about themselves - that they have the ability to walk. For example, how many times do you see students drive from Campus Edge or the dorms and sit waiting for a parking space, just so they can be right outside their class. This may sound like it's coming from mommy and daddy, but where I went to school in N.J. the parking lot with the only available space was a mile from the rest of campus (and no, the walk wasn't uphill both ways). I suggest that students stop relying on their power steering and power brakes, and park a little farther from their building - you know where the empty lots are.

P. S. And I don't like the Campus Police anymore than you do!

Let us make note that it is not that we don't like the Campus Police — it is just that one of our branches seems a bit overzealous.

Veteran's day is observed here

I'm writing in response to Mr. Gregory Toussaint's letter in the Dec. 10 issue of the Seahawk concerning the state and local government not observing Veteran's Day. I am a state employee and can gladly say that the government does observe this holiday. For most state agencies and schools it is observed on the designated day, November 11. For UNC-W observance is redesignated by the Chancellor for the week of Christmas when there are no students on campus, thus allowing the staff and faculty to better serve the student body and allowing a full week of holidays. Local government redesignates observance to Thanksgiving.

A few of our favorite things..

Dear Editor,

Since attending UNCW, I have come to question many policies this school has. If possible, could you find out what is done, and what should be done to change these policies.

The first question I have is why the Student Health and Wellness Center is not open longer? Does the University feel that we can schedule being sick between 8 and 5 on weekdays and not on weekends? I know of several cases where people have been sick or hurt on weekends in which they have had to go to an emergency room which is costly to their parents. In the student catalog it says there is someone on call but it says nothing of how to get in touch with that person. Could you tell us how?

The second policy I find questionable is the meal plan system. As it is now if a person is on a 15-day meal plan they can eat breakfast, lunch and dinner during the week. However, what happens if that person is not able to eat one of those meals for whatever reason; the meal is gone, which means that's money our parents have spent that was not used. I

The third and final question I have is: Every week you publish so many hundred parking tickets were given out. Where does this money go and purpose is it used for?

Sincerely,
Concerned
Students

Please be patient — the Seahawk plans to answer all the questions we can in the next few issues...

I do want to say that I thought the works of "art" were a joke! Maybe one can stretch it and say the art was "expressive" or "interesting," but let us be realistic.

I feel like sometimes we, as a society, are afraid to say that any art is bad for fear of being considered ignorant or incapable of evaluating talent. These sentiments remind me of the childhood story "The Emperor's New Clothes." It is as if the artists are daring us to question their "creative genius."

Just as the artists have the right to create and display their works, so do we have the right to say, "try again, that's silly."

So, please, all of you aspiring artists out there, so not confuse talent with confrontation. Do not confuse critique with ignorance. Art is the lasting statement our society will leave for the future, please take this responsibility seriously.

Student asks, is it art?

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my opinion of the various works of "art" that were displayed here at UNCW during the fall semester.

Initially, I want to state that I do not condone theft or vandalism in any way, shape, or form.

Randy Hearst would have been proud

Editor's Note: The Seahawk welcomes Montague Britt, a retired newspaper columnist and editor from northern Virginia, to our op-ed page. His editorial commentaries have been published throughout North Carolina and Virginia for almost forty years. His views do not necessarily reflect the opinions of any of the Seahawk newspaper or staff. Dissenting opinions are welcome.

At least now the snarling dogs of journalism have found a scapegoat, handily provided for them by the president-hating Congress and by the man's own testimony, or lack thereof.

Of course, we can only speak of Oliver North, Colonel, United States Marine Corps.

North's decision to take the Fifth Amendment acted as blood thrown on the muzzles of them hungry packs. A group that an older generation would have called "Yellow Journalists", finding themselves frustrated at not being able to tap into North's military records, immediately delved into the use of two old standbys — email and as many as seven unidentified "but highly placed" sources in one news story.

The aforementioned newfolks brought out North's medical records, showing that he had sought counseling for stress after returning from Southeast Asia (never mind the thousands of other Vietnam veterans who also sought help after they got home.) They hinted at possible mental illness ("so, Dr.

Smith, you would not say that Col. North is so mentally deranged that...").

When that didn't work, they alluded mysteriously to his ties with the Central Intelligence Agency and Southern Air Transport, making the latter sound like a group that follows the comic book slogan, "Kill 'em All, Let God Sort 'Em Out."

Randolph Hearst would have been proud.

While we don't support the idea of selling arms to the Iranians, we do wholeheartedly support the efforts of the Contras in Nicaragua.

A brave band of peasants are trying to regain their homeland, a homeland that was taken away from them. Yes, the Somoza Government was one of the cruellest in history, and no, a democratic government as we know it could not succeed in an illiterate land.

And we praise the President for his bravery in trying to help these freedom fighters. By nipping the Communist flower in the bud — in a much less direct fashion than Granada — we can save our grandchildren from having to weed in their backyards.

And all of it falls on a previously little known Marine officer who is remaining true to the motto of the Corps, standing Always Faithful to his commanding officer — the President — in a time when doctors aren't the only ones sticking needles into the Chief Executive.

Semper Fi, Colonel North.

America wakes up to Reagan

Well, it's about time. It seems America has finally awakened to Ronald Reagan, the actor-president, and his dangerous escapades. This time he won't be able to joke or talk his way out of the incident. What I'm referring to is the secret arms deal with the Iranians and the ensuing loss of confidence in the President.

This little adventure has all the trappings of a good James Bond novel: Swiss bank accounts; big names like President Reagan and Vice-President Bush; important agencies like the Defense Department and the Central Intelligence Agency; and most importantly it puts the U.S. against the evil terrorist nation of Iran. Or was that with the evil terrorist nation of Iran? I can't remember. I'm confused.

Libya supports terrorism and we launch an air assault in retaliation. Syria supports terrorism and Great Britain, with our blessings, breaks off diplomatic ties with the evil-doers. Iran supports terrorism and we reward them with extra weapons so they can murder more efficiently.

By M. D. Anthony

To be fair, the weapons we sold to the Iranians were primarily anti-tank weapons, as the President pointed out. He also said he didn't think these weapons could be used in a terrorist context. He apparently didn't think very hard because it's obvious that a shoulder mounted anti-tank missile can destroy whatever it's aimed at. One of these missiles in the hands of an Iranian terrorist could easily be used against a busload of Israelis or a taxing civilian airliner filled with Americans.

Adding more excitement to the adventure is the fact that the profits from the sale were illegally diverted to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. The U.S., via Israel, sold weapons to Iran. The money was then apparently funnelled into Swiss bank accounts and from there into the hands of the Nicaraguan rebels. The U.S. aided Iranian terrorists in order to aid Nicaraguan terrorists (or should that be Nicaraguan freedom fighters?). Is the President confused about who the terrorists are or am I?

Regardless of who is confused, one thing is definite: the American people seem to be waking up to Reagan's charades. When over 200 unarmed American Marines were killed in Lebanon due to ill-conceived strategy and just plain stupid planning, Reagan smiled pretentiously, accepted the blame and all was forgotten. When the best equipped and mightiest armed forces in the world invaded and overwhelmed the ever-menacing island of Granada, the American public rallied around the President as if he had saved the world from certain demise. Reagan's wit and experience in front of the camera always paid off, but now he seems to be slipping.

At his last press conference two weeks ago he seemed defensive and nervous. Could this be the same calm, cool, and ever witty Reagan? Apparently not. A recently released New York Times - CBS News poll reveals that Reagan's overall public approval rating plunged 21 percent, from 67 to 46 percent, in just the last month. Hopefully Americans will continue to look at the situation, realizing that Reagan fouled up, and not let him talk or joke his way out of it. If no, then my only comfort is the knowledge that, at present, the President can't run for a third term.

...so why bother to vote?

A few days after the recent elections, the newspaper reported that only thirty-seven per cent of America's eligible voters had exercised their right to vote. This low turnout is disturbing because it is a far cry from the ideal of democracy held by our Founding Fathers. Theirs was a vision of an informed and responsible citizenry that would choose those who would choose those who would govern them. It was to be a society where men were free to participate in the process of government and where the will of the majority reigned.

The fact that only a third of all eligible citizens voted is bad enough, but there are also millions who have not even bothered to register! Although age, residency, and citizenship requirements are now minimal, millions have disenfranchised themselves by neglecting to register.

Why don't people vote? As I see it, there are probably as many reasons for not voting as there are non-voting. Some of the more obvious, though, include lack of time or transportation, illiteracy, or physical handicaps. These are legitimate impediments, but all of them may be overcome with planning, the help of other concerned citizens, or the use of absentee ballots.

Another deterrent is lack of knowledge. Politically unaware people stay home on election day because they do not know how to vote. Too many people do not even know who their current representatives are or how to contact them. They are uninformed about the candidates' past political histories and can barely state the issues, much less explain how a particular candidate stands on them. These people, if they do vote, often vote a straight ticket or vote the way they are told to vote by a spouse, a friend, or a special-interest group. In their case, regardless of whether they stay home or vote, someone else is deciding for them.

There are still others who have lost faith in the system. Some feel that all politicians are corrupt, so why bother to vote? But they should realize that as Americans, they themselves are free to run as honest contenders for public office. Others feel their vote does not count. But the fact is that every vote counts. Several years ago in a school board election in rural Pender County, two candidates were tied for the same seat. The race was finally decided by the flip of a coin. One more vote would have made the difference! A 1960's song says it best: "If two and two and fifty make a million, we'll see that day come round." People have to work for what they want. Each vote counts and helps produce the people's choice in a democracy.

Regardless of why a person fails to vote, the heart of the problem is apathy, pure and simple. A person will vote if voting is important to him. A person will be an informed participant in the electoral process if responsible citizenship is important to him. I wonder how many television sets have been turned off or switched to a movie channel when a political debate begins. How many times have people steered around the booths of political candidates so they wouldn't have to waste time talking to them? I wonder how many older women are still bound by habit and tradition to leave politics to the menfolk?

died defending the rights of the majority. In modern America, we should perhaps be thankful that we still have the right to be part of the ruling minority by exercising the vote. But I think we can do better.

I believe that our country needs to recapture the Founding Fathers' vision of an informed and responsible citizenry. We have many ways of becoming informed. There are television networks, radio stations, books, magazines, the daily newspapers, and the ever-popular political pamphlet

By Bebe Brewton

I have heard it said that people don't appreciate their freedom until it is threatened. Well, our freedom is being threatened, threatened by the creeping, insidious illness known as apathy.

One of the mainstays of democracy, majority rule, has been replaced by minority rule. True, a majority of voters decides who represents us, but in the recent election it was only a majority of one-third of the electorate. The American Revolution opposed the rule of the many by the few. People fought and as well as opportunities to meet the candidates face to face. What we must encourage is responsible citizenship. That must be taught by example in the home, the school, and the community. Our citizens should be encouraged to read, discuss, and act on the information available, encouraged to embrace the privileges and responsibilities as well as the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. If we can motivate ourselves to do this, then the high ideals of democracy may yet be within our reach.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood
campus minister

Life passes by so swiftly. 1987! And January is half over already! Events that a few years ago kept me totally preoccupied have now become vague memories; conflicts that a few months ago seemed so crucial in my life now seem futile and hardly worth the energy; inner turmoil that rubbed me of my sleep only a few weeks ago has become a strange emotion of the past; thoughts that kept my mind active just last night have lost their power and have been replaced by others.

If January invites reflection, perhaps it would be worthy to reflect on our rapidly shifting sense of priorities and how what seemed so very crucial and significant quickly fades into obscurity and forgetfulness. Why is it that we are tripped by such a sense of urgency and emergency so that every activity, every encounter, and every task stamped with emotionally controlling labels like "crucial", "important", "must not fail". And with such labels comes anxiety, fear, and worry.

I need, I believe we all need to develop a sense of perspective. We are cursed with and driven by a sense of immediacy on the one hand and, on the other, worry about our worth which forces us to always be proving our value by doing, doing, doing. Let me invite you to reflect on your deeper values and goals as you move further into 1984 and become intentional about what you label as urgent and important. For me, my spiritual journey toward God which yields, among many things, a sense of a timeless and eternal love of God, is slowly helping me break free of some of the daily urgencies that leave me so highly scheduled and exhausted. My hope is that both you and I can free ourselves from some of the shoulds, ought to's, and musts of daily life in favor of some deeper connection and commitment that will nourish in us the wellspring of peace.

SOMEWHERE OUT THERE

There used to be no definite evidence that other stars might have planetary systems like are our. But now gases racing around one nearby star and minute particles orbiting another provide the best and strongest evidence yet that other planets are evolving outside our own solar system.

Make no mistake, the is no definitive evidence of another 4.6 billion-year-old planetary system orbiting another star. The study that shows gas orbits HL Tauri in accordance with the laws of planetary rotation is definitive evidence that the process that creates solar systems has begun elsewhere.

A separate study has revealed that fine grains of material orbits the star Beta Pictoris. The Beta Pictoris particles have clumped into larger particles, showing that the planet formation process has started there.

Beta Pictoris represents the strongest evidence yet of a gaint planetary or protoplanetary system accompanying a nearby star.

Protoplanetary disks reflect light and that allows them to be detected. Planets, unfortunately reflect enough light to be detected.

Our solar system may be the only fully-formed planetary system in our part of the galactic neighborhood, but it's nice to think that another 5 billion-year-old solar system with life may be somewhere, out there, waiting for us to discover it. But that other solar system may be further than we think.

Military Science has a challenge for all students

UNCW's Military Science program is one of the fastest growing in the UNC system — and one of the fastest growing departments on campus.

Many students do not realize that scholarships offered by the Dept. of Military Science often go unused, simply because no one applies for them.

MLS students faced many challenges in 1986, and not all of them were purely academic.

Their experiences included winter training in Alaska, whitewater rafting on the Nantahala river, and the annual military ball which exposed the cadets to one of the most difficult challenges of all — the formal social function.

UNCW cadets also led high school students through field exercises in the woods behind campus and took to the same woods to battle enemy "raiders" in preparation for Advanced Camp in the summer.

Students took the challenge and learned to rappell out of buildings (which had perfectly good stairs), and finally tested all their skills in Alaska.

1987 promises to be as busy if not more so.

A ski trip, sailing trip, and yet another military ball are planned as well as two field exercises. You don't have to be in the ROTC to enjoy the adventure. Just call 395-3734 for more details.

CAA off to solid start

For a conference that was predicted to be a one-team conference, the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) has had a very solid start, competitive with any league in the country.

The CAA was expected to be the "Navy and the seven little dwarfs" conference, but that has not panned out.

Navy, currently 8-3 overall and 3-1 in the CAA, has had some big wins and some let downs. The Midshipman suffered a disappointing setback in their opener against N.C. State 86-84, but reeled off five straight wins, including a 91-90 overtime win at Michigan State in the Spartan's Cutlass Classic. Their biggest letdown was over Christmas when the lost in the finals of the UNLV Runnin' Rebel Classic to the host and top-ranked team in the country, 104-79. Foul trouble that All-American David Robinson got into hurt the Middies chances at pulling the upset.

Another team making some surprising noises is James Madison. The Dukes are currently 10-2 and 1-1 in the CAA. This start is the best in the school's history and includes a couple of impressive triumphs.

The biggest triumph was the Duke's capturing the Richmond Times-Dispatch Invitational. JMU dispatched of Virginia Commonwealth 90-74 in the first round and Virginia Tech in the finals, 84-70.

Another big win for second year Head Coach John Thurston's troops was a come from behind 80-77 win at George Mason led by sophomore Kennard Winchester and senior Eric Brent.

UNC Wilmington is also off to a solid start. After playing one of the tougher schedules in the league, UNCW, led by Brian Rowsom, Sandy Anderson, and Greg Bender, have played some of the most heartbreaking games. These include a 73-72 loss to 2nd-ranked Indiana at Bloomington when a UNCW shot failed to fall at the buzzer. The Seahawks lost another close one the next night 86-85 to Southern Illinois when a prayer fell for the Seahawks at the buzzer. The fortunes of UNCW were even worse on the holidays when they dropped a 57-56 decision to Wake Forest on a Mark Cline buzzer-beater.

Despite the setbacks, Head Coach Robert McPherson has UNCW playing some of the best basketball in the conference as they are currently 6-6 and 2-1 in the conference.

The rest of the conference is also holding its own and has turned some heads.

George Mason, 8-6, and 1-1 in the CAA, have been very streaky, losing to some good teams (West Virginia, Villanova, Virginia, and James Madison) while losing to some weaker ones (San Francisco and Virginia Commonwealth). The Patriot's biggest win was their 70-67 victory over a very strong New Orleans University team in the Virginia Investor's Classic.

Richmond, East Carolina, and American have also showed some brilliance.

Richmond has two victories over nationally ranked teams. The Spiders, 6-6 and 2-1, beat then 6th-ranked Georgia Tech 67-62 in overtime and 15th-ranked Navy at the Academy last Thursday 64-62 when David Robinson missed two free throws in the final 10 seconds to tie the score.

American, 5-5 and 1-2, has played well, but hasn't been able to put their opponents away, losing big leads to East Carolina and UNCW before winning the ECU contest by two, 69-67 and losing to the Seahawks 90-83 in OT. The Eagles also pushed then 8th-ranked Georgetown to the limit before bowing out 62-59 on a three-pointer at the buzzer.

The Pirates of East Carolina, 8-5 overall and 1-2 in the conference, sport big wins over South Carolina (67-57) and then 19th-ranked Northeastern (74-70).

As far as the other conference member, William & Mary (3-8, 0-2), the Tribe has lost four games by three points or less, including games to Old Dominion, Miami of Ohio, Drexel, and Richmond.

The conference race, seems to be boiling down to a three or four team race, with pre-season favorite Navy, along with UNC Wilmington and George Mason all fighting for the top spot. James Madison may also make waves, while East Carolina, American and Richmond all will play the role of spoilers as there seems to be alot of parity in the league, despite the weakness of William & Mary.

The parity can be seen in the Richmond defeat of Navy, William & Mary's near win over Richmond, UNC Wilmington's overtime triumph against American, while American squeaked by East Carolina just five days before East Carolina dropped Richmond; and JMU's comeback win at George Mason.

All off this adds up to an equation that league officials must really be enjoying, a very competitive conference that no one will run off with.

If Navy can light a spark under Robinson as they did when the Top Gun scored 45 points and grabbed 21 rebounds in a come from behind 26-point win at James Madison (he had been held to 12 points in a 72-58 win over UNCW and a season-low eight points in the Richmond loss.). The Middies are going to have to rely on Robinson if they are to win consistently, which makes them very vulnerable.

UNC Wilmington on the other hand must get their shooting going to stay at the top. They were last in the conference in shooting percentage at 43.6% before breaking out in big fashion in their 82-55 win over William & Mary with a 54% effort, including a 75% in the second half.

James Madison may be showing some signs of weakness after their fast start, but they are a team that cannot be underestimated. Richmond is not as strong as they appear, but look for Head Coach Dick Terrant to have them playing their best at tournament time.

East Carolina, sporting the league's only other seven-footer in Leon Bass, must get some consistent guard play if they are to challenge. JUCO transfer Howard Brown has played out of control and Keith Sledge must regain the hot shooting touch he had in the early going.

American will also be in the thick of things, but a reliance on outside shooting and a weak front court will doom the Eagles in the stretch.

UNCW coasts to top of CAA

by Matt Shanklin

UNCW Wilmington reeled off 17 unanswered points midway through the first period and coasted to a 84-63 Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) victory over visiting University of Richmond Monday night at Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks raised their CAA record to 3-1 overall and evened their total mark at 6-6 before the largest home crowd this season, 4,840.

UNCW fell behind early and trailed the Spiders 13-9 with 10:45 left in the opening period. However, senior guard Mark Gary ignited a UNCW comeback with a three-pointer and the Seahawks swept to a 30-13 advantage with 4:08 remaining before intermission.

The Seahawks finished strong and took a 37-20 lead into halftime. Senior center Brian Rowsom led all scorers and rebounders in the contest with 23 points and 16 rebounds. The Columbia, N.C., native also turned in three blocks and one steal.

Gary also poured in a career-high 22 points for UNCW Wilmington, including 4-of-6 from three-point range. Sandy Anderson of Chapel Hill, N.C., collected 17 points for the Seahawks.

Reserve Mike Winicki was the lone Spider in double figures with 16 points. He also paced Richmond with seven rebounds.

Saturday, UNCW trounced William & Mary 82-55, for the Seahawks' biggest win of the season.

Playing in front of the largest crowd of the year, the Seahawks used their superior speed and quickness, as well as some hot shooting to scalp the Indians.

The big key for the Hawks was the play of Brian Rowsom, Sandy Anderson, and the bench which scored 34 points, led by Mark Gary's career-high 20 points. Gary also led the team in assists with seven.

UNCW, which entered the game last in the conference in field goal shooting percentage at 43%, shot a season-high 54% from the field, including 75% in the second half. The Seahawks were also 9-of-12 from three-point range for a very hot 69%. Mark Gary led all shooters from three-point land with a 5-for-6 performance.

The Seahawks opened slowly, shooting 39% from the floor, but maintained the offensive boards and forced six turnovers. Combine this with eight Tribe missed free throws, and UNCW had everything going their way.

UNCW opened a quick 10 point lead when Mark Gary hit his first three-pointer of the night at the 9:57 mark of the first half. The Seahawks then went out to their biggest lead of the half at 17 when Gary scored on a breakaway layup at the 5:41 mark. The Seahawks held a similar 17 point lead at 3:14 when Rob Wagner, starting in place of injured guard Adam Porter, hit a three pointer at the 3:29 mark of the first half.

But the Hawks, who used all 12 players in the half, went a slight bit cold for the last few minutes and William & Mary closed to margin to 34-20 at intermission.

In the second half, the UNCW faithful were treated to an offensive display that could have brought the rafters down.

After William & Mary closed the margin to 10 at 36-26, UNCW roared into high gear with a 24-5 run, led by Brian Rowsom three point play inside, two Sandy Anderson three-pointers, and three Mark Gary three-pointers.

UNCW extended its lead to 30 on a Sandy Anderson layup at the 7:58 mark, then was able to take its largest lead of 33 when Ben Pittman scored on a jumper in the paint. Pittman also ignited the crowd with a slam at the 3:22 mark that had given UNCW a 31-point lead.

Brian Rowsom lead all scorers with 22 points, while Gary contributed 20, and Anderson 12. Greg Bender led all rebounders with nine caroms.

UNCW next plays tonight at Coastal Carolina, then travels to Greenville, North Carolina to take on rival East Carolina Saturday. Both games begin at 7:30.

Lady Seahawks continue roll

Saturday night the Lady Seahawks basketball team got their first conference victory of the season. UNCW defeated the College of William & Mary 94-68.

Junior Elizabeth Bell scored a game-high 24 points. The inside play of Bell, Sharon McDowell (19 pts.) and Wanda Carroll (23 pts.) was the apparent difference in the game. Johnnie Smith also added 11 points.

Sissy Morse added eight points but more importantly she finished the game with a career-high 10 assists. Sharon McDowell led the Lady Seahawks with 10 rebounds.

Karen Jordan led the Lady Indians with 17 points. Beth May and Debbie Wade scored an additional 14 and 12 points respectively. Beth Hairfield led all rebounders with 11 caroms, while adding six points.

UNCW evened up their Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) record at 1-1 and raised their overall record to 8-1. William & Mary fell to 3-8 overall and 1-1 in the conference.

UNCW returned to action against the Lady Spiders of Richmond, Monday in Richmond, and will play host to another CAA foe, East Carolina Saturday night at 7:00. Monday and Tuesday, the Lady Seahawks will go on the road again to face Furman and UNC Asheville. The Lady Seahawks have won both their previous matchups this season with Furman and UNCA.

Porter to be lost for the year

Adam Porter, a 6-1 sophomore point guard from Columbus, Ohio, will miss the rest of the 1986-87 basketball season with a severely torn anterior cruciate ligament.

Porter, who was averaging 6.1 points, 1.9 rebounds and 3.3 assists per contest, was operated on Friday by team physician Dr. James Hundley.

Porter is in his first year here at UNCW after transferring from Bennett Junior College in Kentucky where he was Kentucky JUCO Player-of-the-Year.

Because he had played in more than 20% of this seasons games, Porter does qualify as a medical redshirt and will lose this year's eligibility.

Swimmers fall to ODU

Hosier wins three events while Mucci and Mills shine for Lady Seahawks

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

UNC Wilmington swimmers lost two meets to Old Dominion University in action here Saturday. The men were defeated 116-99, while the Lady Seahawks dropped a 131-71 decision.

UNCW was led by junior Don Hosier won three events - 200 individual medley, 200 butterfly, and 500 freestyle. Other winners for the men were Eric Pundock in the one-meter diving event and Kurt Candler in the three-meter event.

The women were led by a strong performance from freshman Mari Mucci, Mary Beth Mills, and Lauras Spanjer. Mucci, a native of Rocky Mount, North Carolina, won the 1000 freestyle and finished a strong second in the 200 butterfly.

Mills won both events she competed in, capturing both the one-meter and three-meter diving events and coming within .05 points of qualifying for the Eastern Regionals, while Spanjer won the 200 backstroke.

"She has been diving exceptionally well off the one-meter board," said Diving Coach Marc Ellington. "And she gains more and more experience every time out on the three-meter board."

The key to the men's loss was their weakness in the sprint events. UNCW was swept in all three freestyle sprint events, 50, 100, and 200 freestyle.

"The lack of sprinters really hurt us," said Ellington. "Other than those events, we swam very well."

On the women's side, depth and numbers were the key as the Lady Hawks didn't have the people to compete in every event.

"Depth really hurts us on the women's side," said Ellington. "We just don't have the sufficient numbers."

"We are coming off a winter strength program at Emory University," said Ellington. "And keeping that in mind, we swam well."

UNCW's men are now 4-3, and 2-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA), while the women are 2-6 and 0-3 in the conference.

UNCW's next meet will be Saturday at East Carolina in a CAA matchup. The Seahawks return home on Jan. 24 to take on Furman University in a non-conference meet that begins at 1:00 p.m.

UNC Wilmington has signed an agreement with Al Watkins Productions to televise the remaining home games on the 1986-87 basketball schedule and Home Team Sports is adding another Seahawk game to its already announced slate.

The cable agreement has UNCW's games shown on a tape delay basis, providing next-day coverage at 7 p.m. The games will appear locally on cable channel 3 on the Al Watkins Programming Network.

"UNCW is one of the hottest sports products in town right now," said Watkins. "We're tickled to death with the affiliation. I've always believed in hometown programming."

The first game televised by AWPN was UNCW's Dec. 30 contest against Atlantic Christian.

AWPN has tentative plans to televise several road games. They have already televised the Jan. 3 game at Navy and have plans to televise the games at Coastal Carolina (Wednesday), East Carolina (Jan. 17), and Campbell (Feb. 18).

Meanwhile, Home Team Sports, the official network of the Colonial Athletic Association, has announced the addition of the UNC Wilmington-East Carolina game from Trask Coliseum on Feb. 14 to its original package.

As a result, the Seahawks will appear on Home Team Sports a record three times this season. The first was Jan. 5 against American University from Fairfax, Virginia, with the other contest being the Jan. 26 matchup with George Mason in Fairfax.

Home Team Sports is not available in the Wilmington area, but Vision Cable of Wilmington did show the Jan. 5 HTS broadcast of the UNCW-American game. According to one of their customer service representatives, Vision Cable is in the process of deciding whether or not to carry HTS. The decision will be based on customer interest and response.

With the addition of the HTS game and the cable package, the Seahawks will benefit from the most extensive television coverage in the school's history.

Complimentary passes were widely misused

Courtesy of the NCAA News

Student-athletes from almost half the member institutions that sponsor Division I-A or I-AA football programs were involved in violations of NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(3) as it relates to complimentary football passes during the 1985-86 as it relates to complimentary football passes during the 1985-86 academic year, according to information supplied to the Association's legislative services department.

Approximately 95 percent of the institutions required (by the NCAA Council Subcommittee on Eligibility Appeals to take part in a survey) on the issue had submitted complete information to the legislative services department as of mid-December. Almost half of those respondents indicated that at least one member of their football teams received complimentary passes in violation of Constitution 3-1-(g)-(3) (page 13, 1986-87 NCAA Manual), which states in part that "complimentary admission shall be provided only by a pass list for family members, relatives and fellow students designated by the student-athlete."

An average of 14.3 student-athletes per institution reporting violations were involved, and an average of six violations were committed. Almost 1,400 student-athletes were subject to revocation of part or all of their complimentary-pass privileges as a result of this report.

The subcommittee earlier had indicated its wish to substitute the revocation of pass-list privileges for individual ineligibility for one game or more," said L. Douglas Johnson, director of legislative services, who coordinated the compilation of the reports for the Council subcommittee.

Johnson said the report indicated the pervasive nature of the pass-list problem, and he said the subcommittee indicated that member institutions should shoulder as much if not more of the blame for the problem as those student-athletes involved.

"After reviewing the material submitted in the reports, the subcommittee concluded that much of the problem centered on institutions' lack of appropriate education," Johnson said. "They did not make the provisions of the legislation clear to those student-athletes involved."

"However, the completion of certification of compliance and student-athlete information forms implies that administrators, coaches and student-athletes are aware of and understand all NCAA legislation. For that reason, the subcommittee deemed that some action was necessary for each violation of the constitution."

"The suspension of pass-list privileges serves that purpose while recognizing that at least some of these violations were inadvertent in nature."

Since Proposal Nos. 98 through 101 deal with the awarding of complimentary passes to student-athletes, some change in Constitution 3-1-(g)-(3) may occur as a result of action at the 1987 Convention.

Navy game a sellout

Students tickets to be distributed early

The UNC Wilmington-Navy game, Saturday Jan. 31 is a complete sellout according to UNCW athletic department officials.

The game, only the second sellout in the 10 year history of the Trask Coliseum, will be one of the biggest events on the UNCW campus in recent years.

According to Jim Bass, Associate Athletic Director, the athletic department is holding back 1400 tickets for students. These will be available on a first come first serve basis to UNCW students with a valid student I.D. the week of the game. Only one ticket will be issued per valid I.D. and only one ticket per person.

Students can come by the athletic department ticket window inside Trask Coliseum with their valid I.D. and pick up their ticket on the following days:

Tuesday Jan. 27 from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Wednesday Jan. 28 from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

As mentioned before, there will be 1400 student tickets available on a first come first serve basis.

The previous sellout was the opening night of Trask Coliseum Nov 26, 1977.

Paterno lets players determine how good his teams are

by Hal Bock
Associated Press

Linebacker Jack Ham, Penn State 70, Pittsburgh Steelers '82, was visiting his old campus last summer when he happened upon the football team's new weight room. He was suitably impressed.

"Hey, what's this?" he said to coach Joe Paterno. "You never made us lift weights."

That was then. This is now. "I told him," Paterno said, "Today, you can't win if you don't. The other guy is doing it."

So the weight room is there at State College, available for those who want to bench press a few pounds in between classes. Paterno's creed is simple. "If you want to be good, it's up to you. If you don't want to, that's fine."

The choice, he said, belongs to the players and the team. Paterno often quotes his old coach and ex-boss, Rip Engle. "He used to say, 'It's not our team. It's their team.'"

"I'm here to make them as good as they want to be."

That has been pretty good over Paterno's 21 years as Penn State's head coach, good enough for him to be one victory away from 200 for his career, good enough for him to have produced six regular-season teams that have gone undefeated and four in the last nine years that have played for the mythical Division I-A national championship.

And good enough to make Paterno Sports Illustrated's Sportsman of the Year, only the second coach and the second college football personality to win the award since it was introduced in 1954. Oregon State quarterback Terry Baker was the 1962 choice, and UCLA basketball coach John Wooden shared in the 1972 award with tennis player Billie Jean King.

Paterno is the Don Quixote of his profession, railing the windmills of college sports.

"The game itself is better than ever, with better athletes and better coaching," he said. "You can't outcoach anybody anymore. But the thing going on around it disturbs me. We've paid a terrible price to have it."

The price, Paterno said, is cheating. Not the type performed by a booster slipping $20 to some poor kid so he can pick up the pizza check. That's minor league. The cheating that disturbs Paterno is the kind that deprives the student-athlete of his most important benefit - a total education.

The demands of college football can be draining for the players. Often, there is no time to taste the rest of college life. That explains why Paterno would like to see the freshman-eligibility rule evoked, "to give them a year to grow, academically and socially."

Instead, the blue-chip recruit is thrust into varsity games with no concern for the transition from high school to college. Often, he plays a game for his school before he attends a class. It is a system that Paterno does not endorse. "I struggle with it," he said. "I try to push them back into the mainstream of college life."

That means membership in the chemistry club, if the nose guard feels so inclined. It also means Paterno, once opposed to the NCAA's redshirt plan that permits a fifth year of eligibility, now is a staunch supporter of that system.

That is why 15 of the Penn State players who went against Miami (Florida) in the Fiesta Bowl January 2 are students who could have graduated last spring. And it is why that group was excused from spring practice, an innovation that borders on coaching heresy. Why, Paterno was asked, would he excuse 15 players from spring practice?

"Because," he said, "I wanted to give them a chance to look at girls and play tennis and enjoy themselves."

"I try to keep the priorities straight. You've got to get an education. That's number one. Number two is a chance to be the best football team they can be and they want to be."

So, take spring practice off. But if you care to do a little weightlifting, here they are. Go to it.

CAA Talk

George Mason should be there at the wire, but their inconsistency may prove fatal. Despite this, the Patriots are one of the better teams in the CAA.

Finally there is William & Mary. It may be the last year for Coach Barry Parkhill who will not see his rebuilding program bear fruit. The lack of a consistent scorer is the key, but if any of the Colonial's other teams take them too lightly, the Tribe may come up and ambush them.

If parity is the key word, then good basketball in the outcome. The Colonial Athletic Association may not be as strong as last year, but overall the conference is improved from top-to-bottom. It may boil down to one or two games to decide the league crown, but the only certainty is that Navy should be there at the end. It is just a matter of who the other team will be that perks its head and believes it can take on the U.S. Naval Academy and beat them when it counts. It might be George Mason or it may be James Madison. It most likely could be UNC Wilmington, but then there are too many teams that could find the right chemistry to win the conference and advance to the NCAA tourney. The next four weeks will tell us who are the contenders and the pretenders.

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

Diver Mary Beth Mills has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week by the staff of the Seahawk sports department.

Mills, a freshman from Fanwood, New Jersey, won both the one-meter and three-meter diving events in the Lady Seahawks meet with the Monarchs of Old Dominion.

Mills scored 198.75 in the three-meter event and 224.95 in the one-meter event. Mills one-meter score was just .05 points short of qualifying her for the Eastern regionals to be held at Brown University in March.

The Lady Seahawks lost the meet 131-71.

Montage has something for everybody

BY TAMARA DREW

An array of exciting events are scheduled for the January 19-26th Montage Celebration. Formerly the St. Thomas Festival of the Arts, Montage is an annual arts celebration sponsored by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear.

Scheduled are headline appearances by the Vienna Boys Choir (Jan 21), the N.C. Dance Theater performing "Coppelia" (Jan 24), The Appalachian Puppet Theatre, renowned drummer Buddy Rich and his infamous big band (Jan 25), and the N.C. Symphony (Jan 26).

On Jan. 22, there will be a guest appearance by Robert Pascal Burns, head of the architecture department at N.C. State University, who will present a slide show and lecture on "Houses of Justice: American Courthouses". His lecture will coincide with a Historic Wilmington Foundation exhibition at the de Rosset House downtown.

On Jan. 23, Katharina Wolpe, a visiting professor at UNC-W, will appear in a classical piano recital. Authors Lee Smith and J.W. Rivers will present an author's reading at St. John's Museum of Art on Jan. 24.

The Carolina Folk Theater, which includes area storytellers John Golden, Joyce Greer, Lloyd Wilson, and Kenyetta Wilson, will also appear with The Appalachian Puppet Theatre. Cinema VI will house the Cinema VI Film Festival during the first few days of the festivities.

All in all, Montage Celebration promises to be an enjoyable series of events. Individuals interested in obtaining more information about tickets and patronships should contact the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear at 763-2787.

AN EXPERIENCE IN WELL-BEING plus
A SAILING CRUISE

THROUGH THE BAHAMAS

A unique opportunity for personal growth and a lot of fun is available to you February 28-March 8, 1987. During a week-long cruise aboard the Shark IX, a 55' ketch rigged sailboat, a group of persons commit themselves to use the experiences generated by living together in this new environment for personal awareness and growth toward well-being.

The sailing is mainly in the Berry Islands of the Bahamas which are a group of basically uninhabited islands abounding in palm trees, white sand beaches and clear blue-green water. Under the guidance of an experienced captain, the participants crew the boat and learn basic sailing navigation by compass during daylight and nighttime.

Planned and led by Bob Haywood of United Christian Campus Ministry at UNCW, who has led this experience for the last fifteen years, and Deborah Haywood, coordinator, Health promoter at UNCW; this opportunity is being offered to UNCW students at a cost of $350 for the week plus transportation to Miami. Those who choose to carpool may expect the cost to be about $50-$60 each.

If interested, fill out the application below and return it to Bob Haywood as soon as possible. Call (919) 799-1160 or mail the attached slip to United Christian Campus Ministry, 610 S. College Road, Wilmington, NC 28403. A deposit of $25 will hold a place for you (refundable through January 19, 1987). As soon as enough applications have been received, a meeting will be held to give details and make plans.

As a convenience to UNCW students, The Seahawk is publishing a tentative schedule of classes for Summer School 1987, sessions I and II. This schedule is subject to change. The 1987 summer school catalogue is tentatively scheduled to be distributed the early part of February 1987.

Bad habits are hard to break

Welcome Back from the staff of the Student Health and Wellness Center!

Last year's health habits may seem deeply ingrained, but if they threaten your health, it's time to make some changes. Start the New Year by targeting the risk areas in your life.

-EATING HABITS- Research shows that the traditional American diet, high in fat, sugar, salt, and calories and low in fiber and other nutrients - is a major cause of illness.

-EXERCISE AND FITNESS- Regular aerobic exercise - combined with stretching to prevent injury - makes your heart healthier, keeps you trim, helps fight high blood cholesterol and reduces stress.

-SUBSTANCE ABUSE- Try functioning without (or at least limiting) the unnecessary use of chemicals. Abuse of alcohol and other drugs contributes to fatal crashes and serious illness in the abuser.

-CIGARETTE SMOKING- Just a few of the risks are heart disease, stroke, emphysema, etc., etc.

-STRESS CONTROL- Bottled up stress can cause or worsen headaches, back pain, depression, high blood pressure, heart disease, insomnia, and drug abuse.

-SAFETY- Don't forget the seatbelt!

The Student Health and Wellness Center offers help in the following areas: 1) Smoking Cessation, 2) Nutritional Assessments, 3) Weight Control.

Call the office of Health Promotion/Deborah Hayward 395-3280 for more information.

Timberlake, Nye featured at Poplar Grove

For the next couple of months Poplar Grove Historic Plantation will be home to the works of North Carolina's Bob Timberlake and Frank Nye. It's hard to imagine two more divergent styles-yet they work together to add to the interest and antebellum charm of the Plantation's Manor House and its growing Cultural Arts Center. Timberlake has made the commonplace, homey objects we grew up with beautiful. Through a loving realism, he shows us what we were-and are, in a rich new light, warming our eyes and hearts with his deft brush strokes and color treatment. His work will be available for viewing at the Manor House Restaurant from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Sunday and from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. For more information call 686-9503.

Nye, on the other hand, makes us work to see as he sees. Bold splashes of color, light and shadow work behind our eyes to depict in the mind's eye that which he sees. His abstractions are carried over into five pieces of sculpture, also on display. Again, his use of form and texture, in metal as well as wood, succeed in intriguing and teasing the mind. You will find his work on display in the Cultural Arts Center (Barn-upstairs) Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. and weekends by special request at the Country Store. For more information call 686-4868 or 686-9989.

Private companies take over public colleges

NASHVILLE, TN. (CPS) -- Just as private companies have taken over public hospitals and even prisons, a new one in Nashville is hoping to "take over" some colleges.

"We think that there's a place for a private company to manage education programs just like Hospital Corporation of America has done for hospitals and Corrections Corporation has done for jails," says Roy Nicks, head of the Education Corporation of America (ECA).

Nicks, who headed Tennessee's state board of regents for 10 years, says his company often can do a better job managing certain parts of a campus -- janitorial services and maintenance operations are his favorite examples -- than educators themselves can.

For anywhere from $995 to $12,990 a year, ECA will manage a college's janitorial services, preventative maintenance programs, work order systems, painting and other tasks, says ECA spokesman Jeff Jones.

"School and industry tend to do a lousy job of managing their physical plants," Nicks says. "That's because most of the people who do the work are at the low end of the salary scale."

Keeping campuses up physically has indeed become a major crisis for some campuses. Colleges, trying to cope with inflation in the seventies and then federal funding cutbacks in the eighties, often have deferred maintenance on their structures and equipment.

Now buildings and equipment have become so bad that colleges can't afford new ones. In 1984, architect Harvey Kaiser, in his book "Crumbling Academe," estimated colleges needed $50 billion to rebuild themselves after years of physical neglect. The White House Science Council concluded in 1985 that colleges needed about $10 billion to renovate themselves.

Two weeks ago, Virginia's Higher Education Council estimated its state colleges need $90 million to replace worn-out buildings and equipment.

Nicks figures ECA can make maintenance cheap enough for colleges to avoid falling into disrepair again.

Colleges, Nicks estimates, can save 10 to 30 percent of their current budgets by letting ECA manage the maintenance instead of doing it themselves.

The savings have gotten the attention of some campuses.

ECA recently won contracts to manage programs at Carson-Newman College, Tennessee Tech, Middle Tennessee State and Walters State Community College, all in Tennessee.

"A lot of colleges use (these programs) for a combination of things -- maintenance, the total management process, to strengthen and upgrade their own management programs -- and they have proved very beneficial," says Wayne Leroy of the Association of Physical Plant Administrators of Universities and Colleges.

But Leroy adds ECA would appeal mostly to smaller colleges.

Larger campuses are more likely to have a "fairly stabilized, tenured work force that's been in place for many years."

"I don't think a management company can be as diversified as we are here," says Alton Leake, the University of Virginia's operations director.

"We have our own cabinet shop, locksmith shop, paint fore, plumbers, plasterers and electricians. It would be very difficult for a private firm to come in (and manage our physical plant), and not as practical."

The company does manage several kinds of academic programs, too, but not yet on a higher education level, Nicks says.

Colleges face budget woes

LOS ANGELES, CA (CPS) —

Students have become less interested in liberal arts, are more vulnerable to job pressures, are probably less liberal but aren't necessarily more conservative than they were 20 years ago, a report released last week by the Higher Education Research Institute (HERI) at UCLA says.

UCLA, along with the American Council on Education, surveys some 200,000 college freshmen a year about their college plans, their social attitudes and their political beliefs.

To mark the 20th anniversary of the surveys, HERI officials issued a report summarizing some of their major finds.

The most obvious change, says HERI's Dr. K.C. Green, is in the majors students choose. There have been sharp drops in the numbers of math, humanities and liberal arts, science, and education majors. Green says the biggest increase has been in business.

"Students are going to college (armed with) job preferences," he says. "For the first time, we're seeing the number of students aiming primarily to be financially well off increasing."

By the same token, Green notes, student interest in developing "a meaningful philosophy of life" is decreasing.

"We're in the materialistic age now. The country is just emerging from the worst economic period since the thirties," he says. "It cut a wide swathe across (the nation). Students are saying 'I don't want this to happen to me.'"

Such "materialism" also keeps showing up in surveys by the Institute for Social Research (ISR) at the University of Michigan, which runs another annual nationwide survey of student attitudes.

"We're seeing similarities (to the UCLA study) in fresman statements on desired and preferred work settings," the ISR's Dr. Gerald Bachman reports. "Students prefer to be employed by large corporations now."

Bachman suspects it's because the job market is "too crowded now. These kids are at the tail end of the Baby Boom, and they are going to suffer the most."

Whatever the reasons, Green thinks "the declining interest in certain majors — like engineering (which has lost about 68,000 students) — doesn't bode well for the nation's future."

"Every major has gone through 'boom/bust' cycles," says Bachman. "When engineering was flooded several years ago, fewer students went in."

Perhaps most surprisingly, Green says the HERI surveys disprove the popular notion that college students are becoming more conservative politically.

While fewer students now call themselves "liberal," about the same number of students call themselves "conservative" today as 20 years ago.

The "real growth" area of the collegiate political spectrum, he says, has been among students who call themselves "middle of the road."

But when asked to take a position on specific issues, even students who label themselves as "conservative" tend to espouse traditionally liberal stances, Green says.

The vast majority of students support abortion rights, want a bigger federal role in social issues and would like to see defense spending cut.

"The students know the issues," he explains. "There is a very clear, very strong student support (base) for typically liberal issues. The only real place we saw a decline was in 'law and order.'"

Increasingly conservative on that point, more students agree that "there is too much concern in the courts for the rights of criminals" than ever before. Similarly, more students support the death penalty than 20 years ago.

Michigan's Bachman notes some other political changes, too. "Democrats had a preponderance (of student loyalty) ten years ago. We've seen some modified shift. There's more balance now between the Republicans and Democrats, but the largest number, by far, is still not committed to either party."

"Students are really not that much different from the rest of the country as a whole," Bachman notes, "and that's true in just about anything."

Liberal arts majors more vulnerable to job pressure

TUCSON, AZ (CPS) — Trying to cope with budget woes, a number of colleges across the country are cutting back the hours during which their campus libraries are open, prompting some of the largest student protests of the year.

Last week, for example, 2,000 students jammed the University of Arizona's Main Library in protest of the library closing at midnight. It used to be open until 2 a.m.

Two weeks ago, 600 students sat in at the Perry-Castaneda Library at the University of Texas at Austin, and then held a candlelight study-in outside the building.

And, trying to defuse student threats to hold similar library sit-ins, University of Wisconsin officials appropriated money to extend library hours, which had been shortened as a belt-tightening measure this fall.

Tom Swan, head of the United States Student Association in Washington, D.C., predicts there'll be more such demonstrations across the country as more colleges, scrambling for ways to save money, cut back library hours.

"The issue is not so much the hours," says Michael Whalen, a senior at UT Austin who heads the student protest group. "The things inside have not been updated."

"It is more important in the long run that books are bound properly, periodicals are kept in order and preserved, and that we are able to order new books."

"We don't want to be incomplete or second rate," he says.

The energy industry slump has left the state about $3 billion short of what it thought it'd have to spend this year, forcing state officials to tell public colleges to cut their budgets.

UT's library was just one campus service to feel the pinch.

"We've been in a hiring freeze since March," says library spokesman John Kupersmith.

"We've had to cancel over 400 journal subscriptions and we're likely to cancel more, and we've reduced our book budget."

"The hours are a short-term effect, but the long-term effects of not buying books and journals is significant."

Arizona students were most upset by the 19-hours-a-week cut in library hours. Their big protest won seven more hours of open stacks a week.

Librarian David Laird, however, warns "only when the budget is restored will we return to regular hours."

Moreover, "when people get into research and finals (hours are) going to be a big deal," says UT Austin's Whalen.

Other libraries have chosen not to cut back hours as a response to budgetary cutbacks.

"We have not cut back service hours, but we have cut services and the level of staffing here," says Barbara Kemp, a librarian at the Washington State University library.

"The amount saved compared to the uproar it causes is not worth it," she says. "But things are definitely resolved more slowly."

Penn, Alabama, experiment with student integration

PHILADELPHIA, PA (CPS)

-- Haltingly and without much success, black and white student groups on a handful of campuses have experimented with integration in recent weeks.

At the University of Pennsylvania here, for example, a white student tried to join the Black Student League until finally being rebuffed last week.

At Alabama, several black greek groups moved to the previously all-white fraternity row, and a black sorority admitted a white pledge. Mississippi's Black Student Union, hoping to improve campus race relations, appointed two white students to its board.

But some whites and blacks on some of the campuses don't believe the experiments are worth doing, or ultimately workable.

"The trend across the country is that one person is accepted (in a fraternity or sorority) for a short period of time, and then they leave or drop out," said University of Alabama President Joab Thomas upon hearing of a white student pledging a black sorority.

At Penn, freshman Sydney Thornbury applied for membership in the Black Student League (BSL) in early September.

BSL leaders initially told Thornbury, who said she wanted to join because she is "sincerely interested" in helping advance black student causes, that they didn't want her.

"Offering (Thornbury) a full membership would have changed our organization," explains BSL spokeswoman Traci Miller. "It wouldn't have been a black students' group any longer."

But after some public controversy, the BSL offered Thornbury an "associate membership." BSL leaders then could not decide just what an "associate member" could or could not do, and Thornbury last week withdrew her application.

"She really only wanted to cause trouble in the ranks," Miller says. "She proved it by backing off when we offered her an associate membership."

Black student groups, of course, began to crop up on campuses in the late sixties, when mostly white colleges first began admitting minority students in large numbers.

The new arrivals complained they felt isolated, out-of-place and ignored at the colleges, which often had to be forced by court orders to admit them.

To promote their special concerns, protect their hard-won gains and, ultimately, to give themselves a social center of gravity, the black students often formed their own groups.

"There's a profound rejection for (black students) in white schools," says Barnard College psychology Prof. Jacqueline Fleming, who wrote a book called "Blacks in College."

She says "students don't expect (the rejection), and it's very painful, so they retreat into black organizations."

But black student unions at Michigan State, Cal-Santa Barbara, Illinois State and Loyola-New Orleans, among others, struggled for members in the early eighties as black students began gravitating toward newly robust minority fraternities for social sustenance.

Minority fraternities and sororities, though, also have stayed to themselves.

At the University of Illinois-Urbana, for example, "only one or two (black) greek organizations choose even to belong to the Interfraternity Council or the Panhellenic," says Bruce Nesbitt, director of the Afro American Cultural Program.

"They choose to have their own identity, but they do interact with non-black greeks on occasion. There is no one campus establishment blacks identify with. Most of their socializing outside of black-only groups is at house parties."

Alabama sociology Prof. Donald Muir, who has been surveying black-white race relations for 20 years, contends social integration on American campuses has proceeded a lot more slowly than classroom integration.

Indeed, many blacks on predominantly white campuses now complain more about vague, social feelings of "discomfort" than overt racism.

At Penn, "black students aren't restricted," Miller reports, "but they don't always feel comfortable. Feeling welcome on campus has been a problem."

At Illinois, blacks are "very aware of racism, but most choose to ignore it or adjust to it."

There are, in fact, plenty of reminders of racism on campus.

Last spring, two Alabama white students burned a cross in front of a house on "sorority row" after a black sorority announced it was relocating there.

At Texas, two whites wearing Ronald Reagan masks tried to push a former Black Student Alliance president through an eighth-story residence hall window.

And at The Citadel last week, five white students accused of dressing in white sheets, yelling obscenities at a black student and burning a paper cross on his floor were suspended for the remainder of the year.

Citadel officials set aside the suspension on the five's promise of good behavior, but the cadets were demoted and must serve "room confinements" for the rest of the year.

"There have been no previous incidents here," claims Citadel spokesman Ben Legare. "This is a military college, and one is looked on for his ability to function as a cadet in a regimented environment. A cadet's attitude is when I put on that uniform, I'm cadet-gray, not black or white."

But the persistence of such incidents at other campuses has convinced many black student leaders they need to keep whites out of their groups, whether they're social fraternities or more political black student unions.

Psychologically, Barnard's Fleming says, students are saying "The rest of the campus rejects us and won't let us in, so why should we let them in?"

"Fraternities and sororities usually are dedicated to social life and center around sex, dating, dancing and such activities," UA's Muir says. "So there's reluctance to desegregate in that area based on the premise of genetics."

"And although there's considerable concern on many white campuses to ease such tensions, there's really not much happening. Worrying about it is a far cry from doing something about it."

N.C. Jazz Festival to open

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The seventh annual North Carolina Jazz Festival will feature the talents of twelve of the top names in mainstream and Dixieland jazz, including bass players Milt Hinton and Phil Flanigan, singer Maxine Sullivan, pianists Eddie Higgins and Keith Ingham, and former Tonight Show drummer Bobby Rosengarden. The all-star lineup features artists who have performed with just about every top name in jazz.

Other jazz greats who will be appearing include clarinetist Kenny Davern, tenor saxophonist Flip Phillips, horn player Ed Polcer, trombonist Tom Artin, guitarist Howard Alden, and drummer Butch Miles.

The Jazz Festival, started out as jazz jams at the old Grey Gables Restaurant during the 1970's, after which local dermatologist Dr. Harry Van Velsor and some of his friends co-ordinated efforts to initiate the festival. Van Velsor has remained a principal organizer of the event, which has now evolved into an annual pilgrimage for jazz fans throughout the country.

All of the renowned musicians who are coming to the Cape Fear area for the musical festival have impressive backgrounds, having toured and performed with some of the greatest names in show business.

Bass player Milt Hinton, known as "The Judge," has been a favorite of the NC Jazz Festival for several years. He spent fifteen years with Cab Calloway and has made numerous appearances with music greats such as Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Artie Shaw, Louis Armstrong, and Duke Ellington.

"The Judge" has also appeared in backup groups for famed singers Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Frank Sinatra, Bing Crosby, and Tony Bennett.

Bassist Phil Flanigan, one of the younger performers, has performed with such great names as Benny Goodman, Lionel Hampton, Maxine Sullivan, Herb Ellis, and more. He toured Europe with Scott Hamilton and Please see Jazz Festival Page 6

Senate helps feed campers

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer

The Senate decided Monday night to ask local pizza makers to donate pizzas for the long line of cold and hungry students waiting for tickets to the Navy game.

As of 8:00 p.m. over 40 pizzas had been pledged.

Among those donating were Prime Time, Dominoes (both the Oleander and College Acres locations), That's Amore, Piezza Hut, Pantera's, and Crusty's.

Senators David King and Louis

Dicello were responsible for the free pizzas. Senator King had suggested that the S.G.A. buy pizzas for the students but said that withdrawing funds from the S.G.A. treasury would have taken too much time.

Senator Dicello proposed the formation of a committee to call the pizza restaurants and ask for donations, and the motion passed unanimously

Senators Dicelio, Greg Berry, Fran Slater, Monika Mohr, Karla Alston, Michael Lee, Lee Barnhill, Jeff Silverman, Joseph M. Pressley Jr., and Kim Tracy volunteered to help drive to the establishments and serve the pizzas.

By 8:00 p.m. Monday night, over 200 students had made camp behind Trask Coliseum to buy UNCW-Navy tickets Tuesday morning. Here are a few keeping warm and having some fun, too. (Photo by Wes Perry)

Mullendore addresses Senate on behavior

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer

Dean of Students Richard Mullendore met with the Student Senate Monday night and delivered a short speech on the subject of a recent editorial in the Wilmington Morning Star.

The editorial discussed the behaviour of UNCW students at the recent East Carolina University basketball game.

Dr. Mullendore said, "Although student behaviour at that game probably wasn't representative of UNCW students as a whole, students should be sure they show their school spirit with class."

Fourth student dies in auto

By Jenni Brown,
Staff Writer

This academic year seems to be a bad one with the tragic deaths of four students, the fourth being Deborah Kay Watts, 21, of Welcome, NC.

Deborah was killed near Asheboro, N.C. in an automobile accident late Sunday night, January 18th, 1987.

Deborah's funeral was held Wednesday, Jan. 21, 1987, at Bethesda United Methodist Church in Davidson County.

Deborah was known as a good student who loved to sing.

"She was a happy person. She had a great voice," said roommate Elena Oliveri. "She was always working. She had a job at Periwinkles in Independence Mall."

Deborah was a junior majoring in Communications.

Wild Times at UNCW

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Writer

Wild Times started out as just a dream for Steve Likens.

It is a 20 page black and white comic book about superheroes Pontiac and Dova and the arch villain Mr. Murder-Pontiac's brother.

The first issue of Wild Times, like most other comics, is purely good guy versus bad guy in theme, but Likens said, "I want to get to do some stories that are a little more meaningful than this first issue was."

All the Wild Times characters are from local areas. Although Pontiac got his name from an old Indian Chief during the Revolutionary War, the names of his characters are usually taken from the names of cars of the 1940's and 1950's.

In the second issue of the black and white comic book, which will be out by mid-March, the characters will be located in Wilmington and Haws Run, near Jacksonville.

The first 50 copies that were originally printed sold out. They went back to press and printed 200 more and approximately 100 of those second printings have been snapped up. The second issue will be distributed in Wilmington, Goldsboro and Jacksonville.

A Jacksonville native, Steve Likens is a hard working 27-year-old Arts Major in his junior year at UNCW.

He began to take his dream seriously during his high school years by cultivating his talent for drawing cartoon figures. "It has taken me a long time to get where I feel comfortable enough to let people look at this," he confided.

Vandalism cited against cars

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Three incidents of personal vehicle damage were reported last week.

A student was victimized by a hit and run Jan. 22, when his car was struck on the passenger door by another vehicle.

The subject in the case is presently unknown.

Another student's vehicle was vandalized Jan. 26 Trim molding was removed from the vehicle while it was located in the parking area on "C" street.

A student was charged in a motor vehicle accident in a parking lot with damage to state property Jan. 25.

Police reports said the subject's vehicle collided with a wooden wall surrounding a trash dumpster in "P" lot.

There was no indication that any of these incidents were related.

Three cases of damage to state property were also reported last week.

In Calloway Hall damage was reported Jan. 20 and Jan. 25. In an unknown subject used a blunt object to break windows on second and third floors of Bell Hall on Jan. 25.

A police investigation charged a female student Jan. 24 as the chief suspect in the theft or several peepholes from Graham Hall.

She apparently unscrewed the peepholes from several suite doors and, in some cases, replacing them backwords.

The suspect was charged with larceny under $400.00.

A male subject was charged Jan. 25 with trespassing when he refused to leave a residence hall after ordered to do so.

The resident director of Bell Hall was forced to call police when the subject would not leave the building.

Greek News

On January 20, the business fraternity Phi Beta Lambda held its first meeting of the spring semester. The meeting was organized with the main purpose of filling spots for the annual State Conference to be held April 3-April 5 in Raleigh.

This annual competition is comprised of thirty-seven Phi Beta Lambda chapters. Each chapter entering an individual, or group, in one or more of the twenty-three areas of interest including Accounting, Economics, Marketing, Management, Computer Concepts, Impromptu Speaking, as well as others.

There are still openings for a number of members who would like to compete. There will be a sign-up at the next meeting scheduled for February 3, in room 112, Bear Hall.

Phi Beta Lambda is always receptive to new members and now is a perfect time to join with the State Conference just three months away.

Millions of Greeks are found on college campuses throughout the United States. What are the roles of sororities and fraternities? This was the question asked of the national headquarters of several Greek organizations.

The responses received were thorough, thoughtful, and articulate. From these replies, eight common reasons for the existence of sororities and fraternities were compiled.

One purpose listed by the national organizations is that of sharing relations. By providing an extended family relationship, membership makes the adjustment to college easier and quicker.

A second purpose of fraternities and sororities is increased loyalty to Alma Mater. The loyalty developed in Greek institution allows both alumni and undergraduates to work together to renew relationships to the organization and the college.

A third purpose of the fraternities and sororities is to provide social activities.

The college fraternity often provides a core social activity on campus, provides the driving spirit behind many extra curricular activities, and gives the institution a sense of spirit. The benefits of the Greek system include sponsoring events for the entire campus.

Greeks do have a purpose

This support system can be found beyond college through collegiate and alumni chapters, national publications and networking programs.

A seventh purpose is to provide guidance for moral and ethical growth.

Anti-social behavior, lack of social discipline and gross social activity under the pretense of boosting college spirit is not tolerated.

Greek members should be committed to helping each other become more humane, competent, responsive, mature, and committed to the development of awareness and understanding of the individual and the environment in which he lives.

The eighth purpose stated for fraternities and sororities is to provide opportunities for chapter management and organization, and to provide a climate for development of leadership skills and related areas of personal growth. Goal-setting sessions at chapter meetings spill over to personal goal-setting even years after college. Leadership positions in undergraduate chapters increase personal self-confidence and readiness to enter the job market.

One letter sent by an executive director of one of the national fraternities summed up the ideals of the Greek system:

"In a good 'fraternity, the individual learns to cooperate. He struggles, he fights, he debates, he is constantly frustrated by attitudes he perceives in others."

Three Greeks at UNCW were recently asked what aspect of their fraternity or sorority was most important to them.

Mark Sykes, age 21, a Criminal Justice major responds, "The most important purpose of Sigma Alpha Epsilon is the common bonds and friendships that develop from our brothers which are comprised of many different backgrounds and interests. The fraternity help to further enrich all of our lives."

Sherry Brissom, age 19, a Communications major responds, "Delta Zeta is to me a smile that is warm with friendship, sisterhood, laughter, and love. Being a sister just makes you smile all of over."

Louis Diccillo, age 21, a Finance major responds, "When a young man enters college he often sees a wall of challenges. A fraternity, such as Delta Tau Delta, places doors in this wall to help an individual face and overcome these challenges. A fraternity does not force someone through these doors, but sets the environment to better enable individual to meet his personal, academic, and professional goals."

Seniors who plan to enter graduate or professional schools in Fall 1987 and who are members of Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society should get in touch with the faculty advisor W. Lee Johnston in room 214-F, Social & Behavioral Sci. Building.

National Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society will award nine $2,000 scholarships and twenty-eight $500 awards this year on the basis of the student's scholastic record, evidence of creative ability, potential for success in chosen field, and character. Only members of Phi Eta Sigma are eligible for these gift scholarships.

National deadline for submitting applications is March 1. Application forms are available from the above named faculty advisor. Local deadline for submission of application is Feb. 15, 1987.

Campus Capsule

All University of North Carolina at Wilmington students who wish to live on campus during the 1987/88 academic year must register for the residence hall/apartment lottery.

Registration will be conducted in the housing office in Belk Hall from 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, Jan. 26-Jan. 30, 1987.

The drawing for on-campus housing will be held Feb. 2, 1987. Results will be posted in each residence hall/apartment lobby as soon as available.

This year UNCW's High School Visitation Day will be held on February 14 (Happy Valentines Day!) from 12 noon until 4:30 p.m. We anticipate even greater participation by high school students and parents than last year.

We also hope that involvement by UNCW clubs and organizations will be at an all-time high. Tables, which will be located in the lobby of Trask Coliseum, will give your group the opportunity to set up a display for the rising Freshmen. You will also be able to speak with the students about UNCW and what your organization has to offer.

If your club or organization would like to have a table available at Visitation Day, you must contact me in James Hall by Friday, February 6. Or you can call me at 395-3627.

Thanks for making this the finest Visitation Day to date!

Crisis Line Open House will hold crisis telephone volunteer training Tuesday Feb. 10, 1987 at 419 Chestnut St. It is scheduled from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and will continue for 7 weeks. If you would like further information please call Crisis Line Open House at 763-3695.

Crisis Line Open House is a program of the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center and is partially funded by Southeastern Mental Health and The United Way.

The Human Relations Month 1987 Committee will sponsor an interfaith worship service on February 1st at St. Mary's Catholic Church located at 216 S. 5th Street in Wilmington. A fellowship brunch will be held from 1:00 to 2:00 p.m., followed by the worship service which will last from 2:00 to 3:00 p.m.

For more information contact Diana Harris, chairperson of the Human Relations Month Interfaith committee at 256-2802 or Diane and Don Hanning of Mother Hubbard's Cupboard at 392-6865.

Where does that parking money go, anyway?

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Many UNCW students who have received parking tickets have often wondered where all the money from tickets goes to. The answer is really simple.

Money collected from parking tickets goes to the UNCW Parking Auxiliary, said Margaret Taylor, Director of the UNCW Parking Auxiliary.

The UNCW Parking Auxiliary is not an official university organization, Ms. Taylor explained in a recent interview.

"We receive no funding from the state," she said. "We are completely self-supporting."

"All money collected from parking tickets goes to improving [campus] parking lots and goes to paying utility bills," Ms. Taylor said.

For example, UNCW does not pay the electrical company for the electricity used in keeping the parking light posts lit at night, she said. The Parking Auxiliary pays the monthly electrical bills. But not all the money raised from the parking tickets goes to pay electrical bills.

Administrative costs take 48% of all ticket money collected according to Ms. Taylor. Administrative costs include paying for time at the UNCW Computer Center, accounting costs and salaries.

Routine repairs and maintenance requires 13% of the ticket income.

It takes $2-to-$3,000 to stripe a parking lot.

director. "One UNCW parking space costs $925 to construct."

To build new parking lots on campus, the Parking Auxiliary borrows money from the bank.

"We have to show to the bank that we can repay the loan," Ms. Taylor said.

The 22% of the ticket income is set aside to show possible lenders that the Parking Auxiliary can repay a loan. That percentage also goes to paying off previous loans.

Office supplies take up 14% of all ticket income.

The money for new ticket books comes from that percentage. Parking decals, brochures, office supplies, new office equipment and even computer time is also paid for with this part of the ticket income.

"The Parking Auxiliary must also generate a three-percent surplus for funds...mainly for unexpected repairs and for new construction," Ms. Taylor said.

While the Parking Auxiliary has its share of expenses, they are not having any trouble paying expenses.

For example, during the one three-day period, the Campus Police wrote a total of 34 tickets, Student Security wrote a total of 67 tickets and the Parking Auxiliary wrote 184 tickets.

The total for the weekend of January 17-19 is 285 tickets written.

The lowest ticket fine is five dollars, while the highest ticket fine (parking in a handicapped zone) is $25.

Wild Times

Now with the technological breakthroughs in copying, making it easier and cheaper than ever before to print comic books, Likens decided to give it a try. "I feel I have worked on this too long to give it up completely," he said.

Connie Hobbs-Thorsen, a professor here at UNCW before she moved to New York, was a great influence on Likens. He gives her credit for teaching him how to draw the anatomy of a character and helping him with page design.

As a result of his learning experiences from Mr. Hobbs-Thorsen, Likens is teaching a class at the Wilmington Community Arts Center. The class is called "Cartooning for Teens." The ages of his students range from 12-to-18 years.

Likens said his students are really fired up about his class. It is possible that the third issue of Wild Times might contain a story done by one of his students.

Likens is working on an idea of doing a whole book compiled of his students' efforts. He welcomes any offers from other artists who would like to make an addition to his upcoming books.

He is sending his work to big comic book companies so they can become acquainted with his work. He is also sending it to a company that has independent comic books so others interested in buying the rights to reprint it or so that if anyone wants to use the characters, they know who to contact.

With a satisfied look on his face, Likens said, "It feels like this time it has finally clicked."

GET TWO EDUCATIONS FROM ONE COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIP

An education in your chosen major. And an education in becoming an Army officer. You get both with an Army ROTC scholarship.

Army ROTC is the college program that trains you to become an officer, a leader and a manager.

Best of all, you can put both of your educations to work right away. In today's modern high-tech Army, we need engineers, communications experts, computer specialists, and other professionals.

Our scholarships cover full tuition and required fees. They also provide an amount for books, supplies and equipment, as well as an allowance of up to $1,000 each school year they're in effect.

Look into an Army ROTC scholarship. You'll be in for quite an education.

For more information, contact Cpt. Richard Longo at 395-3734 or 791-1133.

Be enthusiastic, but let's be good sports

After some complaints of unbecoming behaviour on the part of some Seahawk fans at the UNCW-ECU game a few weeks back, the Department of Athletics has asked the Seahawk to help them remind the student body to keep up the enthusiasm that everyone shows but to keep that enthusiasm within the lines of good sportsmanship.

They offer a few suggestions:
Don't throw objects onto the playing surface.

Don't use abusive language or profane chants toward visiting teams, their fans or toward the referees. All these people are guests at this University and should be treated accordingly.

No alcoholic beverages are allowed at any time in Trask coliseum.

No spectators are allowed on the playing floor for any reason during a basketball game.

No vulgar or objectionable handout literature, banners, or signs are allowed in Trask Coliseum at any time.

Anyone not following these suggestions may be asked to leave Trask. They may also be liable for criminal prosecution.

Keep it fun, but keep it clean.

At UNCW, we build a gazebo

This past August, Emory University in Atlanta was suffering the same problem UNCW is facing next fall semester.

Too many freshmen (and freshpersons, if you prefer).

Emory offered some upperclassmen $1,000 each to move off campus in order to make room for over 1200 incoming freshmen. The latest report from that university said that about twelve students had taken the school up on the deal, but more were considering it.

Whether or not more students took the "bribe" (as one news service called it) is not the issue. The problem is where to put students as the children of the "baby boomers" start working toward their degrees, causing more and more students to need a place to live which is at least reasonably convenient to classes.

While Emory is in a metropolitan area and really can only build straight up, UNCW has more land than it knows what to do with compared to many universities.

So, while more students than ever are going to college (and needing a place to live) even though UNCW's Board of Trustees agreed to raise the academic standards for incoming students starting in the near future, this university is going to combat the housing problem by building a gazebo.

Not a dormitory, (although that is in the works for the next few years) but an all-weather gazebo.

One cannot help but wonder how many people can sleep there.

Rainbow's End

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

Greater education leads to greater understanding.

Judaism and Catholicism has a 2,000-year-history of shared bad feelings. Many of the bad feelings between Jews and Catholics have been passed on through the educational systems of both religions. Only in the Twentieth Century has there been an attempt at reconciliation.

The attempt at religious rapprochement began with a startling declaration by the Second Vatican Council that God holds Jews "most dear." At the 1965 Vatican Council, Pope Paul VI signed the declaration directing the Roman Catholic Church not to forget the spiritual bond linking "the people of the New Covenant with Abraham's stock."

A decade later the Roman Catholic Church issued the guidelines putting the 1965 declaration by the Vatican Council into full force. The 1975 guidelines reflected concern for the "persecution and massacre of Jews" before and after the Second World War. The guidelines also called for respecting all Jewish religious traditions.

Still anti-Semitic teaching persisted in Roman Catholic elementary and secondary schools. Finally, in 1982, Pope John Paul II called upon religious instructors in Roman Catholic schools to present Judaism honestly "without any prejudice or offense to anyone and even more, with a lively awareness of Jewish heritage."

The first steps in erasing anti-Semitic teachings was taken in Miami last week.

An ecumenical team composed of two rabbis, a priest and four lay people met in the library of the Miami Archdiocese's headquarters to discuss verses from the New Testament that the Roman Catholic Church and Judaism considers to be anti-Semitic.

The verses in question come from the Gospel of Saint John. They make frequent reference to Jews in negative ways and portrays Jews as persecuting Jesus.

The ecumenical team is part of an international effort to do away with anti-Semitism in Roman Catholic teaching by completely rewriting the study guidelines for parishioners. The rewritten guidelines point out the prejudiced statements against Jews.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops and the anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith is sponsoring the rewriting project.

Saint John wrote his gospels several decades after the death of Jesus. To show opposition to Jesus, Saint John uses Judaism. He uses opposites for emphasis, but unfortunately the literary device he uses has anti-Semitic undertones which have become unacceptable to the Roman Catholic Church.

The ecumenical group will be writing lesson plans around neutral words in order to anti-Semitism.

The ecumenical team will be visiting nine cities this year in order to discuss plans for developing the lesson plans. Miami was the first city visited by the team.

The ecumenical team will also be visiting Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston, Manhattan, Brooklyn, Boston, St. Louis and

Veteran photographer likes Seahawk

I salute you on the Jan. 21 edition of The Seahawk, namely Being Twenty-one, Pornography, and The Death Penalty.

As a pioneer Associated Press photographer and Writer/Staffer and author of "Ernie Pyle — Typewriter Soldier" I am back in the land of the my beginning to pass on my expertise for the young and elderly. I can never condemn the youth of today for they are the future of the tomorrows.

I concur holy on your paper and subjects. We have arrived at too many laws and not enough order. However, I am thoroughly behind state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg and Craig Phillips State Sup. of Education on a new program to help eliminate drugs among fifth and sixth graders. North Carolina has always been a leader in education and I shall offer my help. This subject is very close to me in that I had to fly home from Hawaii two years ago to bury my twenty-nine year old son — a genius who drowned in a Georgia lake.

I support your photo survey on pornography as a photographer who contributed some of the first centerfold's for Playboy when it was nude art. A painter can create with a brush. Therefore you cannot legislate morality. It cannot be pushed under the rug. God made the human body beautiful in his image, love and beauty, not to be abused and misused. I plan to retrain male and female in the art of photography I hope will be taught in the creative art departments of colleges. Legislation will never destroy Playboy or the sex magazines but they can be educational and still sell which is the root of all evil.

I am back at the roots of my beginnings to write my memories which will contain much on sex and health. I welcome any student to call me at 763-3323 anytime if they concur and contribute any ideas.

Ignoring stop signs a problem

Dear Editor:

At approximately 5:10 PM on Wednesday, Nov. 19, I was leaving the parking lot near Friday Hall on my motorcycle when I was very nearly struck by a green station wagon whose driver ignored the stop sign at the intersection of Randall and G Streets. The careless young man driving the car made no effort even to slow down at the intersection; if the timing had differed by even a half second I would have been crippled or killed in the ensuing collision.

I pursued the car in question, stopped it, and made it very clear to the driver what he had done and how I felt about it. Frankly, I have seen all too much callous disregard for stop signs on campus. Those of us who ride motorcycles or bicycles are extremely vulnerable to this selfish idiosyncy.

I have discussed this problem with the Director of Public Safety at UNCW. In the future I intend to pursue, identify and prosecute individuals who run stop signs and endanger my life on this campus. The Director has assured me that the Campus Police will follow through.

Problems in the dorm

Dear Editor,

I am a second semester freshman who unfortunately has not had a pleasant first semester at UNCW. I attribute this to poor planning on the part of the housing office pertaining to assigned roommates.

When I received my roommate assignment last spring I promptly tried to get in touch with my roommate to try and get to know him before school started. First of all, the phone number given on the assignment was incorrect and I had to go through a great deal of trouble to just get the correct number. When I finally reached my roommate I was very surprised to find that he was a Senior and would be graduating in May. We talked for quite awhile and I found him to be very polite, helpful, and friendly. He was, and still is, one of the nicest students you would care to meet. However, I could not overcome the feeling that the difference in age and class status would somehow cause a conflict. Unfortunately, my feelings were correct and differences did arise. These differences made residence life somewhat unpleasant and I have no doubt that it affected me academically as well as socially. Let me be the first to stress that I have nothing personal against upperclassmen. I find them to be very congenial and helpful here at UNCW. The fact of the matter is that differences do exist between the classes, especially between Seniors and Freshmen. Also, my roommate was of legal drinking age, twenty-one. I am certain that drinking underage is not condoned in any way by this University. I am in no way making accusations toward my old roommate, but come on people, let's use some sense! I do not believe I have to expand any further on that idea for the readers of this letter to get my point!

In the middle of this first semester, I met a student whose roommate no longer stayed in his room with him. Incidentally this student is a freshman like myself. After getting to know him, I asked him if he needed a roommate and he said yes. We tried, several times, to go through the proper procedure of a room change. However, we were unable to get in touch with his old roommate to get him to sign the papers. The bottom line is that I needed a new roommate, there was one available, and I could not get him because of red tape. The ladies at the housing office were sympathetic, but were unable to help me at all. Fed up with the system, I illegally changed rooms.

As of this week the R.A.'s of both my old hall and my new illegal hall found out about the switch. As law would have it, I am now being charged a $25.00 fine and I might possibly be made to move back into my old room. I do understand the laws governing the residence hall, but now I am publicly asking the housing office and the readers of this letter this question: knowing the facts and circumstances that I have presented here, is it not possible that the housing office re-evaluate some of the rules it has pertaining to room changes? I will pay the fine and if need be move back to my old room because I know that I have broken a law. However, if this should be the case, I would at least hope that my situation will serve as a catalyst in getting the housing office to perhaps "have a talk" with its computer and coerce the staff into re-evaluating their way of assigning roommates. Especially assigning a Senior to a Freshman roommate.

Incidentally, after I changed rooms and roommates, I could concentrate better on what I came to school for, my work, and I met many more Freshmen than I would have met if I had stayed in the old room.

Thank You,
Phillip Humphries

Denver. The non-anti-Semitic lesson plans are scheduled to be completed this year. When completed, educational guides for use in elementary and secondary Roman Catholic schools in the United States will be published. Educational Guides will also be published in German and Spanish and will be sent to Latin America and Europe in 1988.

The goal of the educational guidelines is simple:

Anti-Semitism among Roman Catholics can be eliminated by educating children about the negative effects of such beliefs. Educating children against anti-Semitism is one way of eliminating it among Roman Catholics and Jews.

After all, greater education leads to greater understanding and can prevent the horrors of another Holocaust.

The Telemedia Group - Video expertise

The modern trend towards capturing just about every aspect of life with a video camera has generated a whole new need for proficient technicians in that profession. As more and more movie production companies and large industries become based in southeastern North Carolina, the need for local technicians to work with them continues to grow. As a result, Wilmington's Telemedia Group was formed to keep up with the need for video documentation in the region.

The Telemedia Group is an independent video and audio production company with a staff of veteran professionals who enjoy being behind the camera. They have earned impressive credits in video production for motion pictures, television commercials, documentaries for public television, video learning and training materials, and safety films. And the list goes on.

The three partners who comprise the nucleus of the production company have extensive experience in their field. Collectively, they have traveled throughout the world, and enjoyed the excitement of documenting a range of life's facets, from the artistic precision of a ballet to historical news events to behind-the-scenes looks at major movie productions.

David Tyson, a former Cable News Network photographer and cameraman, captured forever on film the unforgettable moment when the Iranian hostages arrived in Germany after their release from captivity. A videographer, editor, and writer, he served as first cameraman/editor for CNN in Europe and later returned as an editor with CNN in Atlanta. Tyson has also served as the technical producer for several documentary projects, as the North Carolina location manager for the filming of Year of the Dragon, and has produced several independent videos. He and Michael De Vries serve as the executive producers of their various projects.

Michael De Vries is a videographer, editor, writer, and still photographer. He spent seven years as the commercial photographer for WECT-TV, Wilmington's Channel 6 television station. De Vries also has ten years' experience as the Technical Director in charge of all video and audio production for his father's marketing and public opinion research agency, De Vries & Associates. He has produced documentaries for both public and commercial television.

Margaret De Vries, Michael's wife, is the company's business manager and production coordinator. She also serves as a photographer, interviewer, production liaison, editor, or whatever the situation might call for. Ms. De Vries managed Concept Video Productions for four years and also shot and edited video for legal depositions and jury demonstrations. She was a production assistant with De Vries & Associates for 4 years and also has experience as a legal assistant.

The Telemedia Group was born of an idea that Tyson and De Vries used to throw around years ago when both worked for WECT. When Tyson left this area to join CNN in 1980, De Vries stayed on at the television station and continued with his production projects. When Tyson and his wife returned to the Cape Fear area three years later, the team decided to seize the opportunity to join forces again.

The trio formed The Telemedia Group in March of this year, and have concentrated their efforts on creating quality video and audio productions for professional broadcasting. The results of those efforts are impressive.

Recently, The Telemedia Group earned their first credit for work on a major motion picture. They filmed the Ozzie Osborne television sequences for the movie "Trick or Treat", which was produced for the DeLaurentis Entertainment Group at Wilmington's North Carolina Film Corporation.

The team is currently producing a behind-the-scenes look at another motion picture. "The Making of Skip Tracer" will document the filming of "Skip Tracer" and include interviews with the director, major stars, and production crew of the DEG film.

They also pretend to be what they are, at times. Tyson explained that a lot of films call for the use of news crews to be in front of the cameras. The group has provided news crews for "Year of the Dragon", "King Kong Lives", and "Bedroom Window".

Although Telemedia's staff has worked with the productions of "Skip Tracer", "King Kong Lives", "Crimes of the Heart", "Blue Velvet", "Trick or Treat", and "Year of the Dragon", the movie business is not the only subject of interest to them. They worked on the National PBS documentary production of "The

Behind the scenes at Telemedia's production office.

War to End All Wars" and filmed "Choreography of A Modern Dance" for the North Carolina School of the Arts.

They have also produced promotional videos for numerous businesses, filmed casting calls for talent agencies, documented the recently released "Call This Place Home" project for Artists United for North Carolina, and are even working on music videos for Wilmington performing artists Lahn & Loftin and others.

Tyson explained that it has taken time for the area to grasp the importance of video technology. It's taken awhile for the people here to understand how important video can be, as a sales tool, or for promotion, or whatever. As the area has grown, though, the need for our services has, too.

"We'll do production at any level, just about," explained Michael De Vries. "But our goal is to maintain a high standard and show people a high quality. Most of our business has been out of town and out of state. We're trying to turn that around. We do the high end level of productions, but we do the low end, day-to-day projects, too. Like tape transfers, and things like that."

The Telemedia Group's staff is also comprised of an impressive array of other professionals, all of whom contribute their expertise as the projects demand. Working together, the team is able to produce high calibre video projects that leave a distinct "Blown away" impression on even the most sophisticated viewer.

Studio operations manager Bobby Long is a videographer, still photographer, and editor. He has been in radio and television broadcasting for 13 years performing all aspects of production. He has worked for NBC, ABC, and CBS affiliates as well as NBC Sports and NBC News.

Technical consultant/Engineer Jim Holladay is the owner of Technical Video Systems in Winston-Salem. Holladay designed and installed The Weather Channel in Atlanta, Georgia and has provided television stations and private production companies throughout the south with video systems. He also specializes in high performance video graphics and computer animation.

Rhonda Tyson, David's wife, is the visual design consultant, supervising graphic and set designs for video and related print materials. She is presently Head of Exhibits for the North Carolina State Museum of History and has many years of experience in all phases of visual design and production.

Also on the Telemedia Group staff as a consultant and writer, Dr. Walter De Vries has an impressive store of knowledge to draw from. He is former professor of communications and political science at The University of Michigan, Duke University, and UNCW.

The elder De Vries has directed numerous political campaigns throughout the country, and has co-authored several books on politics. He has written and produced full-length and mini-documentaries, special telecasts, public service announcements, and commercials for public and commercial television, cable networks, and satellite systems.

Other team players include Dennis Walsak, who specializes in graphic design, illustration, and writing, and the Lahn & Loftin music team who contribute both original compositions and audio expertise.

By tapping the many talents of their "collective" group of technicians and writers, the Telemedia Group is actively capturing the exciting proof of our regional growth on film. Although Tyson witnessed historical interviews with the likes of Anwar Sadat and Lech Walesa during his tenure with CNN, he says that most of Telemedia's projects are exciting, too.

The Telemedia Group partners readily admit, though, that going behind the scenes with cameras during the filming of a major motion picture is "probably the most exciting" type of project that they've done together.

Jazz Festival to open Feb. 6-7 in Wilmington

Goodman, and accompanied Hamilton on several Japanese tours. He has also appeared on NBC's Today Show and the CBS Morning News.

Singer Maxine Sullivan had her first hit record in 1938, and has been going strong ever since.

During the forties and fifties, Ms. Sullivan developed a strong reputation as a major jazz performer by appearing regularly with Claude Thornhill's band, Benny Carter's orchestra, and John Kirby's sextet.

She appeared in "Swinging The Dream" with Louis Armstrong and in several other movies before retiring in the 1950's to devote her energies to founding "The House That Jazz Built" in the Bronx, which is a recreation center providing programs and workshops in jazz—and built in memory of Ms. Sullivan's late husband, pianist Chick Jackson.

The singer came out of semi-retirement in 1967 and has busied himself touring with the World's Greatest Jazz Band, the Scott Hamilton Quintet, and other name groups.

Now 75 years old, Ms. Sullivan headlines most of the important jazz festivals in the world.

Pianist Eddie Higgins has worked in every jazz idiom from Dixieland to fusion. He has worked as a pianist and/or arranger for numerous names in jazz, including Coleman Hawkins, Wayne Shorter, Don Goldie, Freddie Hubbard, and Jack Tienhoven.

Higgins spent twenty years performing in and around the Chicago area, working in some of the most renowned clubs in that city. He spent twelve years leading the house trio at The London House, where he played opposite some of the biggest jazz stars of the fifties and sixties. Stan Getz, Oscar Peterson, Dizzy Gillespie, Errol Garner, George Shearing, Cannonball Adderly, and Bill Evans are just a few of the music greats that he has associated with.

Pianist Keith Ingram, a native of London, England, played in several British bands that backed touring American jazz artists. Since his relocation to the United States in 1979, he has toured with the World's Greatest Jazz Band and with Benny Goodman. He has free-lanced extensively, toured Europe in 1985 with Eddie Condon's All Star Band, and appeared at the Kool Jazz Festival, among others.

Drummer Bobby Rosengarden is another NC Jazz Festival favorite. Rosengarden spent twenty years with the NBC-TV music staff before moving on to head up his own orchestra for ABC. Currently a free-lance jazzman, he is music director for HBO and regularly leads his own band at the Rainbow Room in New York City.

Rosengarden has recorded behind the likes of Louis Armstrong, Dizzy Gillespie, Duke Ellington, Errol Garner, Gerry Mulligan, Benny Goodman, Charlie Spivak, Lena Horne, Tony Bennett, Ella Fitzgerald, and many others.

Clarinet player Kenny Davern is also a regular performer at the festival. He has recorded with numerous jazz greats, including Wild Bill Davidson and Art Hodes, and he also represented the United States in an International Radio Broadcast via satellite, where he played simultaneously with other musicians throughout the world.

Davern has recorded for television in Switzerland, and most recently performed on the soundtracks for "The Cotton Club" and "The Gig". His recording of "The Very Thought of You" in 1985 won the Music Trades Association award as the best jazz record of the year in England, where just a few years before he had been selected as the #1 Clarinetist in the world by the English Jazz Readers Poll.

Tenor saxophonist Flip Phillips is considered to be one of the top tenor sax men of all time. He has played with the top bands of the jazz era, including Russ Morgan, Red Norvo, Woody Herman, Benny Goodman, and Jazz at the Philharmonic. He was one of the major sparks in the Woody Herman Herd, and wrote the jazz classic "Apple Honey" while in the Herd. He won Downbeat Magazine's tenor sax award for ten consecutive years, and has also won jazz polls in Metronome and Esquire Magazines.

Horn player Ed Polcer is the resident cornetist, manager, and part-owner of Eddie Condon's historic jazz club in New York City. The leader of "Eddie Condon's All Star Band", Polcer has toured extensively throughout the country and Europe, and released an album with that group several years ago. He is the newly-elected president of "International Art of Jazz", a arts-in-education non-profit organization.

Trombonist Tom Arin was a Professor of English for fifteen years before devoting himself to music on a full time basis. He was the house trombonist at Eddie Condon's from 1980-1985, and toured Europe with the "American All Stars" in 1983.

He has toured with the World's Greatest Jazz Band and the World of Jelly Roll Morton. He has performed at most of the major jazz festivals throughout the world.

The youngest of the festival players, twenty nine year old guitarist Howard Alden has appeared and/or recorded with Red Norvo, Woody Herman, Wild Bill Davidson, Doc Cheatham, Joe Bushkin, Bobby Scott, and many others. He has been lauded by critics for his mastery of jazz guitar, and is the player that festival organizer Van Velsor "can't wait to hear."

Drummer Butch Miles has played with such names as Frank Sinatra, Count Basie, Tony Bennett, Sammy Davis, Jr., Dave Brubeck, Mel Torme, Della Reese, Dizzy Gillespie, and numerous others. He has played at jazz festivals throughout the world, and has appeared on The Tonight Show, The Dick Cavett Show, The Mike Douglas Show, and CBS 60 Minutes. He travels throughout the world doing clinics for Ludwig Drums, and played a Royal Command Performance for the Queen of England in 1976.

A number of the artists have appeared at the North Carolina Jazz Festival in previous years. Davern, Hinton, and Rosengarden have each appeared six times, and have become a mainstay of the festival itself.

The jazz festival will be held on Friday and Saturday, Feb. 6 & 7 at the Wilmington Hilton Inn, and will feature a cabaret-style setting where the musicians mix and match—usually to the total delight of the audience. The shows will feature solos, combos, and full-scale ensembles and will start at 8 p.m. each night.

Tickets for the jazz festival are available at $15 per night. There is a $7 student's special on Friday, the first night of the concert, and patronships are also available for $80 per person. Patrons receive tickets for both shows, are listed in the festival brochure, receive invitations for a cocktail—buffet with the artists before the Saturday concert, and are also welcome to attend the Saturday afternoon jam session that has become a tradition during the festival. Patrons who play are welcome to jam with the performers during that session.

Persons interested in attending the concert can obtain tickets by writing to: N.C. Jazz Festival, 1924 S. 16th Street, Wilmington, N.C. 28401. Tickets may also be ordered by calling Van Velsor's medical office at 762-5207 (daytime) or 256-9180 (evenings and weekends).

Last year's concert was completely sold out, and similar crowds are expected this year, so everyone is encouraged to purchase tickets early.

"Mosquito Coast" worth seeing

BY CARLA GARRISON

Often times men's good intentions and ideas turn into driving obsessions that lead to desperation. Mosquito Coast, which stars Harrison Ford, Janet Merinier, and River Phoenix, was a unique portrayal of those good intentions gone bad.

Allie Fox (Ford) was a brilliant man who could successfully create anything. He grieved over America's twentieth century state of mind, hated the artificial world the USA has become, and hated the capitalistic attitude. He loved his country but could no longer bear to watch, as he put it, "her dying".

Allie had a revelation. He could take his family and settle in some uncivilized patch of jungle and build the perfect civilization. He approached his family (his wife, mother, two sons and two daughters) and jumped on a boat headed for a place called Mosquito Island. Once they arrive there Allie purchases a town called "Geronimo" which turns out to be several shacks thrown together on a river bank in the jungle. Allie is overjoyed. He is able to motivate the handful of previous "Geronimo" citizens along with his family and actually creates a working civilization.

The success of the small jungle village gives Allie a yearning to produce more and gain more respect. He begins to think of all that has been built in a possessive sense. He claims all glory and credit for what has been accomplished. Throughout the story there is a "holy roller" missionary who debates with Allie on God's role in the world. In one scene this missionary visits The new "Geronimo", and commands Allie on his work but credits the Lord. Allie's reaction to his comments is a turning point in the plot because now it is obvious that Allie has become what he hated most, a capitalist.

Allie desires to lead and create more becomes insatiable. He continually wanted more recognition and fame. He wanted everyone to share in his enthusiasm, especially his sons. His over-zealous attitudes and fears of losing his possessions and power lead to the loss of all they had built.

By this point his family was tired and homesick for America, but he could not let go of his dream to build the perfect society. He fears returning to the states would dissolve his families blind obedience. He does not realize that they have already begun to doubt his rationale. Allie forces them on and on, and never realizes how badly he has contradicted the statement he set out to make from the beginning.

Mosquito Coast is a well-written and directed deviation from

"No Mercy" shows none

BY ANITA BRADSHAW

"No Mercy" is a movie you want to see when you're tired of all the snow and sludge or you don't want to wax your skis. If that's not plain enough, maybe this is - skip it!

Richard Gere plays Eddie Jillette, a streetwise cop who is out to avenge the brutal murder of his partner Joe Collins (Gary Basaraba). The hitch in this story is the fact that the only witness to the heinous crime is the killer Losada's girlfriend, Michel Duval (Kim Basinger).

Michel is a sensuous but the usual story lines that are splashed across the screen. It has a strong theme with subtle religious overtones. Mosquito Coast is highly entertaining, with lots of light comedy throughout and the outcomes are unpredictable. This movie is highly recommended for a change in plot pace and a meaningful message.

uneducated woman. She was sold to Losada (Jeroen Krabbe) by her mother when she was thirteen. Now that she's an adult she wants to be free of her bondage and makes several attempts to escape.

The movie grinds on and, of course, Jillette and Duval eventually fall in love after starting out as the worst of enemies. What adventure film would be complete without the hero killing the villain and rescuing the damsel in distress? This one being no different, Jillette confronts Losada. The two put their best killing skills to work and have a "shoot-em-at-the-OK-corral" gun fight. (Guess who wins?).

There is lots of blood and gore, so the film received an "R" rating, though I think most children could see through the fakiness of this one.

Strip-a-Gram can be a revealing experience

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Pat Stills, a Castle Hayne woman who is the office manager of a Wilmington car dealership, was putting a present for her boss under the Christmas tree at her office Christmas party. She was bending over beneath the tree when a handsome young Santa Claus approached her from behind. Smiling broadly, he handed her a card from the rest of the staff, and wished her a Merry Christmas.

He read aloud a Parytime poem written especially for the occasion while he named her a stuffed Christmas stocking. Then, as Ms. Stills opened her Christmas card, a cassette player suddenly started blaring the notes of the unforgettable Stripper's theme song.

Once he heard the music, Mike Dowdy, a dark-haired twenty-four year old, started grinding his hips and removing his Santa Suit - which definitely took Ms. Stills by surprise and engaged her undivided attention.

As her fellow employees started to cheer with the delight of "getting" the company practical joker, the office manager realized that the joke was on her and laughingly retained her composure. She even helped Santa out of his jacket. Ms. Stills chuckled and the employees cheered as Dowdy gradually stripped down to a pair of bikini briefs.

He stood there a minute, gave her a hug, picked up his clothes, then ran back across the concrete floor to an office where he could get dressed. Dowdy's girlfriend, Karen Moore, laughed and followed him, carrying the cassette player and preparing to go home for a quiet evening.

Ms. Moore sees nothing wrong with her boyfriend delivering Strip-a-grams. But then, why should she? She is the one that got HIM started in the business. Herself a stripper for the last four years, the petite twenty-six year old Fayetteville native sees stripping as just a way to get a laugh out of people while working a second job.

"It's more of a practical joke that it is a seduction. Once people see what it is, they understand. It's always real tasteful." She further explained that while people do react strangely when they inquire about her profession, she still enjoys being part of someone's joke.

Jo Tyler agreed with Ms. Moore. She owns Parytime, the company that provides these strippers, belly dancers, and clowns for the people who desire such services. She ran a balloon delivery business in Wilmington for five years, but gradually decided to branch into Strip-a-grams and the like.

"People called all the time for strippers, but we didn't do it. I eventually decided to offer that because so many people asked for it," she explained that she got lucky, because she put an ad in the paper and Ms. Moore, who already had experience, responded to it. Ms. Tyler said that the business, which opened in October, is doing real good.

Parytime provides strippers for birthday parties, anniversaries, Christmas presents, and the like. They are called on most often by men and women wanting a stripper for their spouse or lover, or, as Ms. Tyler says, to "shut someone up." Those being shut up are generally people who are pranksters themselves.

A five to eight minute Strip-a-gram costs $50, or a customer can order a fifteen minute strip show (bachelor-party oriented) for $75.

Interestingly enough, Ms. Tyler had a lot of males express interest in the job. She has four male strippers on staff, but still just one female. "I'm having trouble getting another girl to do it," she said. "When you say 'strip', people go ah-hh...one thing's for sure. A shy person can't do it." Ms. Tyler should know, since she has to deliver the Strip-a-grams herself when Ms. Moore isn't available, and has even pressed her husband into service before.

She got numerous prank calls after her ads first came out, and there was a resurgence of interest after the Wilmington Morning Star did a story about the company. "After the article, one guy called every week looking for Karen. He even tried to get her number by saying he wanted to offer her a movie part. Of course, I didn't give it to him."

The females only strip down to a teddy, panties and bra, or a bikini during the Strip-a-gram, and down to pasties and a t-bar during a bachelor party. Ms. Moore has had several offers for hundreds of dollars to take everything off, but responded with "I just don't do that."

Dowdy, her boyfriend, said that he never intended in what she was doing. "She's always coming home to me, so I don't worry." He finally decided to try it himself and said that it "really doesn't feel that strange."

"When you do it, you don't feel uncomfortable at all," he explained. "I thought maybe I would, but it didn't work out like that at all. The women are usually cheering."

Mike Aldieri, one of Parytime's new male strippers, agrees. A former professional dance instructor, he recently moved here from Connecticut with his family. "I was always told that I should do it because of the way I dance," he said. He is a student whose wife works full time, and he needed the extra money, so he called Ms. Tyler.

He said that his wife doesn't mind the fact that he strips if she doesn't have to see it. "She doesn't mind as long as she doesn't have to be there. She has seen the way I dance and the way people look. She's not embarrassed for me, she's just embarrassed at the way people will be watching me."

Ms. Moore said that she isn't usually nervous, because the victim is usually unsuspecting. She often approaches them as a job applicant and waits for the right moment to spring her surprise. "Most of the time, I only get nervous when the people who ordered it are real quiet, just waiting for the victim to show up, or when I have to pretend to be an applicant, or someone's friend, or something."

And her victim is usually a little bit puzzled, anyway. She explained that she'll apply for a high tech or executive level job, and be obviously unqualified while she does it. While the victim is trying to make sense out of nonsense, she takes him by surprise. Quite a few of them are set up by their wives, and Ms. Moore said that most of the wives are really good sports about it. She has never heard one express regret about ordering one and they usually really enjoy taking their men by surprise.

"Women are our biggest friends," she said, and also mentioned that she really enjoys her job. "You know, you really care about the people you're doing it for. You want to see them laugh." She chuckled when remembering what her old boss used to do after they'd delivered a Strip-a-gram somewhere.

"She'd look at me and shake her head," Ms. Moore explained, "then say, 'See how you got? I can't take you anywhere!'"

MUSICIAN MAGAZINE LIVE 1976-1986

For Immediate Release:

Move over, Bruce. The hottest compilation is about to hit the street. MUSICIAN magazine announces the debut of its very special 100th issue. Featuring a decade's worth of interviews with the most influential artists from the past, present and future, this retrospective is a star-packed look at some serious and not-so-serious music makers. In the February issue of MUSICIAN, the stars come out to discuss themselves, their music, and each other.

"I felt a very indefinable magic at the first Springsteen show I ever saw. There was that definite magic in the air. Bruce would always come to Who concerts but I went to meet him for the first time on his own ground. And it was like meeting nobody. He could've been one of the lighting men." - Pete Townshend

"The idea that you can't walk down the street in people's mind. I can walk down any street, any time. It's not that different than it ever was—except you might meet some strangers and you talk to 'em for a little while. And when that happens, it's fantastic. You get somebody's whole life in three hours."

- Bruce Springsteen

"I found Keith Richards to be very much in love with his music. You can see that all his infamy and fortune don't matter much to him. When he puts on the guitar, lines disappear from his face." - Bono (U2)

"'Wrapped Around Your Finger'—take it off. Sounds like Christopher Cross. I like the Police but that track sounds like what they play at my dentist's office." - Keith Richards (Rolling Stones)

"I think the Clash have fourteen-year-old intellects." - Sting (The Police)

"I got into music because it seemed like the best thing around that had the least laws and restrictions about it. The horror of becoming the new Rolling Stones keeps us honest. We saw the Stones as the way not to turn out." - Joe Strummer (The Clash)

"I don't think half of us know what happened to us, really. I keep seeing pictures of myself shaking hands with Mitzi Gaynor and I think 'I didn't know I met her.'" - Paul McCartney

"I had problems as a writer in the Beatles because when I'd present my songs, they'd all fall about on the floor laughing." - Ringo Starr

"I'm always going to be known as Elvis Costello. Columbia Records is never going to stand for me abruptly abandoning the name. Also, I don't want it to become a statement like becoming John Cougar Mellencamp. It's a simple thing. I want my name back." - Declan MacManus (alias Napoleon Dynamite Imposter Coward Brother Costello)

"Honestly, at the beginning I had no idea I appeared like a psychotic lunatic. I still don't think I look like Tony Perkins." - David Byrne (Talking Heads)

"[When I get back to Minneapolis] I'll probably take a long bath. I haven't had one in a long time. I'm scared of hotel bathtubs." - Prince

"It's now that's important. One should be concerned with the now and not even the future. What's important is if I get the next breath or not." - Marvin Gaye

Lady 'Hawks coast to 12th win

By Matt Shanklin

Sharon McDowell scored 22 points and grabbed 14 rebounds to lead UNC Wilmington to a 79-69 win over Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) foe.

McDowell, who was eight-for-10 from the field and a perfect six-of-six in the second half, fueled a 10-2 run in the final two minutes to break open a two-point game. McDowell scored five of the Lady Seahawks last seven points.

Sissy Morse and Elizabeth Bell added 16 points apiece, while Wanda Carroll chipped in 15. Morse and Bell both added eight rebounds apiece.

Beverly McLaughlin led George Mason with 16 points, while Veronica Holland grabbed eight rebounds. The win raised UNCW's record to 12-3 overall and 3-3 in the CAA. The Lady Patriots of GMU fall to 6-11 and 1-5 in the conference. George Mason has led 60-56 with 8:13 to play when Jeanine Jimenez hit two free throws, but UNCW, behind a three-point play by Elizabeth Bell, took a 10-8 lead. Smith layup the Lady Hawks surged ahead 63-60.

Mason did tie the score one more time, pulling even at the 5:47 mark on two Veronica Gilliard free throws. Gilliard finished with 15 points.

But UNC Wilmington took the lead for good when Sharon McDowell scored off an offensive rebound and Sissy Morse iced it with an 18-foot jumper at the 1:09 mark.

In the Lady Seahawks other game, James Madison used a 23-6 spurt to erase a two-point UNCW lead and coast to a 98-72 victory. The win raised the 18th-ranked Lady Ducks' record to 14-3, and 5-0 in the CAA.

UNCW had led 59-57 with 11:49 to play, but the Lady Ducks used some hot outside shooting from guards Floretta Jackson and Donna Budd to break open the contest. Jackson and Budd, who both scored 16 points each, were two of six JMU players in double figures.

Forward Betsy Wiman led all JMU players with 15 points, while junior center Sydney Beasley added 15 points and a game-high 16 rebounds.

Trailing by as much as nine points in the first half, UNCW fought back to within two at intermission 41-39 behind the inside play of junior center Elizabeth Bell. Bell, who was 10-of-16 from the field and 5-of-6 from the free throw line, finished with a game-high 25 points, putting her over the 1000 career point level. She is only the fifth UNCW player to go over the 1000 point plateau in the history of the Lady Seahawk program.

Two free throws by Elizabeth Bell gave UNCW their final lead at 59-57, but the Lady Seahawks just could not hold back the hot-shooting Lady Ducks, who converted on 61% (25-of-41) of their shots from the field in the second half.

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Derrick Moseley hit a three-point shot at the buzzer to send the game into overtime. Then the Patriots poured it on in the extra period to defeat the Seahawks 80-74 in a key Colonial Athletic Association matchup.

Brian Rowsom scored 30 points to lead the Hawks in the loss, their second in a row.

UNCW had lead by as much as 11, but the failure to hit key free throws down the stretch contributed to the loss.

Sandy Anderson missed the front end of a one-and-one and Moseley went down court and hit the three-point buzzer-beater.

The loss dropped UNCW to 9-8 overall and a second place tie in the CAA. George Mason is now tied with the Seahawks in the conference, along with James Madison at 4-3.

In the Seahawks other CAA game, the Ducks of James Madison surprised UNCW 82-71 behind the 21 points from senior guard Eric "Boo Boo" Brent and the eight points and 15 assists by point guard Benny Gordon.

Brian Rowsom led all Seahawk scorers with 36 points. Charles Cherry was the only other UNCW player in double figures with 10 points.

The key to the contest was the poor shooting from the outside. The Hawks were able to push the ball inside to Rowsom all night, but guards Mark Gary and Sandy Anderson, as well as forward Greg Bender, combined for a 5-for-29 shooting performance. The Seahawks were also beaten on defense many times when the quicker James Madison guards beat UNCW down the court.

UNCW did salvage one win during the week, when they slipped by regional-rival Campbell. The Camels, led by the nation's sixth leading scorer, Clarence Grier, almost pulled a shocker over the Hawks.

Grier, who scored 24 points, missed a three-pointer at the buzzer that would have won it for the visiting Camels.

Kevan Miles missed the front end of a one-and-one and Grier was able to get free for the final shot.

Miles, who finished with seven points made up for his missed free throw, by seriously inhibiting the shot of Grier.

Brian Rowsom led all UNCW scorers with 22 points. It was the Seahawks eighth win in the last ten games with Campbell and gave UNCW a six-game winning streak on the season, the longest since the 1979-80.

Elizabeth Bell goes for two of her 25 points against 18th ranked James Madison. JMU downed the Lady 'Hawks. Bell became only the fifth woman in Lady 'Hawks history to score over 1,000 points.

Halftime with Bobby Knight

This time down the court, we're going to try and explain something that not too many people understand—the making of a 3-minute 45-second TV halftime show—because even when you give it the best you can, work really hard, work really hard, not a lot of folks realize just what's all involved.

What most of my cameo glimpses into the behind-the-scenes world of college hoops require are two days of work—including travel time, from concourse to concourse. But because of space limitations, I've selected one of the few that was done in a day—when I recently took my annual pilgrimage to Bloomington to spend a four-hour time block doing a halftime show on Coach Bobby Knight.

Okay. The alarm clock jumped me off the living room floor at 6:15 a.m., and in my stupor I realize I haven't done an Indiana game in two years, but also that nothing really changes.

This, I decide, is what I want to hit upon in my show—that in Coach Knight's case, change only means that the racetrack sports jacket has become a rotating Adidas pullover red or white sweater. And, that he's left the powerful Midwest states from which he's always recruited—Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan—and opened up the whole country, including JUCO blue-chippers. And yes, that he is now playing a zone—which is even obvious to Billy P. and Dick V.

What Coach Knight has shown, I think, is that greatness in any performance is adjusting to change, while maintaining an image on non-negotiability. He's given us the answer to that age-old saloon argument: Would a Vince Lombardi, Red Auerback, John Wooden, or Woody Hayes, be successful in today's sports environment of over-exposure, agents, wild media styles, play-me-or-I'll-transfer athletes?

The answer, I decide, is yes. Because Bobby Knight, who never played a zone, always wore nothing but a sport-jacket, and never recruited outside the above mentioned four states—he is adjusting in his own, unique, non-negotiable way.

By the time I'd thought this all out, I'd climbed into a seven o'clock commuter out of Milwaukee for Indianapolis—a plane that was made for the Hunchback of Notre Dame, because once you get on one, you can't straighten up. And the guy who took my ticket at the counter was the same guy who loaded my baggage on the plane, and then ended up tugging on his Eddie Rickenbacker leather hat with goggles as the pilot. I landed at 10:24 a.m. and was picked up by Murray Bartow, a graduate assistant at Indiana and son of Gene Bartow, the head coach at UAB, for a 55-mile trip to visit the residence of the round ball guru.

Upon arriving in Bloomington, I knelt and kissed his ring—and caught the end of practice, which ended at noon because it was the Christmas holiday. Believe me, it was a real physical workout, no nonsense, with Coach Knight always keeping the court spread and working screens in their motion offense. On D, they worked on cutting off passing lanes, and on a concentrated, maximum effort on man-to-man.

We then went for a paper napkin lunch, at a place the health department hasn't found yet, accompanied by his son Tim, who graduated from Stanford and represents Coach Knight in all businesses outside of the university.

Like I said, the last time the floor was swept in that place must have been when Victor Mature starred in "One Million B.C.," but the food was good, and the conversation—believe it or not—was mainly on fishing and hunting.

After that, we went back and did a 35-40 minute, in-depth conversation on basketball and what this giant would do if basketball ended tomorrow—and how'd want to be remembered. This show will be shown February 21st when Iowa visits Indiana, and I think you'll find his answers interesting... and, in some cases, surprising.

There are a few things I will say. When we talked that half-hour plus before the two-angle cameras, Coach Knight said the three-point play is suicidal to the game. And, that he has certain doubts and reservations about the way the NCAA and the presidents of the universities are handling things.

Also, he doesn't care who refs the games, and doesn't know who the refs are until he gets on court—which is rare—and feels the three-second lane should be widened.

Coach Knight also said he felt that his next career would not have to be competitive, and in addition, touched a little on the sweaters, the zones, the shoe contracts, athletes receiving some money, and the shooting ability of Steve Alford—one of the greatest lights-out shooters in the business.

Believe me guys, I don't think this is one Cage Brief you'll want to miss.

Then, it was back to the airport, with Tim chauffeuring, for my return flight to where beer is Made the American Way. I got back to my home at 11 o'clock that night—having put in about 17 hours for a 3-minute 45-second show. A piece of cake, huh?

There are a couple of last points I'd like to make.

One is that, if Coach Knight has a human fault, it's that if he likes you, he'll do anything for you. What he did for me was a hell of a favor at a busy time, and you'd better believe this former sidelines-pacer appreciates it.

Second, make no mistake. There is doubt, when this man walks onto a basketball court, everyone's eyes are on him. The visiting coach, the refs, the media, the fans—they seem to know by ESP that the man is coming out. I doubt that he's ever played to a less than SRO house in the Big Ten in the last 10 years, and his intensity and cold stare guarantees the Nielson Rating for any Indiana game. He's like a superstar. He is the personification of Hoosier Madness.

Coach Knight is one of those rare people who takes the air out of the room, who makes the heart pound, making it tough to breathe. Everybody knows he's there, even the opposing team, who make believe they don't, but they know: Here comes the man. He is, today, the only one who has that kind of awareness to everybody in the place. Even the ushers.

What I'm trying to show is that Bobby Knight—as reflected by the reactions of his peers—is so aware. And it's not just coincidence that awareness and greatness take up the same number of letters on the written page.

The only thing I don't like about Bobby Knight being so good to me is that it seems I'm old, because he's always extra nice to old people...

Festival to spotlight top amateur athletes in 34 events

The official competition schedule for the U.S. Olympic Festival - '87, July 17-26 in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro, North Carolina, will feature 34 of the Olympic and Pan American Games sports, broken down into 278 medal events, with competition by more than 3,000 of America's top amateur athletes in those events. In addition, some of the Festival competition will double as Pan Am Games trials or as part of the Olympic Games' selection procedure for certain sports, including ice hockey.

Opening ceremonies will kick off the major part of the '87 Festival schedule on Friday, July 17 in Raleigh's Carter-Finley Stadium, as the competitors and featured entertainers and performers alike celebrate the nation's largest multi-sport event. Due to some competitions scheduling conflicts, a few sports will hold competition in the four days prior to the opening ceremonies. The Festival will conclude on Sunday, July 26, with 26, with 11 sports holding finals and closing ceremonies planned to cap off the final day's activities.

Wrestling and swimming will be the first sports to begin competition in North Carolina, as action gets underway for the freestyle wrestlers on July 13th, followed by swimming on July 14th. The Festival's last medals will be decided in the sports of athletics (track and field), cycling, equestrian, fencing, gymnastics, ice hockey, modern pentathlon, rowing, synchronized swimming, team handball and weightlifting as the United States Olympic Committee's eighth and final summer extravaganza prior to the 1988 Olympic Games draws to an end.

The sports with the longest schedules will be soccer, where the men and women will compete over an eight-day period beginning on July 18, followed by field hockey and water polo, which each have a seven-day competitive schedule. Modern pentathletes face the shortest, but perhaps most grueling schedule. For only the second time in U.S. Olympic Festival history, the sport's five events will be held all in the same day. The women will duel it out in the fencing, equestrian, running, swimming and shooting events on July 25th, while the men will compete for medals on July 26th.

In addition to the 34 sports on the U.S. Olympic Festival program, three of those sports will feature competition for disabled athletes. On July 16th and 18th, respectively, there will be five matches held in freestyle and Greco-Roman wrestling for disabled athletes. There will be three days of tennis competition for male and female disabled competitors on July 18-20, with singles and doubles events. The volleyball competition next summer will also include one match on July 20th for disabled men and women.

Other highlights and notes about the U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 include:

*Archery - For the first time, there will be team competition for both men and women, beginning at 8:00 a.m. on July 22nd.

*Athletics - Spread out over a three-day period, some of the key events to watch for her include: July 24th - the men's and women's half-marathon; the first four events of the women's heptathlon; the men's 400-meter hurdles; and the men's and women's 200 meters. On July 25th - the 4 x 100-meter relay for men and women, the triple jump and the final events of the women's heptathlon, where Jackie Joyner-Kersey set a World record last year in Houston. On July 26th - the women's 100-meter hurdles; the men's 110-meter hurdles; the men's and women's 100 meters, men's and women's long jump, the final events of the men's decathlon and, the final events of the athletics competition in Duke University's Wade Stadium at the '87 Festival, the men's and women's 4 x 400-meter relay.

*Baseball and basketball - Both of these sports will hold their gold medal games on July 22nd. The winner of the women's basketball competition will be decided at 6:00 p.m. at the Dean Smith Student Activities Center at the University of North Carolina, while the men's gold medal will be decided at 8:00 p.m. in the same arena. The baseball champion will be crowned following the 8:30 p.m. start of the gold medal contest at UNC's Boshamer Stadium.

*Boxing - The three days of boxing competition will draw to a conclusion on July 21st with the finals in each of the 12 weight classes at the Raleigh Civic Center.

*Cycling - The exciting track action will run from July 23-25, while the men's and women's road races will be held in the morning of July 26th.

*Diving - Men's and women's springboard (three-meter) finals will begin at Noon and 5:00 p.m., respectively, on July 18th, followed by the platform finals on July 19th at Candler Swim Club.

*Equestrian - The Hunt Horse Complex at the State Fairgrounds will be the site of the four-day equestrian competition, featuring team and individual dressage and team and individual show jumping. The Festival will serve as the Pan American Team trials for the dressage class only, with the top athletes selected to represent the USA in Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 7-23.

*Field Hockey - The UNC Astorurf fields will be the site of both the men's and women's field hockey contests, with the top 60 women's players in the nation competing against each other in North Carolina.

*Figure Skating - The U.S. Figure Skating Association, the sport's national governing body will be utilizing a new format when the skaters take to the ice at the Greensboro Coliseum. Each of the skaters will be seeded and teamed with other skaters to balance out the competition and to make for a more exciting event. The men's and women's singles, the pairs and the ice dancing couples will be held over the two-day period of July 18-19.

*Gymnastics - One of the perennial crowd favorites, the gymnastics competitions will be held in the Raleigh Civic Center beginning on July 22nd with the rhythmic gymnastics preliminaries at Noon. The men's artistic team and all-around medals will be decided on July 23rd, starting at 8:00 p.m., and the six individual event finals will be held on July 25th, beginning at 2:00 p.m. The women's artistic team and all-around championships will be held on July 24th, beginning at 8:00 p.m., followed by the individual event finals on July 26th at 2:00 p.m.

*Ice Hockey - The Amateur Hockey Association of the United States will be screening the nation's top amateur ice hockey players in North Carolina, as part of its selection process for the 1988 Winter Olympic Team. One of the final Festival events to be held will be the ice hockey gold medal game at 7:00 p.m. on July 26th.

*Soccer - The Duke University Soccer Stadium, home of the current NCAA Division I national championship men's team, will be the showcase for some of the top men's and women's soccer players, beginning on July 18th and running through until July 25th. The women's gold medal game will be held at 9:15 p.m. on July 24th and the men's gold medal will be decided the next night at the same time.

*Table Tennis - This sport should be another exciting one to watch in North Carolina's Raleigh Civic Center. Added to the official Olympic program for the 1988 Games in Seoul, Korea, some of the USA's top men and women will be battling for medals in the singles, doubles, mixed doubles and team competition.

*The first medal event at the U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 will be the women's 200-meter individual medley in swimming, which begins at 7:00 p.m. on July 14th. The final medal event will be either the 4 x 400-meter men's relay in athletics, which is slated to begin at 9:50 p.m., or the ice hockey gold medal contest, which will begin at 7:00 p.m.

*The busiest Festival stretches will come July 18-19 and July 24-25. On Saturday, July 18th, 15 sports will be in action, while 17 sports will be involved in competition on Sunday, July 19th. On both Friday and Saturday, July 24th and 25th, there will be 15 sports involved in competition.

HOSIER LEADS HAWKS TO FIFTH WIN

Don Hosier won three events and Phillippe Roth won two as UNCW's men defeated William & Mary 1121/2 - 991/2 in Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) swimming action.

Hosier won the 50-yard freestyle, 100-yard freestyle, and the 200-yard breaststroke. Roth captured the 200-yard freestyle and the 500-yard freestyle.

The men's record now stands at 5-4 overall and 3-1 in the CAA. Both men's and women's teams will swim their final meet of the season Saturday, at Trask Natatorium, against UNC Charlotte.

Roe vs. Wade Commemorated here in Bryan Auditorium

By Mike Young,
Staff Writer

On Jan. 22, at 7:30 p.m. area women met in Bryan Auditorium to celebrate the anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision. The 1973 decision set a precedent that was influential in making abortions legal in the U.S.

Dr. Kathleen Berkeley said that the group was there to celebrate the decision, not to debate moral issues.

The event was organized by the Faculty Women's network, the National Organization for Women, and the Wilmington Pro-Choice group. The organizers of the event said that the reason for getting together to rejoice that women no longer have to put themselves in danger if they choose to have an abortion.

Local church spokespeople presented pro-choice support agreed upon by their congregation and UNCW English instructors Dr. Margaret Parish and Dr. Charles Fort read pro-choice poetry, and Dr. Berkeley presented historical facts regarding medicine and abortion practices.

Dr. Berkeley presented a speech dealing with historical events related to abortion. The speech covered the period of time from the founding of the country some 250 years ago to present.

Abortions were legal for nearly 100 years until being made unlawful in the late 1880's.

Before that time abortions were quite common. In fact, many young medical practitioners established a steady practice giving abortions.

The impact of the law was soon after a source of distress to many women. The new law made abortions illegal, but it did not stop women from seeking illegal abortions.

The law made it necessary for women seeking an abortion to trust illegal abortion practitioners.

The purpose of the commemoration is to celebrate this important precedent," said Dr. Berkeley, "to rejoice that it is no longer necessary for women to suffer from dangerous abortion practices."

Military Science Dept. offers aid for students

The Military Science Department at UNCW has a variety of scholarships available to students and all of them include full tuition according to Lt. Col. Ronald Martin, Professor of Military Science at UNCW.

These scholarships offer three-year full tuition scholarships to any qualified student already on campus in their freshman year and pay for full tuition, books, lab fees and other education expenses plus up to $1,000 a year in subsistence allowances for each year the scholarship is in effect.

There are several categories of scholarships available.

The Host Institution Scholarship is offered to students already enrolled in Army ROTC.

Nonresident Scholarships are for students who are not in ROTC. The application deadline for these scholarships is February 27, 1987.

There are also two-year Army ROTC scholarships available for sophomores. The application deadline for these scholarships is Jan. 30, 1987.

The income of the student's parents has no bearing on the student's eligibility as the scholarships are awarded strictly on merit.

The student must be able to demonstrate leadership potential through participation in athletics and/or other extra-curricular activities such as clubs and organizations. The applicant must also be able to pass a physical aptitude examination and be medically qualified for military service.

Army ROTC scholarship students who successfully complete their academic and ROTC requirements are expected to accept a commission as a second lieutenant in either the Regular Army or the Army Reserve.

What is Pi Kappa Phi?

Pi Kappa Phi is many things to many people. Primarily it is an organization of men with youthful vigor; with common goals and ideals; having a bond of friendship among them. Pi Kappa Phi is a personal experience; the loyalty and support of our members, whether they be undergraduates or alumni, young or old, have shown that men will join and are proud of a progressive Fraternity, a fraternity like Pi Kappa Phi.

The Purpose and Objectives of Pi Kappa Phi

The influence of Pi Kappa Phi has been significant. In fact, for many it has been a way of life. The reason is that our purpose and objectives are sound and have meaning. Also, they are exciting and challenging to the individual. Our purpose is simply the development of young men. Our objectives are that each member of Pi Kappa Phi strives to include:

SCHOLARSHIP - You are in school to gain an education, therefore studies are most important. Fraternity grades, on a nationwide average, are above those of non-affiliated men. Pi Kappa Phi is a main source of scholastic guidance and encouragement to its student members.

SERVICE - Pi Kappa Phi believes in "Brothers Helping Brothers." This attitude is exemplified through Pi Kappa Phi's unique philanthropy, PUSH. Countless hours are devoted in support of this project, while at the same time strengthening the brotherhood of Pi Kappa Phi.

LEADERSHIP - College is the best time to develop leadership skills. Pi Kappa Phi offers first-hand leadership experience through its numerous programs and activities. Guidance in this is available from alumni members and staff.

SOCIAL LIFE - A well-rounded person enjoys a strong social program. Pi Kappa Phi provides that. Most important, it provides the opportunity to meet people and to develop life-long friendships.

HERE'S ONE COLLEGE MEMORY WE'LL HELP YOU FORGET.

If you're like a lot of people, your longest-lasting memory of college is the student loan you're still paying back. The Army has a solution, though: quality, sign up with us, and we'll sign off on your loan. Each year you serve as a soldier, the Army will reduce your college debt by 1/3 or $1,500, whichever amount is greater. So after serving just 3 years, your government loan could be completely paid off. You're eligible for this program if you have a National Direct Student Loan, or a Guaranteed Student Loan, or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975. The loan must not be in default.

Get a clean slate, by erasing your college debt. Take advantage of the Army's Loan Repayment Program. Your local Recruiter can tell you if you qualify.

David Robinson's jump shot at the buzzer dumps UNCW 67-66

UNCW loses heartbreaker to Navy

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

It was one of those games that's hard to swallow, not only for the players, but for the fans also. It could have been so sweet, but it turned out so sour. It was the biggest athletic event in the history of UNCW and will be remembered as one of the greatest games ever played in the history of Trask Coliseum, but the script didn't include a win that would have set UNCW and the city of Wilmington on its ear.

The reason for the 67-66 loss was Navy's 7' 1" center David Robinson. It was the All-American's 15-foot jump shot at the buzzer that erased a one-point Seahawks lead and sent the sellout crowd of 6,100 home stunned.

UNCW, which trailed by six points with 3:53 to play, clawed their way back and closed within two at the 1:27 mark on a Brian Rowsom layup. Navy had a chance to put it away, but UNCW held and went down court for the win.

With time running out, Rowsom got the ball at the top of the key, looked for an open man, faked, drove the lane and shot. David Robinson blocked the shot, but UNCW hustled for the rebound.

Charles Cahill's steal had it, and he did Mark Gary after the miss. Yes it was Brian Rowsom, with eight seconds left, who got the clutch rebound and followed with a shot that bounced around, went straight up and found gold, giving UNCW a 65-65 tie with the Midshipmen. Rowsom also drew a foul on Navy's Byron Hopkins and after two timeouts, calmly sank the free throw that gave UNCW a 66-65 lead.

Navy then inbounded, got it to half court and called timeout with three precious seconds on the clock.

Brian Rowsom skyhooks over the top of All-American David Robinson during the first half of UNCW's game with Navy. Rowsom finished with 19 points.

Guard Bobby Jones inbounded to Robinson, who broke free on double screens and earned the jumper.

"It seems like every game is three seconds too long," said Brian Rowsom after the game. "It just seems like it wasn't meant to be."

"The people hear saw two of the best players in the league, two of the best in the country," said Navy Head Coach Pete Herman. "These people were here an hour, hour-and-a-half before the game, whooping it up and they were screaming to the and. There's nothing beautiful the way it should be. Only the second sellout in Trask Coliseum history, the game was televised locally.

"I wish the game had been telecast statewide rather than just locally," said UNCW Coach Robert McPherson, "so people could see the caliber of ball that was played here tonight."

"We have nothing to be ashamed of," said McPherson. "There is not a thing different I could ask them to do."

Seahawk fans not as rowdy as had been feared at Navy Game

By Jefferson Weaver,
Staff Writer

Except for one short chant, some ice throwing and some isolated insults against referees, fans at Saturday's UNCW-Navy game were well behaved compared to other recent basketball games, both at home in Trask Coliseum and on the road. The game was the final climax to a week of meetings and discussions between students, faculty and administrators trying to find ways to control over-enthusiastic fans at UNCW basketball games.

Dr. Richard Mullendore, Associate Vice-Chancellor and Dean of Students, met with the Student Senate Jan. 26 after an editorial printed in the Jan. 25 Wilmington Morning Star told of fans shouting obscenities during a recent basketball game.

Mullendore said that while the behavior was "not representative of UNCW students as a whole", the administration needed the Senate's help in reminding the students to have school spirit, but to do so in an appropriate way.

On Wednesday prior to the game, Chancellor William H. Wagoner met with Greek representatives and other campus leaders to discuss what could be done to improve behavior at basketball games.

Speaking at the meeting were University Provost Dr. Charles Cahill, Coach Robert McPherson, Athletic Director Bill Brooks, and Associate Director of Athletics James Bass.

Provost Cahill said, "I am afraid that we are getting a label... a bad name that UNCW doesn't really deserve."

Students attending the meeting were given the opportunity to ask questions after hearing the administrators' remarks. One student pointed out that while there had been "some jeering" from the UNCW fans at the East Carolina Game, much of the trouble came from the ECU fans.

Coach McPherson commented that he had not looked into the stands behind the Seahawk bench (where mainly ECU fans were seated), because objects were hitting his back, and he didn't want "an eye put out by a piece of ice."

"I was hit in the eye once by a paper clip shot from a rubber band," the coach said, "and it was not a pleasant experience."

While fans seemed less unruly than at other games, reminders were still present that horseplay would not be tolerated. Uniformed officers from the Wilmington Municipal and Campus Police Departments, as well as Student Security officers, were stationed at each entrance and in the stands.

Announcers speaking over the public address reminded fans several times during the evening to "refrain from throwing ice or any objects onto the

"I am afraid we are getting a label that we do not deserve...."
Provost Charles Cahill

playing floor." Ice, cups, and "spirit fans" were thrown from the stands at least six times, but no one was injured.

One person was injured in a scuffle in the men's room located on the north side of Trask Coliseum, but no other serious injuries were reported. (Please see this week's crime report for more details.)

Towards the end of the game, one group of angry students started chanting an obscenity in reply to a referee's disputed call on a play, but police took no action, and the chant soon died down.

When WECT TV-6 announced it would televise Saturday's game, University officials scrambled all the faster to avoid public embarrassment by vulgar chants or signs that had begun to be prevalent at UNCW games.

At the Wednesday meeting, Dr. Wagoner stressed fans having "spirit with class", a feeling that is becoming a tradition at UNCW.

"I want to be able to bring my grandchildren here," he said, "without being embarrassed for them to hear what students and other fans say to a bad call."

Palmer will run alone for senior seat

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer

Christopher Palmer will run uncontested for the Senior Class Senate seat in the upcoming March ninth elections, according to a list of candidates announced at the Senate meeting Monday night.

In the Senate's announced list of candidates, three candidates are running uncontested, including Palmer. They are: Robert L. Smith Jr. (Sophomore Senator) and Lloyd Hinnant (Fall Representative at Large) David Harper and Quentin Murray are running for Senior Vice-President. Running for Spring Representative at Large are Charles Mauney, Rhonda Vadock, Danielle Woods, Roseanne Collins, and Erik Storm.

The Senate elected Karla Austin as the new Media Publications board member Monday, filling the space left after Phoebe Jeter vacated the spot.

Acting on a complaint by Laura White that the William Madison Randall Library would not allow her to use a stapler, the Senate reported that S.G.A. President Allen Dudley, as a gift from the S.G.A., provided the library with five staplers, for students without their own.

Senator Jeff Silverman made two motions, which increased the work load of the S.G.A. secretary.

The first motion called for the name of the senator who seconded a motion to be recorded in the minutes. Senator Bremer disagreed with the idea, saying that a second's identification is trivial. Senator Silverman also made a motion requiring the S.G.A. secretary to have any committee reports typed up and given to each senator. This motion was objected to on the basis that the reports were typed up to the senators already. Both motions failed.

Police hit by thefts during ball game

Two separate incidents of larceny under $400.00 were reported Jan. 30 when tickets to the UNCW vs. Navy basketball game were stolen from desk drawers.

In both cases an unknown person opened desk drawers, one in the art studio in Kenan Hall, and removed tickets belonging to either students or faculty.

There are no suspects in either case. While the Jan. 31 basketball game against Navy was drawing crowds to Trask Coliseum, two non-students were charged with drunk and disruptive behavior and resisting arrest.

Reports said the subjects were charged with being intoxicated in a public place, interfered with access to a student entrance, and resisted arrest when approached by police officers.

Also during the Saturday night game was the theft of several items of police equipment from a Trask classroom.

Police jackets, a set of keys, a First Alert flashlight, and a pair of leather gloves were removed from Trask Room 119 "sometime during the game," said Capt. Billy Dawson of UNCW Public Safety.

Another disruptive non-student was cited at the game.

Professors square off in arms debate here

By Elizabeth Peacock,
Staff Writer

James Leutze, chairman of curriculum in Peace, War, and Defense, from UNC-Chapel Hill and Gene Sharp, director of the program on non-violent actions, from Harvard University met Tuesday night in Kenan Auditorium at UNC-W to discuss national security in the 1990's. The program was sponsored by the North Carolina Humanities Committee, Shalom Center of United Christian Ministries, UNC-W Student Program Board, Peaceworks, and the Department of Philosophy and Religion at UNC-W. The guests spoke to a crowd of about one hundred people.

Dr. Leutze, a native of Charleston, SC, was a captain in the Air Force. After attending Georgetown University for a year, he attended Duke University and completed his dissertation. He now is in the history department at UNC-Chapel Hill, and is the author of several books.

Dr. Sharp has conducted non-violent conferences for more than twenty years and has lectured in the US and abroad on non-violent struggle.

Dr. Leutze was very confident in saying that the US will build some sort of Star Wars system, claiming that if people are given the chance they will try to build a system. Leutze said that there were two good points about nuclear weapons. The first is that they are cheaper than a non-nuclear defense system. He said that the nuclear defense percentage of the national defense budget has never exceeded 30%.

The second point he brought up was that nuclear weapons have provided a deterrence against other countries. "The threat of nuclear war is responsible for what peace we've had."

Sharp was concerned with the fact that non-violent struggles have either been left out of history books or been extremely minimized. On the other hand, he points out that Stalin and Hitler and others were all real parts of history books.

"Wouldn't it be nice," Sharp said, "to have the capacity to prevent nasty attacks from coming down on us?"

Another part of their discussion was deterrence, measures taken by a country to prevent attacks by another country. Dr. Sharp commented that deterrence is commonly assumed possible by only military and nuclear means. He wanted it known that he believes it (deterrence) is a much broader part of a country's defense. "Deterrence is not necessarily nuclear or military."

Like Dr. Sharp, Leutze agrees totally that deterrence is immoral, "...but that's the way the world is..." In the present situation, Leutze sees no alternative.

"What matters is how the Soviets perceive our deterrence," Leutze explained. While Sharp mentioned, "One must consider what happens if deterrence fails."

To Sharp, the preservation of society is very important, and he suggested that we as a nation must take another look at deterrence.

Other points of discussion were the possibility of a nuclear war. Dr. Leutze believes that the prospects of major nuclear war are very low, but the possibilities of a conventional war go up. "I do not think we'll see a nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union." Although he supports the prospects of nuclear weapons in the United States for means of deterrence, Leutze doesn't particularly like nuclear weapons and proceeded to state that he wished they had never been invented, and that the US and Soviet Union would have to work together to lower weapon numbers.

On the other hand, Dr. Sharp said countries that do not have nuclear weapons are almost always never targets for nuclear attacks. He went on to recall non-violent struggles within countries like Yugoslavia and Switzerland. These two countries, he explained, along with the government of Sweden, became the three European countries to take on non-military defenses.

A SAILING CRUISE

THROUGH THE BAHAMAS

A unique opportunity for personal growth and a lot of fun is available to you February 28-March 8, 1987. During a week-long cruise aboard the Shark IX, a 55' ketch rigged sailboat, a group of persons commit themselves to use the experiences generated by living together in this new environment for personal awareness and growth toward well-being.

The sailing is mainly in the Berry Islands of the Bahamas which are a group of basically uninhabited islands abounding in palm trees, white sand beaches and clear blue-green water. Under the guidance of an experienced captain, the participants crew the boat and learn basic sailing navigation by compass during daylight and nighttime.

Trustees okay Snack Bar name change

By Dana Kumpel,
Staff Writer

The University Union Snack Bar has a new name, The Hawk's Nest. The name was chosen through student voting and approved by the Board of Trustees from a ballot of seven names, and was selected over other suggestions such as 'The Hawk Station,' 'Hawk Haven,' 'Union Station,' 'Seahawk Cove,' 'Hawk's Harbor,' and 'Seafarer.'

The idea to name the snack bar came about during a Food Service Committee Meeting last semester. Kim Murrill, manager of the 'Hawk's Nest,' said, "ARA caters a lot of nice dinners in the snack bar, and we decided that we needed a nice name for it. We took suggestions from students and got a real good response."

The Food Service Committee voted on the seven names for the final ballots, and placed them along with ballot boxes in the snack bar and also in the University cafeteria. "The Hawk's Nest" won by a fairly wide margin," said Murrill.

David Long, Director of Food Services, said that to award voters the Snack Bar "is going to have one big party for all those who voted." The party will be in conjunction with the University Union's birthday.

Both Murrill and Long are pleased with the response from the students as well as the new name.

Long said, "We wanted the students to name it because they are the ones who benefit from its use."

Fans, from page 1.

Director of Public Safety Joseph Johnson said Jan. 26 that he was pleased with the behavior of the students who camped out overnight to get tickets to the UNCW-Navy game the following Saturday.

The Campus Police had two extra officers on duty that night to insure that things didn't get out of hand at the first campout for basketball tickets ever to take place on the UNCW campus.

A light snowfall added to the party atmosphere that prevailed for the entire week before the game, and Johnson said that officers were "tolerant" of the parties rather than risk things getting out of control.

"Where they were, they were not bothering anyone," Johnson said, "and we could keep the problem under control."

Campus Police supplied the campers with firewood and 55 gallon barrels to keep warm and, according to campers, were very tolerant of the loud music, drinking, and partying that went on near the north side of Trask. The police dept. supplied the firewood out of their own accord, as their own contribution to controlling the crowd.

"If you give people a fire to stay warm with," said Johnson, "they don't get into as much (trouble). They have something to keep them occupied."

"The police were really cool," said Curt Nichols, Assistant Seahawk Sports Editor and one of those standing in line for tickets. "They were really helpful, especially the guys with the wood."

As long as carousers stayed near Trask, and didn't try to drive an automobile, they had no problems with police officers, who kept a wary eye all the while.

However, there was one arrest for driving while impaired before midnight, and officers were quick to check anyone leaving the parking lot in a vehicle for overindulgence.

"We wanted everyone to have a good time," Chief Johnson noted, "but we also wanted everyone to remain safe."

Police hit

Police Sergeant Jackie Robinson charged an intoxicated person with damage to state property when he tried to tear a door off its hinges at Trask Coliseum.

The Belk Hall Resident Director, Andrea Arenowski, reported to campus police a potentially dangerous incident in that residence hall Feb. 1.

At about 10:15 p.m., an unknown person turned on the water in the fire hose box of the southwest end of Belk Hall.

No damages were reported.

One UNCW student was charged with trespassing Feb. 1, when he drove his vehicle into the BAH area, a wooded area on campus, and got stuck.

Another student reported a breaking and entering into his on-campus apartment Feb. 1.

According to Capt. Dawson, the student left the apartment door unlocked and an unknown person forced entry into his bedroom sometime in the late evening.

A domestic dispute Jan. 27 caused one person involved to be charged with communicating threats.

The subject communicated threats over the telephone after an argument. Those involved were not UNCW students.

Also on Jan. 27 was the hit and run of a student's vehicle by an unknown person.

While the vehicle was parked in "B" lot, it received damages to its front quarter panel sometime during the afternoon.

Newspaper shows UNCW in unfair, negative light

What will they fuss about now? For several weeks now, reporters for the daily newspaper in Wilmington have been hounding the UNCW campus in search of a story that would show our fair campus in less than a positive light. To be fair, they may not have had that intent, but they came off sounding that way.

We will make this clear immediately; we are not faulting those interviewed in any way, because they are not responsible for what is printed around, behind, above, and below what they might tell the reporter.

However, we will point this out: When the Seahawk was convicted by the Student Organizations Committee of libeling Hawke editor Lynn Franklin last December, the Star was very quick to report that conviction. They also misreported that the Seahawk had filed a "countersuit" against the Hawke for the theft of an ad.

The Seahawk had informed the proper officials a week before Ms. Franklin filed her charges that we were intending to bring the charges against the Hawke.

While our staff does not have a resident lawyer, we have always thought that a countersuit had to be preceded by a lawsuit, something that neither side has done as yet.

Countersuits also generally come in retaliation for a lawsuit, and since there was no suit filed, how could there be a countersuit?

When that ruling was thrown out as being invalid (the SOC having no jurisdiction over the Seahawk or any other SGA affiliate), it took the Star two weeks after our phone call to print the second story, and then it was a bit buried. Almost like they didn't want their readers to know what had happened.

Strike one, Morning Star. The Star's continual treatment of the Seahawk basketball fans (who were and still do get too enthusiastic occasionally) has made it sound as though the initials UNCW should stand for University of Naughty Curse Words.

Once again, to be fair, students here have been using more than their fair share of vulgarities; some have been throwing more ice and cups than could be sold by the Student Government; and by looking at our front page, you can see that some have been badmouthing the referees more than is usually acceptable.

But all that comes with winning, and that enthusiasm is beginning to take on a less coarse exterior than when crowds chanted "Bull----" at a referee's bad call.

But will the Star report on the crowd being better behaved at Saturday's game? That waits to be seen.

Strike Two, Morning Star. We all saw the picture of the Chancellor back in September, when a Star photographer caught his tears after the drowning of a student here on campus. That type of photography (regrettably) is a necessary part of newspaper, but reprinting it four times...

We'll call that one a foul ball.

This last pitch is last week's attempt on the front page to show UNCW as a school that does everything but keep on-staff members of the Ku Klux Klan in the dormitories. The Star reported on the problems UNCW had recruiting blacks to attend school here, racial incidents, black students being left out, etc., but the Star failed to mention Black Greek Week, the upcoming fashion show sponsored by the Omega Psi Phi chapter, or the student Senate's support of the Gospel Choir in the choir's recruiting trip to several high schools.

Strike three, Morning Star. You oughta be outta there.

STUDENT FORUM

'Our Town' is everyone's town

Dear Editor,

A much needed response to the "editorial" in the January 14, 1987 edition of Seahawk, which is unsigned, depicting a "normal" Yankee by a "Normal" Southerner is given. I'm sure your account is truthful of the negativity displayed by the New York couple, yet unfortunately is overshadowed by your own toward the species of north-east-raised folk.

Wilmington is proclaimed the only international city of North Carolina, less so only, perhaps to Atlanta or Miami. The friendliness and warmth of the not-so-abundant natives of Wilmington, combined with wellabove-average climate and conditions, has brought in many "Northerners" from Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, as well as the northeastern states. With them have come their energies, their industries and their input into our culture. Without the likes of DEG, Viola, Carvel, Kanki, United and many other wonderful new businesses, what would be of our prosperous city? What would be of UNCW, a comfield?

The charms of ALL the people who make this city a wonderful place to raise families, do business and play in this temperate shoreline is what wooed me, a reformed Yankee, to these parts to provide my health services.

We can't send back the European because we don't like their accent or ways, nor the Texan or New Englander. All of us make up this town and give it the character it portrays to those visitors who sell all they have "up yonder" and bring their ideas, businesses and their families, buy a home or condo from the dad of one of your buddies, which may be financing his education right here!

It is not where one is born, or raised, but the prejudices he does NOT have that helps him get along with others, have peace of mind, and lead a happy, healthy life... ya'll! Dr. Donald Reese, Chiropractor

Students deserve more than 1,400 tickets, reader states

Editor:

I am presently a Junior at UNC-W and I am also an active member of Delta Zeta Sorority. Recently, there has been an incident of game tickets that I, along with many other students, am very disturbed about.

On Monday, January 26, 1987, many students formed a line at 2:00 in the afternoon and proceeded to camp out overnight beside Trask coliseum. They did this so they would be sure to get a ticket to the UNC-W-Navy game. I, myself, waited in line for two hours in order to get a ticket. The ticket office opened at 7:00 am and all the tickets were gone by 9:30 am Tuesday.

According to reports, there were only 1400 tickets available for students and there are far more students than that attending UNC-W; approximately 6,000 students. Now that means the majority of students, not including cheerleaders and athletes, were not able to attend one of the biggest games of the 1987 school year. That is sad!

In just two short weeks, UNC-W will be having its homecoming game and the opposing team will be East Carolina University. This game will be equally important and exciting as the upcoming Navy game. We, the students of UNC-W, are told that this game will also have a limited number of students' tickets available. This matter is one that disturbs me greatly!

All students attending UNC-W, including myself, pay a great deal of money to attend college. Besides the fact we have to pay tuition, we also have to pay outrageous prices for books and parking stickers. Therefore, I feel that it is the obligation of the university to make sure that ALL students, interested or not, should be able to have a ticket to attend any games we wish.

It seems that time and time again, we students get deprived of things we are so deserving of. This is a matter that should not be taken lightly by anyone, most of all, the UNC-W administration. In the near future, I hope to see some changes made to accommodate all the students of UNC-W, academically and socially.

SGA thanks students for suggestions

Dear Editor,

The SGA Student Suggestion Program Committee would like to thank SUBWAY for their generous donation of free SUBWAY meal coupons. Without their generous support the suggestion input would not have been so good last semester. Also to thank are last semester's participants who submitted their ideas to the committee: Laura Lee Wright, Horace Love, Ed Hartman, Tina Butler, Michael Obrian, Nicole Miller, Timmy Warren, Erick Matheis, Joseph O'Connell, Brad Dry, Kim Stone, Steve Sharkey, Dristi Zeiler, Mindy Mauger, Linda Pomerantz, and Luter, Libby, and Bill.

Student Suggestion Forms are always located in the University

Union. We encourage students to take time out and fill out the suggestion form and turn it in the SGA office. We do this in hopes that we as a unity can make UNW a better UNCW.

Sincerely,
Gina Mathis
Chairman of the SGA
Student Suggestion Program Committee

How to publish your letter

This is the third time we have made this plea, and we wish we wouldn't have to again.

The entire staff is so tired of dealing with irate people who scribble off something on a piece of notebook paper and expect us to type and print the note in the paper, whether it is a letter to the editor, an announcement, or even a guest column.

For the umpteenth time — if you handwrite it, we will not print it! Our typesetters have a hard enough time without having to translate some gibberish that should have come from a neanderthalian cave wall.

If you are interested, concerned or mad enough to want to respond, we want you to do so.

If you have an announcement about your club or organization, write to us. We welcome it.

If you want to place a lost and found classified advertisement — free to all students, faculty and staff — bring it in.

Are you upset about an editorial or guest columnist? a regular columnist? Let us hear your comments.

But please, for both of our sakes, follow a few simple rules.

Watch the vulgar language. Any submissions using offensive words may not be printed. Any and all of us are prone to saying an occasional 'cuss word', but writing is another matter.

All submissions should be typed, and double spaced between the lines. Try reading something that isn't.

Seahawk editorial policy states that when a letter is submitted, as long as it meets the typed/double-spaced requirements, it is printed as is. If you spell dog 'dga', such is life. We have heard so many complaints of "You changed my meaning!!!!" "That's not what I said!!" that we don't touch typographical errors any more. Use a dictionary.

Using these guidelines will make everything easier for all of us.

Thanks.

SGA says thanks for donated pizzas

LETTER TO THE EDITOR:

On January 30th, 1987, the following letter was sent to the pizza establishments that participated in donating pizzas on Monday Night, January 26th, 1987, to the UNCW students waiting in line for tickets to the basketball game between UNCW and Navy. The Pizza Establishments were the following: Prime Time, Pizza Hut, Pantera's, Crusty's, Domino's, Showbiz, and That's Amore.

Dear Sir,

On behalf of the Student Government Association I would like to thank you for your generous donation to the UNCW student body. As our sports program grows, we hope community support will keep pace. As you know, this was a historic first for UNCW, and we are pleased to know that you took an active part in supporting the University. The pizza was well received and words cannot describe the voracious nature in which the pizza was consumed. We hope to continue working with you in the future. Thank you for your support.

With "SEAHAWK" Pride,

Question: Do you think that Ronald Reagan has been doing a competent job as president of this country?

Brian Swain, 19, (left) freshman accounting major-"Yes, he's like any other president really. He's just doing his job. The only difference between him and Carter is that Carter was weak and liberal, and Reagan is too 'gung ho.'"
Gary Phelps, 20, junior political science major-"Yes, he's done a competent job, but I think he's got his tit in a ringer. The Reagan Administration, and the Nixon Administration, are very similar in many ways. More and more, people perceive the Republican Administration as an administration that won't tell the truth."

Leslie McIver, 19, sophomore criminal justice major-"He's been doing o.k., but he hasn't handled everything as well as he should have. With terrorists, I think he has been too lenient."

Tom Brasacchio,, 22, junior economics major-"Yes, for the military and economic welfare of our country I think he has been doing a competent job."

Dr. Rob Miller, 38, sociology instructor-"No,no,no,no, to the 16th power, No!"

Claire Fitzpatrick, 20, junior English major-"I have mixed emotions. On the surface, he's been an effective leader, and publicly a 'nice guy'. However, in the 2nd elections, I voted for Mondale because over the past six years, I feel Reagan has basically been a puppet to his administration. I think the decisions 'he' makes will effect this country in a negative way during the 1990s."

Patty Krizowsky, 20, junior computer science major-"It depends. In regards to foreign policy, no. He has been one of the most popular presidents. In regards to his domestic policy, I think he has done a fair job, but he could have done a better job. All these tax cuts that hurt schools are one thing that needs to be re-evaluated."

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood
campus minister

"Argue for your limitations and, to be sure, they are yours!" Over and over I discover how often and strongly we work to convince ourselves that we "can't" do something or become something that we desire.

At this time I'm recruiting people to spend spring vacation in the Bahamas on a 55' foot sailboat. Frequently I hear, "I would love to go, but I can't afford it". I also hear people that say to me, "I would love to go, but I can't afford it. And I'm going anyway."

People like that have had to struggle to put together enough of the funds to make the trip and even sometimes to borrow money and they have never failed to enjoy, appreciate, and be thankful that they made that choice. They actually wound up no worse off financially in the long run for the short term stress.

And the pay off of pushing themselves beyond what they thought were their limits, was worth all the struggle to be able to go. If our car breaks down, we feel as though we have no choice but to get it fixed. How is it that we convince ourselves that some experiences whether it be a cruise or reaching out to begin a new relationship or taking the risk of getting involved in a new group is not worth short term struggle or anxiety or fear?

We cannot change for the better, we cannot improve our life without taking some risks. There is a whole group of you who are a part of this campus community and spend a lot of your time by yourselves in your room or apartment simply because you don't feel as though you fit into the party scene or activities that you hear about. You tell yourself, "I can't do that". I'd be too nervous going to that meeting by myself". Like the quote says, "Argue for your limitations and, to be sure, they are yours!" If you do not like the way your life is going now, the only way things are going to be different is if you make some choices to take some risks and endure short term stress or anxiety for the possibility of longer term satisfaction. And those who take this risk, almost without fail, will say that it was worth it.

How about you? What part of the way you are living is not satisfying for you? Can you hear all the reasons you are giving yourself that it can't be changed? In many cases those reasons may be lies that you tell yourself simply to avoid stress and anxiety. If you really want to make some changes, there are lots of resources on this campus that will help you explore new and different option for your life. As a matter of fact, there are a couple of folks who are determined to reach out and meet new people and to increase satisfaction for themselves in the way they relate to others. They are going to meet Wednesday afternoon January 28 at 4:00 p.m. in Room 210 of the University Union. Take a risk! Come and meet with us! You can't? You don't have time? You're not sure what might happen? Like I said: "Argue for your limitations and, to be sure, they are yours!"

Instructors appreciate motivation, preparedness

By Mike Young
Staff Writer

According to a recent survey concerning UNCW instructors' "likes and dislikes" regarding their students, motivated students were chosen as the #1 "like", and talking during a lecture was chosen as the #1 "dislike". The survey was distributed to instructors in Friday Hall, The Social Behavioral Science building, King Hall, Morton Hall, and Kenan Hall.

The survey listed several choices under the headings of "likes" and "dislikes". The first list included seven items under "likes" as a category. The items listed therein are as follows:

Attentive Students
Motivated Students
Students coming to class prepared
Student participation in class
Punctuality
Respectful students
Students that are prepared for tests

The instructors were asked to rank the items listed in numerical order. #1 being the most desirable - #7 being the least desirable of the items listed. Also included on the survey were several blank spaces provided for the instructors to write in and rank anything that was already listed. The most common thing written in the spaces provided was "It is difficult to rank the items in numerical order". Some of the other Write-ins were "honesty- students doing their own work", "genuine interest and enthusiasm", "willingness to work hard outside of class", and "willingness to be flexible and open to new ideas".

The "dislikes" category included the following:

Sleeping in class
Tardiness
Excessive absenteeism
Talking - interrupting lecture
Students coming to class unprepared
Eating in class - "crunching" during lecture
Students doing homework for another class.
Leaving class in the middle of a lecture

Again, the instructor were asked to rank the items in numerical order. #1 being the most annoying - #8 being the least annoying of those listed. This category also included several blank spaces provided for the instructors to write in and rank anything not already listed. The most common comment under this category was that "all items listed are undesirable". Some of the other write-ins in the "dislike category were "passivity", "excuses for lack of work, and absences", "arguing about grades/ test questions", and "All of the items listed are unforgivable sins in my classes!"

Many of the instructors who returned the surveys to The Seahawk office suggested a companion article concerning students' likes and dislikes in regards to their instructors.

The numerical results of the survey turned out as follows:

LIKES:

Motivated students ..... 44%
Students coming to class prepared.....17%
Attentive students.....11%
Respectful students.....8.5%
Student participation in class.....8%

Jazzin' ...

Frank Bongiorno and Affinity

(Photos by Wes Perry)

Friday, February 6, 1987

8:00 pm

Kenan Auditorium

Jazz concert "Bebop and Beyond" will be presented by the UNC-Wilmington Jazz Program in conjunction with the Cape Fear Musicians Association at 8 p.m., Friday, Feb. 6, in Kenan Auditorium. Featured groups will be Sarge Parsons and Mainstream Jazz, Psalms, and Affinity with Frank Bongiorno. The concert will feature jazz music from the bebop period (1940's to the present.)

Sarge Parsons and Mainstream Jazz will open the concert with their renditions of standards such as Tangerine and Siella by Starlight. Parsons started his musical career after WWII in 1946 as a member of various big bands. In 1953 he settled in New York City and performed as a studio musician until 1964. From 1964 to 1977, Parsons returned to his hometown in Painesville, OH, near Cleveland, and continued to perform as a freelance musician. Parsons moved to Wilmington in 1977 and has been active in music in this area since his arrival.

Following Sarge Parsons will be the music of Psalms. They describe their music as follows: "Music is the expression of the soul... such is the music of Psalms. Sometimes it's jazzy, sometimes blue with a hint of funk, or maybe 'classical' and cool. Psalms' music appeals to the layman, as well as the ear of the connoisseur. Listen and enjoy."

Closing the concert will be Affinity with Frank Bongiorno. Affinity's music is rooted in the "Bebop" tradition but with a modern day interpretation. The group is comprised of Duke Ladd, piano; Greg Eavey, drums; Danny Pera, bass; and Frank Bongiorno, saxophones.

Duke Ladd, a resident of Wilmington is presently a freelance musician and the current president of the Cape Fear Musicians Association. In addition to this performances in the Southeastern North Carolina and Myrtle Beach areas, Ladd has performed with various bands in Las Vegas and Atlantic City.

Bassist, Danny Pera, recently moved to Wilmington from New York and is the newest member of the group. As with the other members of the quartet, Danny plays a variety of musical styles and is comfortable in each style.

Saxophonist, Frank Bongiorno, has gained an international reputation as a performer in both jazz and "classical idioms." Bongiorno has studied or performed with jazz artists Dave Baker, Rich Matteson, Phil Woods, Les Brown and others. He is presently an assistant professor of music and director of jazz studies at UNCW.

Tickets can be purchased at the door and are $5 for general admission, $2 for students and free for UNCW students. For more information call 392-5689 or 395-0341.

12,000 ways We Help Students Go to College

Army ROTC has more than 12,000 four-, three-, and two-year-scholarships in effect at any given time. And each year, hundreds are available for which students can compete. Scholarships cover tuition, books, and lab fees, and pay students as living allowance of up to $1,000 for each academic year the scholarships are in effect.

Our four year scholarships may be used at 303 colleges and universities across the country. Three- and two-year scholarships may be used at more than 700 additional institutions. UNCW students can earn both a commission and a college degree with a four-, three-, or two-year scholarship. Reserve Officers Training Corps

'The Shadow Box' is an unforgettable jewel

By Anne Simpson
and Jefferson Weaver,
Staff Writers

"It isn't fair—it couldn't happen to me — to other people, but not me..." These words express the powerful theme of the Thalian Association's most recent production, "The Shadow Box," which deals with three terminally ill people and their families. It is a story of how people cope with impending death, and it expressively points out an idea we would rather forget — that death is an inevitable part of life.

The production contained some of the most impressive acting seen in the old opera house in a long time, and it was a real credit to the Thalian Association.

The opening night performance of this play was presented as a benefit for the Lower Cape Fear Hospice, appropriate since the action took place in a hospice-type setting.

The set depicted three cottages on the grounds of a large hospital; it was impressive and expressive, with partial walls cut off at angles, allowing the audience to look into the lives of the characters as they face the most difficult challenge of all—their own mortality. The decor fit the situation somehow — cheerful and modern and impersonal, contrasting with the theme of death. Somehow it reminded us that life goes on in this impersonal universe, even while people are suffering and struggling and dying in the midst of it.

"The Shadow Box" is a remarkably well-written play, and the Thalian cast made the most of it, performing powerfully and consistently.

Each of the terminally ill patients was introduced by a conversation with an invisible "Interviewer," we hear his slightly impersonal, amplified voice as the patient stands in a spotlight talking to him. The Interviewer is a professional-sounding person, who could be either a psychologist or, with some imagination, God and the patients both reveal and conceal their feelings as they respond to his questions.

Joe, in Cottage One, played by Thalian veteran Joe Maggard, is a blue-collar family-man type, who is touchingly cheerful as he tells the Interviewer that he feels "fine, just fine." But he is not fine; he is dying. Maggard did an excellent job with this role. Claudia Smith and Scott Corbett were excellent as his worrying wife and obliviously adolescent son.

Brian, the patient in Cottage Two, played convincingly by David Parker, is a charming intellectual; as his "friend" (lover) Mark says, "he does nothing but does it so well," frantically writing and travelling and experiencing all he can before time runs out. Mark was played with reticence by Hal Wells, who had a hard time standing up (as who wouldn't) to the overwhelmingly effervescent personality of Brian's former wife Beverly, portrayed beautifully by Roxanne Aalam. Beverly and Brian have maintained an affectionate friendship, and her return creates a triangle that is both tense and, at times, very funny.

One memorable scene showed a very drunk Beverly telling which former lover gave her which piece of jewelry — and there were several.

In Cottage Three, the senile and wheelchair-bound Felicity dominates her mousy, tired but devoted daughter Agnes. Jay Wilson was amazingly convincing as Felicity, and Susan King did an excellent job with the role of Agnes — it is not easy to give a strong performance as a mousy character, but she did it well.

Agnes was a character so often seen in traditional families — the least successful, least favorite child who is left with the burden of a slowly dying parent. She tells the Interviewer, "How am I? My feelings don't matter. Momma is all that is important."

Agnes tells the interviewer about her older sister Clair, "Momma's favorite, always was..." who died in an automobile accident, causing Felicity's nervous breakdown and the eventual decline of the old woman's health.

Agnes suffers a continual torment by writing letters to her mother, and telling Felicity that the letters are from Clair, whom the old woman refuses to believe is dead.

The lighting and background music did what they should do — enhance the action while remaining unobtrusive — and did so beautifully.

There was not a bad performance in this production, and most were astoundingly good. Those who missed "The Shadow Box" missed a real jewel.

THE CONCERT THAT TOO MANY MISSED

BARRY DRAKE

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

The Cape Fear area is blessed with an array of artistic talents expressed through many modes. One such art form some may often overlook is that of storytelling through songs, dances, and simple narration.

The art of story telling has provided us with much of the early literature we study. Many legends, concepts, and factual events would have been lost forever without minstrels and narrators. Wilmington is privileged to have a variety of very talented people who are carrying on that ancient art form with dedication.

John Golden is an extremely talented folk singer, song writer, and story teller who lives in this area. Mr. Golden moved to Wilmington from Charleston, SC in 1977. He is employed by the Army Corps of Engineers, but dedicates much of his time to passing on regional folklore, legends, and ghost stories which he converts into ballad form.

Mr. Golden has had a hand in lots of projects related to keeping this old tradition alive. He has released two albums, the most recent being "Lost in the Islands." The album contains old legends and folk songs. Mr. Golden combines singing and narration in his stories. His style and voice are captivating, a fact that enhances the effect of each tale.

Aside from producing albums, Golden is featured each Sunday on WHQR Public Radio's folk music program, "Under the Shade Tree" is a combination of all types of folk music and often features original NC ballads penned by the singer/storyteller.

On this past Sunday, January 25, Golden and guitarist Rob Nathanson appeared with the Carolina Folk Theatre, which was followed by The Appalachian Puppet Theatre.

Nathanson, a classical guitarist and UNCW guitar instructor, performs quite often with Mr. Golden. He was featured on "Lost in the Islands" and also contributes to the WHQR program.

During the Carolina Folk Theater presentation, the duo performed stories and songs about Virginia Dare, the white deer, and the Queen of England (based on legend passed down from the colonial days of Roanoke Island and the other colonies). Nathanson accompanied Golden on an acoustic guitar as he narrated and sang his re-created legends.

Lloyd Wilson, Joyce Greer, and Kenyetta Wilson comprise the local "Sacred Story Theatre", and are also members of the Carolina Folk Theatre. Both Wilson and Ms. Greer work for the Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department, and they organize art education and children's theatre projects at the Community Arts Center located at 2nd and Orange Sts. downtown.

Lloyd Wilson relates stories about High John The Conqueror, and he uses an array of unusual performance instruments in his performances. Joyce Greer portrays her characters with elaborate costumes and dramatizes with much feeling. Ms. Greer specializes in African-American tales such as "The People Could Fly" which is a spiritual legend passed down from the early days of slavery. Kenyetta Wilson, Lloyd Wilson's daughter, performs stories through the art of dance. She has studied this art in Washington, DC. Ms. Wilson performs dance and story on the Indian legends of Lake Waccamaw as well as other stories.

The "Sacred Story Theatre" group has been performing together for four years. They do shows for local churches and civic groups. Their stories are based on biblical and spiritual themes, African-American folklore tales, Indian legend, and Negro sermons done in verse.

John Golden and "The Sacred Story Theatre" are only two examples of folk performers in the area, and their dedicated expertise in that field should suffice to keep storytelling alive and well — at least in the Cape Fear region.

Japanese Macbeth:

"Throne of Blood"

BY ANITA BRADSHAW

"Throne of Blood" was shown at Cinema 6 this week as part of the Montage Art Celebration. It is a Japanese film based on Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Directed by Akira Kurosawa in 1957, the film (to use a well-worn cliché) is truly a work of art. The camera was used to its fullest potential. In one particular sequence two riders on horseback lost in the forest are hunting for a way out. The camera follows the two riders, panning behind bars and trees, giving the viewer a real sense of the men's confusion.

The film was enjoyable, though the combined effects of the black-and-white film, 16mm film-size, and the sub-titles seemed to have a dulling effect on some of the audience.

If you ever have the opportunity to see this film, I as a guest that you go see it. If you no t to you could take along some No-Doz—just in case!

America's Cup generates a lot of interest

Let me ask you a question: "Are you a Cuppie?"

If not, you are missing out. If you are, then you must be feeling a sense of pride as Stars & Stripes '87 (or US 55 to the yacht purist) is heading to the culmination of a three year mission to capture some pride and the treasured America's Cup back from those bloody Aussies down under.

The America's Cup (for those of you who have no idea what I'm talking about) is a yacht race for 12-meter boats that takes place every three years. The United States, which started the event, had maintained possession of the Cup for 132 years, the longest winning streak in sports history.

But in 1983, an Australian syndicate from Perth, Australia, came to the 1983 Cup with a revolutionary boat and intentions of taking the Cup "down under".

Many had tried to take it away in the past, but the Aussies had an ace up their sleeve with their boat. Australia II had a revolutionary keel that propelled her from a three races to one deficit in the finals, to beat Dennis Connor and Liberty 4-3 and steal the Cup away from a stunned United States yachting community and the New York Yacht Club.

Now, in 1987, Dennis Connor (yes, the same Dennis Connor who lost the Cup in '83) has his Stars & Stripes '87 boat in a position to bring back the Cup.

After winning the Challenger's Series against fellow American boat USA Four races to none, and disposing of the surprise New Zealand boat, Kiwi Magic, 4 to 1, Connors now owns a three races to none lead on the Australian defender Kookaburra III.

If he can win one more race, the Cup will be back on American soil and the pride in the US yachting community will be restored to the height it was at before the disastrous '83 campaign.

Now you may ask, "What does this have to do with UNCW and its students?" Well, you would be surprised by the number of students and faculty that have shown a more than general interest in the America's Cup races. It is the United States against the world and a chance to show them who is the best.

"Yes, I like it," said Ryan Tattre, a student here at UNCW. "It by no means my favorite spectator sport, but I have watch a lot of it. I don't make it a point to stay up, but if I'm up, I'll turn it on. It is so much easier to read about it in the paper."

Yet reading about it in the paper is not the best way to find out the result of the three and one-half hour race the night before. When it is noon in Perth, Australia, it is midnight here on the east coast. ESPN has covered the races, but they do not get over until around 3:30 a.m.

If you want to find out about today's race result (that occurred last night our time), you have to wait until the following day to find out the details. That leads many people to burning the midnight oil.

"It has effected me on more than one occasion," said Tony Baum. "There have been many nights I have stayed up really late and I have felt it in the morning. The big thing is, is that I have enjoyed it."

"You would really be surprised at the number of people that talk about it," continued Baum. "If someone finds out you stayed up for it, they will ask you all the details, especially in my morning classes."

Students aren't the only ones getting caught up in the hoopla surrounding the Cup, if you check the USA Today sports section, you will find loads of ads with Stars & Stripes and Dennis Connor plastered all over it. This America's Cup is the most commercial of any ever held.

Most students at UNCW are very unfamiliar with yachting terms and strategies, but if you gave a test to those who have watched it so far, you would find that many have learned a lot about yachting. Most will tell you that they know that it isn't just who is the fastest, but who has the better crew, the better sails, and better tactics.

"It is definitely different," said Baum. "I would compare it to watching golf on TV, but it has some really exciting moments, especially with the tacking duels and the changing of sails. The best is the onboard shots."

So if you hear someone talking about sails, tacks, spinnakers, genoa sails, jibes, leeward runs, keels, or marks, just say to them, "How are things down under CUPPIE?"

Win breaks a three game losing streak

Cherry, Rowsom lead UNCW to rout of American.

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

UNC Wilmington played four players in double figures to offset a record-setting performance by American's Frank Ross in an 84-61 Colonial Athletic Association victory over the visiting Eagles.

The victory pushed the Seahawks to 10-9 overall and 5-4 in the CAA in 1986-87. American now stands 10-8 overall and 4-5 in the league.

Ross poured in 35 points to lead all scorers in the contest and establish a new scoring record by an opposing player in Trask Coliseum. He was the only American player in double figures.

The Seahawks, who sizzled with 62 percent shooting from the field, were paced by Brian Rowsom and Charles Cherry with 15 points apiece. Sandy Anderson added 13 and Kevan Miles chipped in 11 for the hosts.

American jumped out to an early 4-0 lead on the Seahawks, scoring the first two buckets of the game. UNCW took the lead for good on a three-pointer by Mark Gary at 16:07 in the first period and never trailed from that point.

UNCW overwhelmed American on the boards, holding a commanding 44-32 advantage in rebounds. Rowsom pulled down a game-high 14 caroms for the Seahawks, who play at Richmond Saturday.

Tarheels the best

I don't care what AP, UPI, or any of the other polls around the country say. With all respect to the Hawkeyes of Iowa, UNLV, and all the other 87 heavyweight clubs in the nation, I still truly think that off the charts, the real power is obviously Sky Blue -- that the Tar Heels of North Carolina are No. 1.

From top to bottom, Dean Smith has built a solid, well-balanced basketball team. And when I say balanced from the three-point area to down in the paint, and being able to use multiple defenses that can neutralize any of the offensive assets of the different opponents they play.

First, let's look at the backcourt situation with Kenny Smith, who pushes the ball upcourt quicker and more consistently than anyone in the game, has the ability to penetrate and kick off when drawing a double team, and who, along with his running mate Jeff Lebo, provide the finest three-point potential in the college game today, which stops the efficiency of any zone thrown at this Chapel Hill club. And, in case of an injury, they have a safety valve in Ranzino Smith, who is adequate, physical, and mature.

The baseline is led by Wisconsin's gift to college hoops, Joe Wolf, who can score facing or with his back to the basket. Surround him with the triumvirate of Dave Popson and the Baby Twin Towers of J.R. Reid and Scott Williams, add a gentle mix of four other better-than-average players, and presto: You have Numero Uno.

North Carolina's style on offense is to move the ball upcourt quickly and don't let the defense get set. If the numbers aren't right, then they'll go to a set offense, looking to punch the ball inside to one of their quartet of 6-foot 10-plus baseline keepers. Obviously, if you stuff off, then they'll open up with their bombers from far out, and everything else being equal, they'll wear you down in the foul situation, so that by the second half you're in foul trouble, ready for the knockout punch, which usually comes with about eight minutes to go in the game. During the last few minutes, they'll usually spread it out, work the clock, and get their high-percentage shooters to the foul line. Believe me, if you can't shoot fouls, you can't play for Dean Smith.

To sum up, watching North Carolina is almost like seeing a movie in slow motion. They use multiple, multiple substitutions in the first half. Coach Dean will go with no fear to his 11th man. And that 11th man is no flake. He's a kid out of high school somewhere that, at the time he graduated, everyone thought was the greatest thing since 7-Up.

So if we're talking about the best team in the country, I say forget the charts, and the polls, and the Morning Telegraphs and Daily Bugles. The Tar Heels, to my mind, just have to be odds-on favorite.

But the real strength of North Carolina, I feel, is more than just the Xs and Os, or five guys on the court. It comes from what Dean Smith has done, from the total basketball package he has created. The character and orderliness of his program is what every coach, guys and dolls, dream of. Its style is unique.

Win or lose, you'll see Dean Smith's players run off the court at the end of a game, whether they're 20 points up or 20 points down. Subs on the bench stand and applaud their teammates, and on every basket that's scored off a pass, you'll see the guy who scored point to the player who gave him the assist.

Carolina is truly an efficiently-run juggernaut. Even at practice, no one gets in without a written pass from the athletic department. At outside, there's a special carport laid out, where the ball players can lay while they're doing their stretching, and everything is sparkling clean -- like the penthouse suite at the Waldorf on the day the President comes to town.

When the Commander-in-Chief blows his whistle to start practice, you'd think it was the 100-yard dash for the gold in L.A. From then on, every second is accounted for, and every problem has been anticipated. And I have to add that Bill Guthridge, Coach Smith's No. 1 assistant, is a complementary basketball genius.

One of Dean's greatest assets, I feel, is that he never criticizes his ballplayers to the public. He also runs the senior star system to take care of his upperclassmen, but I don't think even he can hide freshman J.R. Reid. Reid is definitely a three-time All-American, and Olympic star in Seoul, and I've no doubt that someday his jersey will be hanging at the Smith Center, alongside those of Michael Jordan, James Worthy, Bill Cunningham, Sam Perkins and on, and on, and on.

Finally, the big question: Will the Tar Heels win the NCAA? Or even get to eat creole food and go from the Dean Dome to the Superdome?

Lady Seahawks surrender to Navy

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The UNCW women's basketball team traveled to Annapolis, Maryland this weekend to face the Lady Middles of the U.S. Naval Academy in a non-conference game. The Lady Hawks dropped the very close and evenly played game by the score of 73-70.

Junior forward Sharon McDowell lead all scorers with 28 points. McDowell the second leading field goal shooter in the country continued to light up the net by shooting 12 of 15 from the field. McDowell also grabbed a game-high 13 rebounds.

The Lady Midshipmen were carried by center, Shelley Laurilla who scored 20 points. Laurilla was one of only two Navy players to score in double figures. Connie James also chipped in 14 points.

Elizabeth Bell also contributed for the Seahawks, by pouring in 16 points and 10 rebounds. Sissy Morse tossed in an additional 10 points.

Monday night the Lady Hawks completed their weekend road trip against the Lady Eagles of American University. After their disappointing loss to Navy the Lady Hawks hoped to rebound with a victory over conference foe American, but it was not meant to be. American disposed of UNCW by the score of 94-80.

One key to the game was the sloppy play of UNCW who turned the ball over 15 times. Another factor in the contest were the 12 assists dished out by American guard Jody Thornton.

Liz Bell scored a career high 32 points. While Sharon McDowell and Wanda Carroll added 19 and 16 points, respectively.

The two weekend losses dropped UNCW to 3-4 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) and 13-5 overall.

The Lady Seahawks return to action Thursday night to face Campbell on the road.

Swimmers split with UNC Charlotte

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

Both the men's and women's swim teams competed this weekend against the 49ers of UNC Charlotte. The Seahawks split the dual meet, the men winning 120-92 while the women dropped their meet 82-112.

The men's squad was lead by Don Hosier and Kurt Candler, both of whom were double winners. Hosier picked crucial victories in the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard butterfly. Candler, the diving sensation this season, swept the diving competition with victories in both the 1-meter and 3-meter events. Other first place finishers for the men were Phillip Roth, Scott Stokes, and Art Hall.

The women were not as fortunate against UNCC. Although the Lady Hawks did not win, Marti Mucci and Jo-Ann Brown turned in outstanding individual efforts. Mucci was both of her races, the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard butterfly. Brown also placed first in two events, the 200-yard individual medley and the 200-yard backstroke. Diver Lynn Szalag captured both the diving events. These three women were not able to carry the women's swim team, which was outmanned by the Lady 49ers.

The men upped their record to 6-4 overall and 3-1 in the conference. The women dropped to 2-8 overall and 0-4 in the conference. The men and women will next compete in the conference championships at East Carolina.

Honestly, I don't know, because there the timing has to be just right. They can't afford to have one of their starting backcourt men go down indefinitely, and they can't afford to stay with their run-and-jump pressure defense, once opponents have broken it down and are getting chippy baskets. And, too, they can't afford to catch a team with extremely quick, snake-type rebounders in the 6-5 range that's having the game of its life — especially if they catch that club on the second game of the weekend, when big guys tend to get lead-legged.

But if the three above-mentioned don't occur, then unwrap the trophy, paint it Sky Blue, and mail it to North Carolina. Oh, sure, they'll nab their sea a couple of times down the road, like any good team does. The undefeated season in college hoops have really gone the way of the caribou. But in this Chapel Hill club, I can't find a flaw, anymore than I can find a chink in the armor of Dean Smith's program. Where is that soft spot, the Achilles Heel, the underbelly? Where is the albatross? I can't find one.

Now obviously, the Maestro isn't going to like this column, because it's like having your picture in SI or Time, and the next week everything seems to go into the minus pool or the Bronx at Fort Apache. But I also think that Dean is now leaning toward the philosophy of a Denny Crum or Jim Valvano. That is, to get in position to be in peak condition by March, so he and his Tar Heels can Stonewall it behind the balls of ice in this city on the mouth of the Mississippi.

Harrison, Manwaring, to quit at end of season

Both ECU basketball coaches resign

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Greenville, NC - Both the men's and women's basketball coaches for East Carolina University have resigned effective at the end of the 1986-87 season. Both submitted their resignations last week.

Charlie Harrison, the men's basketball coach, submitted his resignation in a letter Thursday to East Carolina's Athletic Director, Dr. Ken Karr. Harrison, who was in the last year of a five-year contract, had compiled only one winning season (1982-83) in his five years. He has compiled a 56-105 record during his tenure, with this year's Pirate squad currently 11-9 and 3-5 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA).

Emily Manwaring, the women's coach, called a press conference Friday afternoon to announce her resignation, also effective at the end of the season.

Manwaring has a 58-21 record at ECU, including two conference championships and a second place finish last year. The Lady Pirates are currently 12-8 overall and 5-2 in the CAA.

No reason was given by Harrison for his resignation, but he did say in his letter to Karr that he had been thinking about it for a long time.

Before coming to East Carolina, Harrison was an assistant to Iowa Head Coach Johnny Orr and was former head coach at New Mexico when Norm Ellenberger was fired.

Emily Manwaring

Harrison got his start at Indiana as a graduate assistant to Bobby Knight.

The wire services are reporting that former Maryland Head Coach Lefty Drisell is the top candidate for the soon to be vacant post. Drisell has also been rumored as the top candidate for the head coaching job with the Charlotte, N. C. National Basketball Association (NBA) franchise should the Queen City be awarded one.

Drisell resigned as coach of the Maryland Terrapins earlier this year following the cocaine-related death of Len Bias and academic problems with other Maryland athletes.

There was a dispute recently between Manwaring and Karr over the playing of an injured Lady Pirate against the advice of doctors, but Manwaring did not mention any reasons for her leaving during her press conference.

The East Carolina athletic department has suffered from a series of internal problems in the past couple of years. These include the firing and subsequent contract dispute between ECU and former Head Football Coach Ed Emory, sanctions placed on the ECU football team because of recruiting violations by Emory, and the ongoing struggle by many members of the Pirate Club for the resignation of Karr.

Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week

The key to UNCW men's swim team this season has to be junior Don Hosier. Hosier, the workhorse of the squad, placed first in two events while leading the Seahawks to their sixth victory of the season against four defeats.

Hosier finished first in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 1:58.99. He also won the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 1:54.95, twelve seconds ahead of the rest of the field.

Hosier, a native of Wilmington, is the defending Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) champion in the 500-yard freestyle and 200-yard backstroke.

"He (Hosier) has done an outstanding job all season long," Coach David Allen remarked. "Don is in excellent position to be CAA champion in at least two events."

Hosier and the rest of the swim team will compete February 12-14 in the CAA championships at East Carolina University.

Crimes on campus become more violent

TOWSON, MD. (CPS) -- Three years ago, Dorothy Siegel, Towson State University's vice president of student services, thought there was something different -- perhaps more violent -- about the campus crime people were talking about.

After a vain search for statistics about the issue, Siegel eventually organized the first National conference on Campus violence, which she hosted at Towson two weeks ago.

At the conference, about 150 police officers, student services and residence hall personnel, and judicial officers from nearly 50 colleges submitted reports that, while not fully tabulated yet, indicate the campus crime rate nationwide has been falling.

But the number of violent crimes is rising.

"What we found was only about one-third of campuses reported an increase of crime, but the violent nature of those crimes is increasing," Siegel says. Crimes are becoming more dangerous.

The preliminary figures also indicate alcohol consumption is involved in an increasing number of campus assaults.

More than 50 percent of the total 350 campuses Siegel has polled also say they now regularly let civil courts try students involved in on-campus crimes.

Ten years ago, Siegel notes, most cases were arbitrated by on-campus judicial boards.

Not many people had realized campuses were becoming more violent until they met at the conference to swap impressions, Siegel adds.

It's night. It's dark. A young woman goes to her car in an empty parking lot, and a shadow catches her peripheral vision. Her mind races. Is it a stranger lurking behind a tree?

How many times has this happened to you? Well, the Campus Police have been trying to improve this problem on campus by adding more lights to Reigel Road and by conducting a limitance survey.

"The way this works is that we use an electric meter to measure the foot candles of each light," said Chief Joe Johnson. "A foot candle is a unit for measuring light. For

Dicello, Dudley clash in Senate

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer

A debate between Senator Lou Dicello and S.G.A. President Allan Dudley over Senate liability erupted in last Monday's S.G.A. meeting.

During Dudley's report to the Senate he confirmed that he was planning to use the S.G.A. as a co-sponsor for the University Program Board homecoming dance to be held at the Hilton. The S.G.A.'s participation would consist of helping with ticket sales and President Dudley's use of the Executive Fund to cover some of the University Program Board's expenses, should the U.P.B. not make enough money on the dance.

Senator Dicello at once raised the question of the S.G.A.'s legal liability in case of an alcohol related accident, and asked whether it was wise to put the S.G.A.'s name on the event, especially considering that the Senate had voted down a similar proposal to loan the UPB $2,000 earlier in the semester.

President Dudley responded that since the Hilton would be handling the bar in a room separate from the ballroom, the Hilton would be responsible. Dicello disagreed with the President's reasoning and at that Mr. Dudley asked the Senate to take a vote to settle the matter and "heal the split" between legislative and executive policy. No action was taken.

Senator Lee King asked whether a dance participant could take a drink from the bar into the ballroom. On this subject Assistant Student Activities Director Jeff Steinmiller said that if a intoxicated individual was let in the dance, then the dance sponsors, including the S.G.A. could be held responsible.

Senator Dicello then asked President Dudley why he acted without S.G.A. approval, and in opposition to the Senate's wishes.

"I felt we owe it to the students," responded Dudley, who said he acted on the demands of the student body and from pressures from individual senators. Other senators agreed with the President's position, citing student enthusiasm for the dance and voicing support for the President's privilege to use the Executive Fund as he wished. Senator Mark Bremer left the Senate meeting shortly for a phone conversation with an unnamed outside source. Returning from the call, he said, "More than likely the Hilton would be responsible (for an alcohol related accident)", this according to the same source.

Dudley closed his remarks with the comment, "I don't want to support it (the dance) if the Senate is not behind it."

Autos hit on campus

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Three incidents of larceny involving an automobile were reported last week.

Sometime between 8:00 p.m., Feb. 4, and 1:30 p.m., Feb. 5, an unknown person gained entry into the victim's vehicle and removed his car stereo equipment.

Capt. Billy Dawson of the UNCW Department of Public Safety, said that while the vehicle was parked in "S" lot, the suspect apparently used "some kind of tool to destruct the lock mechanism in the vehicle's passenger door."

Upon entry he then removed approximately $1100 worth of stereo equipment.

Then, while a vehicle was parked in "K" lot Feb. 2 an unknown person entered it and removed its bed liner "sometime between 10:10 and 10:50 p.m.," Dawson stated.

Finally, between 3:00 p.m., Feb. 1, and 5:00 p.m., Feb. 3, another unknown person entered a 1977 Ford pick-up truck parked in "L" lot and removed the victim's car battery.

There are no indications that these incidents were related and there are presently no suspects in either case.

Also this week were two separate incidents of damage to state property in Galloway Hall.

A window was broken out Feb. 6 in Galloway Room 109 and various other items in the residence hall were damaged.

The incidents are not apparently related and the offenders in both cases are unknown.

Taxes will cripple students

UNCW Bookstore compares with others

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

Every college or university has at least one bookstore, but very few are managed alike. For example, take UNCW's bookstore.

The UNCW bookstore is a University operated business which is self-supported, paying its own bills through sales of books and other merchandise, according to Arnold Siko, bookstore manager.

"All costs and salaries are paid for from money raised throughout the year," he said. "Eighty percent of our business is done during eight or nine weeks of the year, about two weeks per semester."

Salaries of the bookstore's eight permanent employees run from $10,000-$24,000. Three to four students are hired on a part-time basis throughout the year, and as many as nine may be hired during rush periods.

When a professor requisitions a book, the bookstore will try to get used books whenever possible. Used books are sold at 75% of the new cost for the same book. New books are generally marked up 28-30% over cost.

Prices are decided by Siko and Assistant Vice-Chancellor Charles King, who contact UNCW's 16 sister schools (all members of an association of bookstores) before setting a price on a particular book.

The UNCW bookstore has been in its present location since July, 1985. It can serve 10,000 students.

Ten years ago, the offices were in the Hinton James building, where the Financial Aid office are now located. Books were the main item sold, although coffee mugs and 72 UNCW t-shirt could also be purchased.

Emblematic goods now make up about $35,000 of the bookstore's purchases each year.

Siko stressed that the bookstore staff welcomes suggestions from students, pointing out that "the Greek store was expanded after students suggested it be enlarged."

UNC uses suggested retail price; NCSU has revolutionary buy- back plan

The UNC-Chapel Hill bookstore uses the suggested retail price from the individual publishing houses for their prices. This retail price contains a discount of anywhere from 20-30%. Their used book policy is the same as UNCW's -- they will buy a new book back for one-half the price and resell it for 75% of the new price.

The North Carolina State University bookstore SSmarks up a textbook 25% if the suggested retail price is less than $35, 20% if the price is more than $35.

UNCW students receiving scholarships or stipends may find themselves owing federal taxes on this "income" that has been previously exempt from taxation. Prompt action to save certain receipts associated with spring semester educational expenses may also save students money.

To make sure UNCW students and their parents are aware of the new rules, UNCW Director of Financial Aid, Joe Capell is issuing the following summary of the important changes in the federal tax law.

Effective Jan. 1, 1987, many benefits that were not previously subject to taxation are now considered part of a student's gross income for federal tax purposes. Under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, both scholarships and stipends are affected by the new requirements.

Capell said scholarships are defined as grants or cash prize awards that are not based on rendering services to the institution. Stipends are defined as payments that are based on rendering services to the institution.

Scholarships

The most important change is that a scholarship now constitutes income that potentially is subject to taxation. This is true whether the scholarship consists of an award of money, a waiver of tuition or fees, or the provision of free room and board. The change is effective for awards after Aug. 16, 1986.

For students, $600 is the magic number. If the amount of scholarship assistance exceeds $600 during the tax year, which runs from Jan. 1-Dec. 31, students will be required to count the amount over $600 as income subject to taxation.

The Internal Revenue Service will know a student's earnings from these scholarship sources because all donors of scholarship aid are now required to file a year-end report of the total award with the IRS on a Form 1099.

Capell noted that certain expenses associated with pursuing a college degree may legitimately be deducted when totaling the amount of income subject to taxes, but it is important that receipts be kept.

When filing a tax return, if the taxpayer is a necessary to identify income sources and excludable expenses.

Because the law may apply to scholarship income during spring semester of 1987, it is important for students to save those receipts for expenses incurred after Jan. 1, 1987.

Stipends

The changes in law also may affect students who are employees of the institution, most typically graduate teaching or research assistants. Under previous law, stipends paid to graduate assistants could be excluded from gross income if all similarly situated students were required to render the services in question as a condition to receipt of a degree. That basis for exclusion has been eliminated.

Accordingly, all payments to students, both degree candidate the student may exclude from his gross income the portion of the scholarship spent on institutional tuition and fees and on course-related fees, books, supplies and equipment. Other expenses, such as room, board, or travel are not excludable. A student not enrolled in a degree program may not include any portion of a scholarship from gross income.

It is the responsibility of the student to file appropriate tax returns and to claim available exclusions. Accordingly, Capell advised students to keep copies of award letters, bills for institutional tuition and fees; receipts for course related books, supplies and equipment; and any other documents

Homecoming this week here

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Click your heels three times and repeat after me, "There's no place like home... there's no place like home... there's no place like home!"

This, the 1987 Homecoming theme, is what many UNCW alumni, students and faculty will be repeating to themselves in dreams of the upcoming men's basketball game against the Pirates of East Carolina University.

The University Program Board-Spectrum Productions, the Student Government Association, and the Alumni Association of UNCW have designed a series of spirit-raising events that will culminate in the Saturday night basketball battle against longtime rival ECU.

Early in the week, Monday-Wednesday, students voted for their favorites in the election of Homecoming King and Queen in the University Union Foyer from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Winners of the election will be announced during halftime activities.

But Wednesday, Feb. 11, is when the week-long celebration begins. Our Seahawks will meet Coastal Carolina in a men's basketball game in Trask Coliseum at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free to students with identification.

In order to adhere to the theme of all events, there will be a showing of an American film classic, "The Wizard of Oz," at 8:00 p.m. in the University Union Room 100. Refreshments will be provided, so admission is $1.00;

Crimes on campus continued from page 1

"Violence exists," Siegel asserts. "A small but increasing number of people know about it. Campus residence directors actually see more of the violent crimes than police officers."

Consequently, "university administrators are at sea about it," says Dr. Michael Smith, criminal justice professor at the University of Southern Mississippi. "They don't know how to respond."

An improper response, though, can injure a school's reputation and lead to legal complications if a victim of violent crime on campus decides to sue the college, he adds.

At Ohio State last week, for instance, a woman who was raped and assaulted in a campus dorm sued the school for $250,000 in damages. The suit charges OSU officials with negligence in protecting the woman, breach of a housing contract by implying the dorm was safe and habitable, and misrepresentation of campus safety and security.

In recent years, in fact, courts have found Washington State, Denver, Northwestern College, Iowa, and the State University of New York at Stony Brook, among many others, liable for accidents and violent crimes on their campuses.

"If a campus has a history of criminal events or a campus is known to be dangerous, it's a situation of 'foreseeable crime,'" says Smith, a key speaker at the Towson conference.

"Colleges have a duty to warn people about such situations even if the administration doesn't want to admit it. The courts say if you don't make such warnings, you're breaching your duty to students and you're liable."

If, for example, college brochures depict a campus as a quiet, idyllic haven, but the campus really is a dangerous place, a student victim of violence on that campus can claim the school was derelict in its duty to warn students of danger.

"Courts think universities are important and that they should be safe places," Smith says. "When colleges discipline students or faculty involved in criminal behavior, the courts uphold the colleges almost unanimously."

The University of South Carolina, for example, was named in a suit in which a student claims he was hit and his eardrum damaged during a 1984 Omega Psi Phi initiation. The student argued both USC and the fraternity were responsible, despite the school's strong anti-hazing policy.

But earlier in January, a circuit judge dropped USC from the case, saying the college is not liable for the unofficial acts of students in situations not under its control.

While the courts usually support colleges in incidents where definite school policies have been violated, "they seldom uphold the college in 'foreseeable' suits where a student has been injured," Smith says.

example, Reigel Road used to measure .039 foot candles, but now the average measure along Reigel Road is 4.15 foot candles."

The Campus Police adopted a "common sense approach" to this problem. When they see a dark area on campus—whether it is a parking lot or a walking area—they measure the amount of light and try to improve it.

"We did the survey in February of 1985 and again last Wednesday and Friday nights. We've seen the areas that have been improved and the areas that need improving," Johnson said.

There still may be places on campus that could use more lighting but "it costs $22,000 per pole of light so we have to prioritize where the lighting goes," said Johnson.

February is Heart Month

Governor James G. Martin issued a proclamation designating February as Heart Month in North Carolina.

For the 230 million people in the United States, and especially for the more than 63 million Americans who have heart disease, the most important weapon is prevention.

Medical evidence confirms that it is possible to prevent and control cardiovascular disease by changing lifestyle habits. The American Heart Association urges attention to three major risk factors: smoking, high blood pressure, and cholesterol. It is also suggested that exercise, stress, and other dietary factors also play a role in living a longer and healthier life.

The New Hanover County Heart Association is again sponsoring Heart Attack Awareness Day. The event is to be held at Independence Mall, February 14 from 9:00 A.M. to 6:00 P.M. Heart Attack Awareness Day will include free blood pressure and cholesterol screening, and educational material on heart disease and risk factor control. Belk Beery will proceed going to the Heart Association.

The American Heart Association is the only non-profit, voluntary health organization committed to reducing early death and disability due to cardiovascular disease and stroke.

Our ticket office actually more generous than many

There has been concern expressed over the past few weeks that UNCW hasn't been looking out for its students in relation to basketball tickets.

Most of the discussion came directly before and after the Navy game, when students camped out beside Trask Coliseum in hopes of buying tickets to the January 31 event. Students complained that they had paid their student fees to help the Seahawks, yet were not able to see their team play.

As everyone knows, the Navy game was a sellout, and students were not the only ones who missed out on tickets.

However, only 900 students showed up for the American game, and needless to say it was not a sellout.

What happened to all those diehard Seahawk fans? To be sure, they did not lose all their hope in the team because of David Robinson's heartbreaking shot.

No one camped out for the American game. No one complained about a supposed lack of tickets to the homegames before Navy.

As a matter of fact, UNCW reserves nearly a quarter of the available tickets for students, much more than any other school in the system.

At Chapel Hill, the ticket office placed an advertisement in the Sunday News and Observer saying that tickets were still available for all the home games for the rest of the season.

Someone may say, "But they have more seats!" They also have more people, and proportionately, UNCW still reserves more for the students.

Remember that before you pout.

STUDENT FORUM

UNCW not looking out for non-trads

Dear Editor:

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is a growing institution; enrollment has reached an all time high and by all accounts this trend will continue. As with any organization the prospect of growth necessitates, a great deal of long range planning and forethought to reach the optimal strategies to support the impending growth.

Many growing institutions effectively plan for their growth, however, in the process the consumer and support staff of the institution are forgotten.

The purpose of this letter is twofold. First to commend the Board of Trustees, Faculty and Staff of the University for their roles in bringing the University to its current heights. My second purpose is to charge these same individuals to remember why they are here; Students are the reason UNCW exists, and forgetting that fact can lead to the demise of future growth and the reasons for that growth. In the past month I have come across quite a few different situations where student's interests were totally disregarded:

-Basketball Tickets-What about the non-traditional students? Some have children, jobs, .... Camping out for tickets is out of the question for these students, yet they still must pay the activity fee.

-The Infirmary-Not just the two hour wait and the one hour parking, but also the almost total lack of compassion from the staff. -Non-tuition paying "students" being allowed to sit-in on classes for the entire semester.

-Parking-Not the lack of spaces, but the plans to move to peripheral parking. Were students interests considered when this decision was made? What about the $950.00 parking spaces already located in the center of campus, will they just be torn up?

Each of these situations may seem trivial but if this is the beginning of a trend, what will UNCW be like for the Class of 1995? My best wishes to them.

Sincerely,
Robin C. Latta
Class of 1987

Get involved — They're spending your money

We seem to always be hearing complaints from members of the student Government Association about the lack of student involvement in that organization. For one reason or another, students seem to be reluctant to get involved for any reason, nobut the students fail to realize that the SGA is funded for the most part by their pocketbooks.

Yet, many students only get involved about twice a year — when they write their tuition checks. You see, SGA funding comes from your student fees.

This money goes into the accounts of various organizations ranging from the University Program Board to the various medias (the Fledgling, Atlantis, WLOZ and the Seahawk) and even the football club.

At present, this funding lies in the hands of individuals elected to these offices. These individuals are ideally representative of the entire student population, but anyone can see this is not the case.

While the deadline for filing for office is long since over, and by the time you read this, the spring elections (held to replace senators who could no longer perform their duties for one reason or another) are also over.

It is very understandable if you didn't know where the ballot boxes were. Somehow the table was hidden under the stairwell next to the Union Information Booth (where you buy movie tickets).

As of 5:30 Monday, 63 people had voted in the elections. Sixty-three people decided who would spend your money how and where.

Less than ten percent of the entire student population at UNCW.

About ten people per candidate, average. Who's representing you?

Conservatives are finding themselves in a dilemma

with Montague Britti,
syndicated columnist

For thirty years or more, a lot of us in the South cherished the dream of restoring the Democratic party to what it used to be.

But realistically, our chances are just as good, and not any better, than the chance of the Confederacy winning the War Between The States.

The party of Harry Byrd, Carter Glass, and Jimmy Byrnes is as dead as the lost cause of Lee, Jackson and Davis.

True, there are still a very few genuine conservative Democrats, but they are without influence in their party, and their election would be self defeating, because a democratic majority puts awesome power in the hands of men dedicated to the destruction of the very principles for which Byrd, Glass, Byrnes, Sam Ervin, Bill Tuck, and their kind stood.

These men believed in, and fought gallantly to preserve, states rights, the free enterprise system, individual liberty, initiative and responsibility, and a strong defense.

By electing a Democratic majority to the U.S. Senate in November, the people paved the way for the worst enemies of these principles to be found this side of Moscow to chair at least two of the most important committees.

Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts, a far left socialist and left wing activist, chairs the laborcommittee. A fox would be well qualified to stand guard at the hen house by comparison.

Already the "Chappaquiddick Casanova," as one of my North Carolina contemporaries calls Teddy Boy, has proposed a ridiculous and unworkable hike in the minimum wage, and resurrection of the misguided and totally discredited so-called Equal Rights Amendment.

Can a move to repeal Section 14-B of the Taft-

Hartley law, the "right to work" authorization that offers states, industry, and the individual worker their only protection from a labor union, be far behind?

And Senator Jim Biden of Delaware, who heads the judiciary committee, will be in a strong position to block confirmation of any construction federal judges and Supreme Court judges, and move the United States Supreme Court back to the super-legislature it was under the late undemented Earl Warren.

Thanks to the appointments by Presidents Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan the court was beginning to perform its constitutional function — interpreting, not rewriting, the law of the land. Sen. Biden can be relied on to do everything within his power to reverse that trend.

I remember when "Republican" was a dirty word, and I do not condone everything the Republicans have done.

But the facts of life are, if you want, as I certainly do, to preserve the system as conceived by the framers of the constitution, the only hope is for the GOP to close ranks, forget personal differences, and adopt a strong and aggressively conservative agenda.

Conservative Democrats have voted Republican for those reasons in the past, and I am sure they will in the future.

The standard Democratic plan of attack — blaming the Republicans for chickens hatched during a half-century of virtually uninterrupted liberal leadership coming home to roost, or for reacting to policies which, distasteful as they may be, offer the chance for righting these conditions — won't stand up if all the facts are considered.

The opinions voiced in signed columns in this newspaper express the opinions of the author and are not necessarily those of the editors or staff.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood
campus minister.

Someone sent me a copy of my column in last week's paper and it gave me a real laugh. I built the column around the quote "Argue for your limitations and, to be sure, they are yours!" I was trying to make the point that we cannot change for the better or improve our life without taking some risks, but we often invent all kinds of reasons to talk ourselves out of taking any kind of risks. I described a group that was forming for people who would like to try out some new ways of meeting people and doing things with new folk in order to increase satisfaction for themselves.

The funny, or not so funny, fact is that the column was a week late in getting printed and therefore gave a date for the meeting of our group that had already happened. So if someone was arguing for their limitations and feeling limited in being able to get to a meeting that had already taken place, I guess I would not be able to put up much of an argument!

So,oo, if you're one that would like to fight the argument you might put up about not being able to meet new people and get involved in activities, argue your bashful self into submission and come on and meet with some other students for a cookout and volleyball, Sunday, Feb. 15, 2:30 p.m. Meet in the Union outside Career Planning office. Our idea is to provide a comfortable environment to do some activities together like sailing or canoeing or simply going out together one night and then reflecting on what we are learning about ourselves and the way we interact. Sound interesting? Then show up!

One of the things that I have learned for myself and seen in other people is how much of what is important to me in terms of my beliefs and values is directly related to significant experiences that I had with other people or in doing some activity like backpacking or rock climbing in the wilderness. I think that there are a lot of us that learn more from experience than from reading about and studying the truths that others have learned from their experience. On last year's Bahamas trip, we had one day of rough seas that caused a good deal of sea sickness and having to turn back to Miami. Some were ready to go home but didn't. Later in the week we also had to bushwack our way through some scratchy bushes to get to a very special place that I normally can sail close to. There was a lot of complaining and yelling at me until we got to the spot and they found out how beautiful and special it was. At the end of the week we designed T-shirts which had written on the sleeves "No Pain, No Gain." What a learning! Learning to seek new experiences and then processing those experiences for the truths they teach us is one of the most powerful ways I know to gain clarity about what is really important to us and what we deeply believe.

Whether you choose to risk new experiences and activities or are driven to them by some aspect of your life falling apart, I hope that you will discover meanings and a deeper sense of self. It really is up to you.

Mama's Kitchen

A beef stew can be cheap, plenty to eat

By Claire Covert

Suddenly the nest is empty and so are the kitchen cabinets.

As I write this, there is a big pot of beef stew bubbling away on the stove. But when I began to gather my ingredients I noticed that some of my spices had suddenly taken wing and gone the way of so many of my pots, pans and dishes.

They were off, in the hands of the newest apartment dweller in our family. He needed this and that to round out his meager supply of kitchen paraphernalia.

I sometimes wonder if the empty nest syndrome is caused, not so much from the children leaving home as by the cherished items in Mama's kitchen disappearing into the kitchens of those young people entering homes of their own.

Brides, for years, have been showered with gifts before establishing their new homes. My question: why not shower students going off to school, both those who are headed for dorm life and those headed for just off campus tiny apartments with cubby hole kitchens.

Young people may take away the pots and pans and possibly a cookbook but few of them are able to take away the secrets of mothers - who anyone knows are always good cooks.

But back to the stew. I remember the first time I ever cooked one; it was the palest, most undernourished stew that had ever been created. The gravy was watery looking, the vegetables retained their color but that was about all. At least you could tell a green pea from a carrot.

I blamed it on the fact that my mother had always cooked a beef stew in a big iron dutch oven, which by the way is as old as I am and is at the moment sitting on my stove. All I had at that time was a regular pan.

I later found out that it didn't take an iron dutch oven, handed down over the years to make a beef stew. It took some of Mama's cooking secrets to turn it into a rich, nourishing dinner that could stick to your ribs.

The recipe for beef stew is a simple and economical meal. It is one that, given a few minutes and a slow cooker, can be made by any young person and be almost ready to eat when the door shuts behind a long day at work or in the classroom.

What every new kitchen needs is the basic set of sized pots, a coffee pot (an automatic one is really great, but even an old percolator can be a life saver), and a set of measuring spoons, cups, etc.

With all the marvelous electric appliances, it would be hard to choose between favorites. Some ask for a hot pot, others a pop corn popper, still others a toaster oven.

By the way, both the coffee pot and the pop corn popper can be used to heat soup or any of the canned combination meals such as chili.

They are also great to heat up those bowls of soups, stews, etc., lovingly prepared in Mama's kitchen and taken to the student's new residence.

But back to the stew. You will need a cut of beef, (not a large one - just a pound or so, except of course if you plan to feed the whole dorm or complex). I have found that a good thick steak such as London broil is better and less expensive than the "stew" beef available.

The secret of cutting all those little bite-size pieces up is: one, a sharp knife, two, freeze your cut of meat and cut it when it is almost thawed.

Brown your meat in your skillet (use very little oil), add it and some water to the slow cooker. Here is another secret: drop in a couple of beef bouillon cubes and a bay leaf, then simmer four hours. There is no need to watch it. You can fix it the night before but remember to turn your pot on in the morning before you rush off to class.

Home again, drop in your vegetables, nice chunks of carrots, potatoes, a slice of onion, a stalk of celery and just before serving, some green peas.

The secret in pulling the entire meal together: It's the biggest secret of all, that nice rich gravy. It begins with some cornstarch, a little water, and maybe a tablespoon of some nice rich brown sauce such as Kitchen Bouquet.

Mix a couple of tablespoons into a cup or so of cool water, stir it up and gently pour it into the boiling broth of the stew.

You don't want your stew gravy stiff as a board, only slightly thick.

Add a salad, a big loaf of homemade bread and serve up your stew in heavy soup mugs.

It may not be like sticking your feet under Mama's table but it is almost like being home.

Maybe these secrets from Mama's kitchen will save you from a long distance call like the one a friend made. She called half way across the states to ask her mother how to fix rice. Never mind that the directions were printed on the package. What her mother told her was to always remember that you use half as much rice as you do water.

See you next week with another secret.

Mama's Kitchen is distributed by LJT Features.

JAZZ FEST '87

Kingfishes provides a place to relax

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

"A place to come have fun with an easy going congenial crowd and not worry about getting robbed or beaten up."

Josen Bell's description of his newly opened bar, Kingfish's Oarhouse, is brief but to the point. Josen Bell is a part time English composition professor at UNCW, and he also runs a Kayak shop on the 3rd floor of the "Oar House" building.

He received the opportunity to purchase the bottom floor of the Front Street property and took it.

Bell felt Wilmington was in need of a place where people could relax, have a beer, and maybe even do a little dancing.

Kingfish's Oarhouse provides the setting for the atmosphere Bell described.

It is located in what probably housed a five and dime store years ago at 18 S. Front St. in downtown Wilmington.

Strands of white Christmas lights and hanging greenery adorn the "Oar House" windows luring the passerby inside.

On the inside the walls are covered with a hodge-podge of unusual paintings contributed by local artists.

Twenty or so small tables are arranged about the varnished wooden floors, and a stage is set up against the back wall for the various bands the "Oar House" has and will host.

The "Oar House" offers mostly Rhythm and Blues, Jazz, and acoustic entertainment.

During February Laura McLean, Steve Logan, Emily Marriott, Arkooly, and The Alkaphonics will all be appearing at the Front street pub.

The UNCW campus radio station, WLOZ, has arranged to sponsor other bands scheduled to appear but are still negotiating with Bell on specific arrangements.

This new establishment has only been in business for two months and is doing good as a beer bar. Bell envisions the future possibility of converting it into a restaurant as well as a bar.

KINGFISH'S OAR HOUSE is a quaint spot for the 21 and over crowd to enjoy a beer or two and listen to a variety of tunes. "As Bell intended, the atmosphere is laid back and conducive to friendly socializing."

The "Oar House" is a good place to visit one night for a change of pace and a taste of downtown Wilmington.

A Jazzin' weekend in the Port City

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

It was a jazzin' weekend in Wilmington this past weekend with some excellent musicians playing in two different jazz performances.

On campus last Friday night, "Bebop and Beyond" was presented in Kenan Auditorium by the Department of Creative Arts Music Division and the Cape Fear Musicians Association. The show featured the traditional jazz sounds of Sarge Parsons and Mainstream Jazz and Frank Bongiorno and Affinity and the intriguing nouveau interpretations of the charismatic group Psalms. It was a delightful evening's entertainment.

And at the Hilton the Seventh North Carolina Jazz Festival brought some big names and big talents to the city. Dixieland style jazz was featured in this highly enjoyable show.

With two such great shows in one weekend it was a great time for music lovers.

"Edmond" a story of man

Last fall the University Theatre presented "Tobacco Road", "The Music Man" and an evening of one act plays. This semester the University Theatre will open the spring semester with David Mamet's controversial play "Edmond."

Hailed as Mamet's strongest and deepest play to date—others include "Sexual Perversity in Chicago" and "American Buffalo"—"Edmond" is the brutal and probing story of a man set morally adrift in a corrupt and violent world. Leaving a wife and marriage in which he finds no fulfillment, Edmond sets out to find sex, adventure, companionship, and, ultimately, the meaning of his existence. What he experiences is a nightmare odyssey through the underworld of a "civilized" city.

"Edmond" is directed by W. Terry Rogers with Tom Macie serving as scenic/lighting designer and Caroline DeMoss designing costumes. Julie Brockman is the stage manager. Brad Thomas will play Edmond while the rest of the cast includes: Carmen Henderson, Tracy Stevens, Vincent McCoy, Daniel A. Riggs, and Lang Tugwell. Larry Price will provide music.

"Edmond" will be presented February 20-24 at 8:00 p.m. in the SRO Theatre. Admission is $4.00 for the general public, students are admitted free with I.D. For further information, call UNCW's drama division at 395-3440.

Homecoming dance will be a formal affair

The University Program Board, in cooperation with the Student Government Association, will sponsor this year's homecoming dance at the Hilton Inn Downtown.

Cost is $5 for singles, $8 for couples.

Only 200 tickets will be available, so students are urged to purchase their tickets early. Tickets may be purchased at the University Union Information Desk between 8:30 a.m. and 9:00 p.m.

A cash bar will be available for students with proper identification. Transportation to and from the residence halls will be provided by the SGA shuttle.

suggestions. Senator Dicello reported that the Book Store Advisory Committee reported that new ways of handling book returns to the campus bookstore had been discussed at the last meeting of that committee, and that he felt that the present system was unfair to the students. While Senator Dicello stressed that no plans were final, he did say that a co-op plan had been discussed.

In other business, Senator Bremer made a motion to prevent conflict of interest problems from arising in S.G.A. committees with judiciary or legislative powers.

The motion required members of such committees to abstain from voting on issues that they might have a conflict of interest. The motion also included a provision that would allow a conflict of interest complaint to be delivered to the Senate, and gave the Senate power to remove an offender from a committee and if the offender is a Steinmiller added as a postscript that in case of a lawsuit individual senators could not be sued, only the University or the S.G.A. as a group.

In Senator Gina Mathis' Student Suggestion Committee report, a student suggestion drive was announced for the week of Feb. 16. Subway II restaurant coupons would be given to the students who submitted the best senate member to impeach that member.

The motion went into debate, with Senator Bremer explaining that a conflict of interest rule was already in force among student supreme court justices and that it was necessary for committee members also.

Negative debate followed the argument that the committee members' own judgement should be trusted, and that most senators could be charged with some form of conflict of interest.

In the second round of affirmative debate Senator David B. King argued the motion from a constitutional point saying, "This (the motion) is another check, and another balance to protect the students."

The amendment passed through a voice vote.

After the vote Senator Fran Slater called for an Executive Session and this motion passed. Visitors were then asked to leave the room and for a while the Senate proceeded in secret.

The first action taken after visitors were allowed into the Senate was a motion to disband the judiciary committee based on conflict of interest reasons. The motion failed for the lack of a second.

Four new senators were sworn in to the Senate last meeting, Rossana Collins, Robert Smith, Lloyd Emmitt, and Erick Storm. All of the new senators interviewed enjoyed their first Senate meeting. Senator Collins said that she was impressed with the S.G.A. and that it had, "More power than I thought."

Senator Storm said that the S.G.A. was a "Highly structured organization," a quality he admired and that he would, "...try to do his best to serve the students of UNCW."

NCSS also uses a revolutionary buy-back system known as the Bonus Book Buck Plan for used books. If the text is scheduled for use during the next semester, the book is bought back at one-half the retail price. If it is not needed, the student gets the wholesale price.

Later, if the book is sold, the computer recalls who sold the book to the bookstore, and that person receives a refund of the difference between half-price and wholesale.

Fayetteville rents books to students

Fayetteville State University has, possibly, the most unique bookstore in the system.

When a student registers for classes, a $50 fee is automatically added on to the student's bill. A student receives all hardback books needed for classes upon payment of this fee. Paperback books must be purchased.

If a book is highlighted or written in, a $10 fine is levied, and a $1.00 fine is charged for each day the book is late after the post semester deadline.

Insight into the Zebras

Alright, fans, stop trying to be a bigshot. I want you to get to the game early for a change, so you can learn some interesting things about what the three-man zebra -- the officiating teams of college basketball -- do.

First of all, they report on the court in matching outfits, one referee and two umpires, and the main reason for this cameo appearance is to make sure the uniforms the players wear meet the specifications -- in number and color -- that the NCAA rules committee decrees.

Now if you look closely at the form-fitting black pants, you'll notice that all they have in their pockets is an extra whistle. There's no jewelry or wristwatches. If they want to know what time it is, they either have to glance at the clock on the wall or ask the home coach.

If you happen to be a second-story man, you should know that the officials usually leave their wallets in their locker, in the left shoe, wrapped in a black sock. But don't waste your time. Because even if you happen to find the three wallets, you'll end up getting a combined amount of about $28.36, and believe me, the watches will be Timexes, something from John Cameron Schwaze's low-budget line. But, please, leave their eyeglasses, cause they gotta get home.

What most people don't understand is that officiating is difficult work, which requires a well-conditioned body and an alert mind -- but which doesn't bring down a Rockefeller salary, even in Division I-A. The guys who officiate the Final Four, for example, get a flat fee of $400 -- no matter what the Nielsen ratings -- plus a per diem of $75 and first-class airfare for themselves alone.

I believe that any referee who works the Final Four should receive his salary, plus first-class airfare for two, so he can bring along his wife, and the same wristwatch or whatever memento that goes to the players and coaches. This is normally a once-in-a-lifetime deal, and in my eyes, the officials who do the officiating are just as special -- and just as much a part of the NCAA's success -- as the coaches and players of the teams participating.

Okay, back to what to look for, once you've slid through the turnstiles and found your seat:

The most important trait an official can have is to set the tempo of the game, which should be maintained throughout. Also, if there's a conference with a coach, to immediately invite the opposing coach to join in, which usually means it ends up like Reykjavik, with no real discussion whatever.

Remember one thing: The ideal official keeps a low profile during the game. He's resourceful and initiative. He has a dignity of voice, but does not suggest any pomposity. He works as part of the team, has an understanding of the game, the players, and the coaches, and he knows what the rules say and -- even more importantly -- what they mean.

Another thing fans who grab for the newspaper the morning after the game should understand: The officials are not, under any conditions, to ever speak to the news media, that is, the newspapers, TV or radio, make no statement to them. They are permitted, however, to state the pertinent rules and decision regarding a play in which they are involved. Otherwise, for the three hours they are on sight, all they do is blink and nod to anyone that is not a direct part of the game.

Believe me, officials answer all questions from the coaches with a pat phrase: "It wasn't my call!" But the toughest calls they have to make are defending the pivot, blocking or charging, and goaltending. That's because those three -- to borrow from baseball terminology -- are bang, bang calls, made from an angle and quite quickly.

Here's how officials handle things today:

The three-man team constantly stays in a triangle formation, with the center official -- who is always the referee -- never changing, and the other two umpires inter-changing positions.

The official terminology is that there are the lead official, the center official, and the trail official. What does each one mean?

Well, the lead official assumes a position of depth off the end line, and has end line responsibilities. The center official takes a position between the 28-foot line and the end line. He's always across the court from the scorer's table, and his sideline responsibility is from end line to end line. And the trail official positions himself in the mid-court area, preferably nearer the division line, and his sideline responsibility is from end line to end line.

What that means is, that while the center official never changes, the other two interchange -- that is, the leader becomes the trailer and the trailer becomes the leader, depending on which way the action flows on down the court.

What this has become known as is the Triangle of Infallibility, which to the NCAA is somewhat like the Pope. What I like about this is that the three-man teams are now staying together more, being assigned more as a team, which means they are becoming more accustomed to working together as much as possible, which I think is good.

One last point. Always remember that referees don't have to be good. But they must be consistent, so the players and coaches can adjust. Even if they are consistently incompetent, they're good. Consistency. That's what counts, if you want to be a good ref. If you're consistent, you're Michelangelo, ready for enshrinement in the Hall of Fame in Springfield.

Enough said. Let's throw up the ball and watch it work.

Men's Tennis Tryouts

Anyone interested in trying out for the men's tennis team is invited to do so this week.

Practices are daily beginning at 3:30 p.m. If interested, contact Head Coach Larry Honeycutt at 395-3253 or meet come out to any of the Seahawk practices.

Elizabeth Bell lays in two of her game-high 29 points. Bell nailed her first seven attempts in helping the Seahawks shoot 63% from the field.

UNCW was keyed by the inside play of McDowell, who scored a game-high 24 points and snatched 14 rebounds. Carroll netted 15 points, while Bell added an additional 14 points and grabbed 12 boards.

In the closing seconds of the first half, William & Mary took the lead 33-31 on a three-point play by Maureen Evans. McDowell tied the game and gave the Lady Hawks the lead going into the half 34-33, with three consecutive free throws.

The Lady Indians then took an early second half lead 41-38. But with 11:05 remaining in the contest, McDowell scored off an offensive rebound to give the Lady Seahawks the lead 44-43 which they never relinquished.

Beth May led William & Mary with 14 points and Karen Jordan tossed in an additional 11. Cheryl Sparks came off the bench to also score 11 points.

The victory ended an three game losing streak.

In other Lady Seahawk action this week, UNCW traveled to Buies Creek to take Lady Camels of Campbell. The Lady Hawks dropped the contest 75-65. The win avenged an 85-77 loss at Trask Coliseum earlier this year by Campbell.

The Lady Humpbacks were driven by a balanced scoring attack which placed four starters in double figures.

UNCW's Liz Bell led all scorers with 27 points and 11 rebounds. Wanda Carroll's 16 points and Sissy Morse's 14 points were not enough to overcome the early deficit that the Lady Hawks fell into.

"We played uninspired," Christoph remarked. "We fell behind early and were never able to get into our rhythm."

After this week the Lady Seahawks raised their record to 5-4 in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) and 15-6 overall.

UNCW returns to action Saturday night at East Carolina. The Lady Hawks stuck it to the conference rivals earlier this season with an 87-77 victory.

Rowsum leads UNCW to successful sweep of CAA foes

Seahawks trounce William & Mary

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Williamsburg, VA - UNCW used a 27 to four run to rout the Indians of William & Mary for their seventh conference win of the year, 80-58. Brian Rowsom led all scorers with 17 points, while Greg Bender and Sandy Anderson added 13 and 11 respectively.

UNCW used a balanced scoring attack and some tenacious defense in dismantling William & Mary. The win gave the Seahawks a sweep of their two-game CAA road trip, the first-ever for UNCW.

With the score tied at 12 apiece with eight minutes left in the period, UNCW got down to business and put the Tribe away early.

Tim Trout led the futile W&M attack, but the hawking UNCW defense wore the Indians down and never let them back into the game.

"The Seahawks were well prepared and played very well defensively," said Head Coach Robert McPherson after the game to Jim Whitmeyer on WMPD. "We felt like coming into the game we had to be pumped up after watching the game film Sunday night. I knew we had to be prepared to come out and play hard... and our guys did. I thought we just took it to them right from the start. I told them we didn't want to take any prisoners."

Charles Cherry led the Seahawks in rebounding with eight caroms, Rowsom tallied seven.

In the Seahawks other game, UNCW came back from a five-point deficit to defeat Richmond 56-54 in a crucial CAA matchup.

UNCW got a balanced scoring effort, led by Brian Rowsom's 15 points and was able to hold off the Spiders at the buzzer.

Rowsom scored five of the Seahawk's final six points in helping UNCW defeat Richmond for the second time this season.

With the score tied at 50-50, Rowsom scored on a layup at the 1:50 mark, then hit a jumper with 42 seconds remaining to give the Seahawks a 54-50 lead.

After a Spider basket, Rowsom hit the first of two free throws to give the Seahawks a slim 55-52 advantage.

Guard Rodney Rice then got the ball outside the three-point line, but was fouled by Sandy Anderson before he could attempt the tying shot. He then went to the line with eight seconds left and made both his free throws to pull the Spiders within one at 55-54.

UNCW then inbounded to a breaking Rob Wagner who was immediately fouled. Wagner made the first of the two shot foul, but as has happened in the past, he missed the second, giving Richmond a chance for the win with a three-point basket.

Yet the ships finally fell UNCW's way as they contested the Spiders up the court and UR's Ken Atkinson was unable to get the desperation shot off.

Mark Gary and Sandy Anderson added eight points, while Kevan Miles contributed six.

Pete Woffolk led the Spiders with 11 points.

The win dropped UR to 4-5 in the conference and 10-12 overall.

The two wins raised UNCW's record to 7-4 in the CAA and 12-9 overall. The Seahawks will next play tonight at 7:30 p.m. when they host regional-rival Coastal Carolina.

"Coastal has got a good ball club," said McPherson following the game Monday. "They've got a quick team, a team that can cause as problems if we're not really ready to play. We just need everybody's support Wednesday night."

Sissy Morse sets to shoot for two of her 18 points. Morse set a school record by going nine for nine from the floor.

Olympic Festival names five coaches

from Staff Reports

Two North Carolina coaches and two former swimmers from North Carolina universities are among the U.S. Olympic Festival '87 coaches and staff for four sports recently announced by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

N.C. State University's head track and field coach Rollie Geiger was selected as head coach of the USOF-87 women's South team. Alan Cardwell, who coaches the Mecklenburg Aquatics in Charlotte, was named as an assistant swimming coach of the USOF-87 South team.

Former North Carolina State University swimmer Steve Gregg was selected as assistant manager for the South team. Gregg, who swam for the Wolfpack from 1973-76, won silver medals in the 200-meter butterfly at the 1975 Pan American Games and the 1976 Montreal Olympics. Inducted into the North Carolina Swimming Hall of Fame last May, Gregg is currently working on his Ph.D. in exercise physiology at Cal State-Berkeley in Berkeley, Calif.

Marie Santo, a former assistant swimming coach at the University of North Carolina, was named head manager of the East team. She presently is an assistant coach at Yale University in New Haven, Conn. Santo has worked with several U.S. international squads since 1980.

Coaches and staff for USOF-87 shooting and volleyball were also recently announced. USOF-87 basketball coaches and staff are the only previously announced participants for U.S. Olympic Festival-87.

All participants for U.S. Olympic Festival-87 are selected by each sport's national governing body (NGB) and approved by the U.S. Olympic Committee. The more than 3,000 athletes and other staff that will participate in U.S. Olympic Festival-87 will be announced in the coming months.

Page redshirted by Lady 'Hawks

from Staff Reports

UNC Wilmington sophomore guard Charlene Page has been medically redshirted for the 1986-87 women's basketball season.

The 5-8 Page, a native of Apex, N.C., tore a ligament in her left knee during pre-season drills. The injury, which required orthoscopic surgery, will keep Page out for the entire season.

The Northwood High School graduate, who played in 24 games as a freshman, averaged 5.6 points per game while shooting 54 percent from the field.

Women's contest rescheduled

from Staff Reports

UNC Wilmington's postponed women's basketball game with North Carolina A & T has been rescheduled for Wednesday, Feb. 25, at 7:00 p.m.

The game was rescheduled from Jan. 22 because of inclement weather.

UNCW defeated the Lady Aggies earlier in the season 61-46 in Greensboro and lead the overall series with North Carolina A & T 8-7.

Gibson involved in accident

By Jefferson Weaver,
Seahawk Editor

Assistant Athletic Director Mel Gibson is in stable condition after being involved in a traffic accident on College Acres Drive Friday night.

Gibson's car was hit after another driver failed to yield at a stop sign and broadsided Gibson's car.

Gibson has been at UNCW since 1971 as assistant to then-basketball coach William Brooks, present head of the Athletic Department coach.

Gibson lives in Wilmington with his wife Joanne and children.

This pelican was seen winging his way back north Saturday like many UNCW students on their way back from a restful — or not so restful — Spring Break. Classes started back Monday after a week's break that sent students scurrying to points near and far for a few days rest. (Photo by Jefferson Weaver)

Friend of UNCW award $6,000

The Friends of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington today awarded gifts and grants totaling more than $6,000 to support and enhance a variety of academic and student programs on the campus. The presentations were made at the Friends annual meeting and tea held from 4-6 p.m. Wednesday, March 4, in the University Union.

Also at the annual meeting, new officers and members of the board of directors of the Friends were announced. Officers for 1987-88 are president, Mrs. Stephen Culbreth; vice-president, Mrs. George Harris; secretary, Mrs. Robert Greer; treasurer, Mrs.

Herbert P. Scott; immediate past president, Mrs. William Kingoff. Board members are Ms. Susan Walker Gustafson, Mrs. John Hames, Mrs. William P. Robinson, and Mrs. Machm Umplett.

Eight gifts were made to various departments at UNCW, including funds for the Student Wellness Center to print a "Healthy Seahawks" self-care manual; funds for the School of Education, department of curricular studies, for development of science education curricular kits; funds to the Student Development Center for purchase of developmental psychology video tapes; and funds to the department of sociology and anthropology for visual aids relating to studying skeletal remains. Other gifts will fund equipment such as bulletin boards and additional international flags for the Hawk's Nest representative of nations which are home to UNCW international students.

Among the most interesting gifts is $800 to the School of Nursing and the departments of philosophy and religion and military science for ethnomusic studies.

Also unveiled were plans for a UNCW-Friends Endowment fund for academic excellence to be used to attract academically talented students to the university.

According to Friends President Culbreth, the group was organized in 1963 to promote education, scientific and charitable projects on behalf of the university. One of its first projects was to help expand the library of what was then Wilmington College from 11,000 to 50,000 books to meet standards for accreditation as a senior college.

Other projects since then include special lighting for Kean Auditorium, purchase of a Steinway concert grand piano, display cases for the Museum of World Cultures, microfilm reader for the library, and contributions to a Wells Fargo Fitness Trail.

Information regarding membership in the Friends may be obtained by writing Friends of UNCW, P.O. Box 3131, Wilmington, N. C. 28406. Membership begins at only $10.00.

Senate amends constitution

By David Rouse
Staff Writer

Senator Mark Bremer initiated several amendments designed to extend the power of the Senate during Monday night's Senate meeting. The first amendment required the Student Attorney General to attend Senate meetings in accordance with the S.G.A. attendance rules for Senators. The amendment passed.

The second amendment consisted of two sections, and each was considered separately.

The first section gave the Senate power over the student body president's ad-hoc committees, where first they only could have control over presidential committees with S.G.A. funding. The second section required that any candidates for S.G.A. president have been a senator for at least one term.

Both sections passed, although Senator Lee King was in strong opposition to the first section. The second section passed through unanimous consent.

A third amendment proposed by Bremer would make it a requirement for S.G.A. vice president candidates to have been a Senator for at least one term, and have attended a majority of the senate meetings during the term. With a friendly amendment from Senator Lee King changing the attendance requirement to a full calendar year of Senate meetings the motion passed.

Again the Senate was asked to give money to a club to help defray travel costs. Representatives of the Racquetball Club asked the Senate to provide $324.48 for hotel accommodations for two nights while attending a Chapel Hill racquetball tournament.

Senator Carla Austin made a motion to give the money. Several senators objected to the motion. Senator Bremer made a motion to suspend voting on the issue until next meeting, and this motion passed.

Three committee reports were presented at the meeting. The first, from Senator Cina Mathis' student suggestion committee concerned the purchase of official S.G.A. identification cards. Senator Mathis made a motion to buy 10 such cards for $61.68 from a local printing shop. Senator Mathis postponed her motion after the Senate was informed that the Seahawk had "typesetting" facilities, and could possibly make the cards.

The Media Publications Board vice chairman, Senator Kevin Colaner, announced that applications for the managers and editors of the Seahawk, Atlantis, Fledgling, and WLOZ were being accepted by Board Chair Dr. Steven Weiss.

Business Week in full swing

March 9-13 will be the fifth annual "Business Week" sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Business Week events are open to the public and the emphasis is on Developing Business Vision.

Some of the scheduled events include:

Career Day will feature representatives from local, regional, and national businesses and governmental agencies who will meet with students to discuss employment possibilities in various fields. Career Day will be in Room 100 of the University Union from 9:30 a.m. - 2:30 p.m. March 10.

Thirty-seven area and national businesses, industries, and agencies will have representatives in Bear Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, giving speeches about a wide variety of current issues and trends in their work.

The Cameron School of Business Administration has cancelled classes those two days business majors, as well as other students will have the opportunity so that to attend all lectures and programs. Speakers will be featured in concurrent sessions throughout each day, from 8:00 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Wednesday and from 9:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. on Thursday.

An invitation-only luncheon will be held at 11:15 a.m. Wednesday in Union Room 100 for the speakers. Speaker for the luncheon will be Dr. Douglas Moore, vice-chancellor for advancement at UNCW, and the subject will be "UNCW — 40 Years of Making Visions Real."

Business Week will wrap up with a baseball game between the Sigma Alpha Beta fraternity and the business faculty at Empie Park Friday at 3:00 p.m.

Trespassers cited on campus

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Although students were away for spring break last week, public safety was still busy enforcing the law on campus.

Saturday, March 7, two trespassing incidents were reported to campus police.

At about 1:20 p.m. officers found an unauthorized subject on posted UNCW property attempting to remove a shrub from the wooded area of Rose Ave. and Hooker Rd.

"The subject was digging up a bush," said Capt. Billy Dawson of UNCW Public Safety, "which is a violation of state law."

About ten minutes later, at 1:30 p.m., three other subjects were issued warning tickets for trespassing also.

Dawson said that those involved in the case were found in a parked car in the same wooded area on Rose Ave.

"As far as we know," he added, "the incidents are unrelated."

A university employee reported March 5 a larceny under $400.00.

According to police reports, an unknown person removed a small travel clock from the payroll office on the second floor of Alderman Hall.

There are presently no suspects in this case.

Finally, another person was cited March 2 for lacking the financial responsibility required to own and operate a motor vehicle.

While investing a minor traffic violation, officers discovered that the subject had no liability insurance on his vehicle, which is required by the N.C. Dept. of Motor Vehicles.

Interest growing in elections

Steve Freeman, Election Board Chairman, conducted a meeting, Wed. Feb. 25 at 7:30 p.m. for the candidates running for a Student Government office.

Also present were B. Alan Dudley, Student Body President, and Joe Pressley, Vice President. Roll was taken and approximately 35 candidates were present.

Several regulations regarding petitions, handbills, signs, posters, bulletin boards, booths, banners and other campaign activities were discussed.

It was also mentioned that candidates can now use the printing facilities on campus for their campaign articles.

With the March 23 Student Government elections, there is growing student interest in the S.G.A., but not as much as there should be, according to SGA members.

"One reason students should be interested is that part of each student's fees goes to student government," said SGA vice-president Joseph Pressley. "Last semester we received approximately $200,000 which will be budgeted to clubs that request funding."

"Senators of the S.G.A. vote on how that money is budgeted," said Pressley.

For this election, there are 30 candidates, which is a fairly large number, according to Pressley. "The student government is growing as student activities are. It's good to see student concern and growing interest in how to better represent these positions, especially the executive position," Pressley said.

Bicycle theft can be prevented, with care authorities say

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

Eighty-one bicycles were reported stolen to the UNCW Department of Public Safety during the 1985-86 school year, according to a fact sheet published by that department. The bikes had a total value of more than $17,200.

Twenty-six of these bikes were not locked and twenty-five others only had the wheels locked only to the frame and no stationary object. Authorities say this is an invitation to thieves.

According to a pamphlet put out by the Campus Police, a person should chain both the rear wheel and frame to a legal stationary object, even if the rider is only gone for a short while. A case hardened chain at least 3/8" thick and covered with plastic should be used.

UNCW snubbed by NIT

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

UNCW Wilmington's hope that its men's basketball team would receive a National Invitational Tournament (NIT) bid were dashed Monday afternoon when the NIT left the Seahawks out of their tourney.

The Seahawks 18-12 and fresh off an appearance in their conference championship were passed up by the NIT in favor of Washington (18-13) and Stephen F. Austin University (21-7).

The NIT had given 30 of their 32 bids out Sunday night, but the final two hedged on the invitation to 1986 NCAA Champion Louisville. The Redbirds declined and UW and SFA accepted bids.

The Candidates Speak

Part One: The Presidential Hopefuls

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer/Senate Correspondent

This is the first of a series of articles focusing on the Student Government Association hopefuls. There are four people running for the job of S.G.A. president, in alphabetical order: Lee King, Beth Riffe, Steve Signorelli, and Patrick Toal.

All of the candidates have some things in common: all are full time students, either have been or are members of Senate, and profess a strong interest in the welfare of the students. Each candidate offers a different position on a variety of issues, and the voters have four very diverse candidates to choose from.

Lee King has a platform consisting of three main points: increased student representation, increased S.G.A. support of student clubs and organizations, and increased exposure for UNCW and its programs.

King feels that students should be consulted on issues that could affect them, such as raising the tuition to parking problems. Creating six new senate seats is one way King says he could increase the "student voice." The new seats would be filled by the Hall Government Presidents.

"These leaders would have valuable input," says King.

Also on the subject of student representation King says that it is "very, very important that everyone votes."

According to King it would take 200 votes for every winning candidate to insure representation of all students.

On the subject of increased S.G.A. support of clubs, King says he would like to see each club's fundraising burden be lowered to no more than 20 percent of its budget, with the S.G.A. paying the rest. King says that the current fundraising requirements put too much of a burden on the smaller clubs.

King also says that he would like to see Wilmington become more of a college town. Increased exposure of the campus through the media and an attempt to make UNCW a more important part of Wilmington are his goals. Within the university, King would like to see more publicity for the different departments. He suggests an academic person of the week, as well as an athlete of the week.

Beth Riffe's platform has the following key points: changing the bookstore's operating system, helping the students get more out of their mealcards, and improving the links between the S.G.A. and clubs.

Ms. Riffe's plans for changing the Bookstore would involve the possible start of a rental system, "like Appalachian's, perhaps," she says.

In the rental system students would pay for their books through a fee added to tuition. At the end of the semester students would have the option of returning the book or paying the remainder of its price and keeping the book.

Raising the value of the student meal card, for use in the Hawk's Nest, and a refund for unused days on the meal card are possibilities Ms. Riffe would like to explore for the cafeteria. Ms. Riffe says that a "charge account system" could possibly be worked out for users of the university meal card.

Ms. Riffe says working as treasurer has exposed her to the monetary problems faced by clubs. She says that she would like to "improve the S.G.A.'s business relations with clubs." Speeding up the paperwork necessary for clubs to receive money is what Ms. Riffe says she would like to accomplish.

A reduction in paperwork would give clubs "flexibility to meet unexpected situations," says Ms. Riffe.

Steve Signorelli's main points for this campaign include: improved parking, improving handicapped facilities, support for clubs and organizations, and improved security on campus.

According to Signorelli he would work to "insure that each student will have a parking space." Signorelli said he would consider numbered spaces with corresponding decals. In any case he says that decals sold should equal parking spaces.

On the subject of handicapped facilities Signorelli says he has found that their are two buildings on campus that don't have features such as elevators and ramps. Working to get those features built would be a goal of his, according to Signorelli.

Signorelli says that using the Executive Fund to purchase banners promoting various club activities, and funding social activities such as pre-game festivities would be an important part of his plan to

Senate from pg. 1

The report also recommended that Senators Ray Loftus, Steve Signorelli, and Greg Barnes be censured by the Senate for absence. Both recommendations passed.

Senator Bremer, chair of the Judiciary Committee, announced that the committee had recommended that Senator Glen Barnes be reprimanded for absences.

Jefferson Weaver, Editor-in-Chief of the Seahawk, made a suggestion that the Senate in conjunction with the Seahawk have a candidate-to-student body meeting day.

According to Weaver this would give the students a chance to meet and ask questions of the candidates. Senator Fran Slater made a motion to create a committee to help with a candidates meeting day, and several senators volunteered to help.

A motion from Senator Bremer concerning the Vice President's power to appoint committee chair heads, tabled from last week's meeting, was postponed again. The postponing motion, raised by Senator Louis Diccillo, passed through a show of hands.

In last minute announcements Senator Fran Slater, concerning her aluminum can collection drive, said, "I have not gotten any phone calls from any of you who are saving your beer cans."

increase support for, and participation in, student clubs and organizations.

A "crime free campus" is another goal of his according to Signorelli. To achieve this goal Signorelli says he would fight for improved lighting, a more efficient police force (more officers on patrol, better communications between the residence staff and the police) and additions to the shuttle service.

Patrick Toal's three major points in his campaign are the parking issue, safety, and "Seahawk Pride."

Toal says that students should be required to park in the lot to the left side of Hall '85 to reduce congestion in the apartment lots. Parking assignments based on class standing have been discussed and proposed by Toal, a senior.

Increased lighting on campus and the addition of another Seahawk Express shuttle are ideas of Toal's to increase the overall safety of the campus.

Toal says that he is concerned about UNCW's image by students as a "suicide university" and wants to increase weekend activities in order to increase the student body's self identification as UNCW students. Also Toal says that "more programs oriented towards the largest amount of people" would help Seahawk pride and that is what he is working toward.

Information Center has more than phone books

By Jenni Brown,
Staff Writer

Where can you find out if there's a 3:30 flight on Sunday to Lexington, Kentucky? Or, what's that cute guy's phone number? Where can you get discount movie tickets? Or find out what time the next production at the SRO theatre is?

Steven Gnadt, Assistant Director for Operations at the University Union, says that all this and more can be found at the University Information Center.

"A person can call up the Info Center and find out about campus and community events, transportation schedules of Piedmont, Greyhound, and those type things," said Gnadt. "We also have discount movie tickets, equipment check-out for the recreation area, and 30-40 menus from local restaurants."

Those cheery, smiley-faced people working in the information center are students who apply and are interviewed for the job.

"We have 10-15 students working in the Info Center... we keep an active file of student applications," said Gnadt.

The turnover rate is quite low so there are usually only two openings per semester.

"I love it," said Stacy Shaddix, a junior communications major who has worked at the Info Center for about nine months. "Where else can you do your homework and get paid for it?" she laughs. "Besides, it's a great way to meet people."

Gnadt said that the students have flexible hours — from zero hours per week for substitutes to 15 hours a week for "full-time" workers. They are paid minimum wage, like all other student jobs on campus.

"The worker has to be very 'public relations' oriented," said Gnadt. "When a person working may be the first contact the caller will have with the University and, of course, we want it to be a good one."

Gnadt also said that they get lots of telephone calls asking anything from directions in Wilmington to how to stuff fish.

"They (the workers) also have to possess money-handling skills because they sell discount tickets and things like that," Gnadt said.

Gnadt, being in charge of the students who work at the Info Center, interviews about 7 people per position.

Since the students receive a salary for their work, Gnadt has to clear the students with the financial Aid office before hiring them.

"Only three have been turned down in the four years that the Union has been open," he said. "If a student receives several scholarships, grants or another salary, this (salary) may put that student's income level above what it should be (to be eligible)."

The Information Center at the Union seems to be the place to find out just about anything, as its name implies.

Students take advantage of it — "especially the discount movie tickets," said Carole Wright, a UNCW junior.

Stacy Shaddix agreed with the students taking advantage of the center and added, "The busiest hours are right at two o'clock and between 10:00 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. because most students don't have classes after 2:00 or before 10:00 so they come in during their breaks. Sunday nights are the most boring because nobody's around," she added.

The Info Center telephone number is 395-3841.

Business level up

The level of business activity in North Carolina rose in December, according to the First Wachovia Business Index. The Index registered 137.3 up 0.4 percent from the level for November.

The improvement in the Index was due to employment gains and a 9.8 percent drop in new claims for unemployment insurance. The manufacturing workweek was unchanged from November at 40.7 hours. Residential building permits were down 3.4 percent.

Nonagricultural employment in the state rose 0.4 percent in December. For the nation as a whole, nonagricultural employment increased 0.3 percent. Over the past 12 months, nonagricultural employment in North Carolina has risen 2.9 percent while national growth has averaged 2.3 percent.

Manufacturing employment in the state increased 0.3 percent in December. Higher employment was reported in the textile, apparel, furniture and food sectors. Employment was lower in lumber, chemicals and in electrical and nonelectrical machinery. For the nation, manufacturing employment rose 0.2 percent during the month.

Over the past 12 months, manufacturing employment in North Carolina has increased 0.4 percent, while it has declined 1.3 percent nationally.

Employment in the nonmanufacturing sector recorded a gain of 0.4 percent. Higher employment was reported in government, construction, services and trade.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for North Carolina was 5.4 percent in December, unchanged from November. The national rate was 6.7 percent, down 0.2 percentage points from the revised figure for the previous month.

The First Wachovia North Carolina Business Index measures the level of economic activity in North Carolina on a monthly basis. Using 1976 as a base of 100, it reflects indicators of employment, industrial production and construction activity in the state's economy. Data are adjusted to smooth the effects of historical seasonal factors and certain statistical aberrations.

UNCW-ECU rugby clubs clash

The UNCW Seahawk Rugby squad defeated archrivals ECU 18-7 in last Saturday's season opener. Scorers for the Seahawks were Josh Taylor with one try and Tommy Carter who stacked the point spread with one try, one conversion, two penalty goals and a drop kick from 20 meters out. Saturday's game was marred by dirty play and flaring tempers, typical of the UNCW - ECU rivalry. John "Rocky" Burnette's lunatic ravings at full back both unnerved the ECU pack and backfield and created a diversion that allowed UNCW to utilize the speed and aggressiveness of rugby greats Frank Sewell, Rusty Schenk, Mark Foster and rookie Chris Wagner.

Saturday Feb. 21 the Seahawks will be traveling to Charleston to take on the Citadel who will be represented by a very physical squad typical of most military rugby teams. The Seahawks will be concentrating on gaining position of lose balls by setting strong rucks and mauls.

Bikes from Page one

student's bike is a hot minute," said Regina Lawson, of the Campus Police Dept.

She said a lot of joyriding goes on at UNCW and sometimes bikes are found parked across campus at the end of a semester. Ms. Lawson also said, "UNCW has a climate and geography that appeal to bike riders."

If a student is caught stealing a bike, the police have two options. The incident can be processed through the Dean of Students Office or the police department downtown.

Registration of bicycles is provided free of charge by the UNCW Department of Public Safety. This service provides positive identification if a bike is ever stolen. It is a permanent record that can be used by police all over the United States.

Registration of bikes at UNCW doubled during the fall of 1986 over the previous year.

Ms. Lawson said if one bike is stolen it is generally the work of a student, but if a large numbers of bikes are stolen overnight it is usually a well planned scheme developed by someone off campus.

"Many times students don't realize bikes have been stolen until they go back to ride (the bike) after the weather turned warm again," commented Ms. Lawson.

A good general rule is never leave a bicycle chained to an outside rack for a long time. If leaving campus for a weekend or holiday, put the bike in a safe place, such as a dorm room or apartment.

Lawson said sometimes police impound bicycles for safekeeping. These are bikes seen left unlocked for a few days when an official feels it is in danger of being stolen.

When a student discovers it missing and reports it to police, the bike is returned free of charge.

Impounded bicycles are kept for six months unless they are claimed or a serial number check reveals to whom the bike is registered.

Twenty-seven bikes were sold at the Wilmington City Auction December 2, 1986. These were unclaimed bikes that had not been reported stolen.

Films offered in Women's History Month

In observance of Women's History Month, UNCW is offering a feminist film festival throughout March. Three films will be shown followed by discussions led by UNCW faculty. The films are free and the public is invited to attend.

The series displays this year's theme, "The Myth of Sisterhood." A French film, "Entre Nous," will be shown at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, Mar. 11. "Hurry Sundown," starring Jane Fonda, will be shown at 7:30 p.m., Wednesday, Mar. 18. On Wednesday, Mar. 25, "Trip to Bountiful," starring Geraldine Page in her academy award winning performance, will finish out the film festival. Please join us for an exciting look into the development of sisterhood during the month of March.

In celebration of Women's History Month, UNCW is offering a lecture at 7:30 pm, Monday, Mar. 23 in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall, by Dr. Jane Dehart Mathews, professor of history from UNC-Chapel Hill. Her topic will be "The Threat of Equality: The Equal Rights Amendment and the Myth of Female Solidarity." The lecture is free and the public is invited to attend.

Residence Life meet successful

Feb. 20-22, was filled with plenty of educational and recreational activities for nine UNCW students who attended the annual North Carolina Association of Residence Halls (NCARH) conference in Greenville, North Carolina.

The conference, which was planned and operated mostly by East Carolina University students, was held as a meeting for residence hall associations from the following state universities: ECU, Western Carolina, Wake Forest, UNC-Charlotte, UNC-Greensboro, Elon College, Appalachian State, Lenoir-Rhyne College, and, of course, UNCW. Delegates from UNCW who participated were hall government officers, resident assistants, and other interested students. Advising them throughout the conference was James "Jim" Anderson, Area Coordinator in Residence Life.

"The conference provided us with a great opportunity to learn some hints about various leadership skills," Anderson added, "which all of us can use in our residence halls."

Living accommodations were arranged at the Greenville Holiday Inn and various seminars were held on the ECU campus. Friday night's activities included a pizza party at the Holiday and a movie, "About Last Night," at ECU's Mendenhall building. After the movie, students returned to the hotel for a casino party and auction that lasted until early Saturday morning.

Saturday's daytime activities included a 9:00 a.m. breakfast and opening assembly at Mendenhall and a day full of seminars and meetings for all delegates. One such program was "Creative Advertising," presented by Gordon Rankin, a resident director from Elon College. One delegate, Kimmie Lowery, from New Hall '85, enjoyed this one in particular.

"I thought the program was informative, as well as entertaining," said Lowery, "one of the biggest problems a leader can have is publicizing programs for residence hall students and Gordon offered some really helpful suggestions."

The weekend's activities basically culminated in Saturday night's banquet and semi-formal dance themed "Feel the Pulse!" During the banquet, awards were presented to the Best program and the Most Spirited school representation, and Cynthia Kittrell, of ECU Alumni Affairs, delivered an inspirational speech entitled "You Are The Best."

Sunday morning after an optional, non-denominational worship service, delegates said their final good-byes and departed en route to their home-schools all over the state.

"I enjoyed the conference," said Margaret Eaddy, a Belk Hall resident, "because I learned a lot and I had a lot of fun. Now I'm ready to go back and share what I learned."

Fundamentalists win a round

For those of you who didn't get the (or didn't want) the chance to see the national news over the holidays, you may be surprised to find out that a Supreme Court judge in Alabama has banned some two dozen books from use in public schools because said books are supposedly reporting "humanistic religion."

Humanism is defined as reliance upon one's self instead of a deity.

The judge decided — much to the glee of those who would force a theocratic police state down the throats of Americans — that these books in question were tearing down the lifestyles all good Christian parents in Alabama and elsewhere should be teaching their children at home.

An excerpt from one of the books (written by a local public school teacher who said in a Wilmington Star-News interview that she was a professing Christian) advised students to be cautious about new ideas, but to be openminded toward values different than their own.

This excerpt was but one of many that caused the judge to decide that the books should be banned from the public schools in Alabama because they undermine the teachings the children get at home. (As an instructor at UNCW says, "If your faith can be shaken, it may not be much of a faith....")

To say this is an outrage and a crime is a grotesque understatement. A travesty is possibly more appropriate, but it doesn't really make a difference what name you tack onto this "landmark" decision.

What matters is the people who will be hurt by this action.

We are not referring to the teachers and authors who have been insulted by the removal of their works from shelves and classrooms; we are not referring to the loss of revenues that will be suffered by author and publisher alike.

We are referring to the fact that teenagers and children who don't really understand what all the hubbub is about and are in school under the pretext of becoming educated about the world around them will be the ones who are punished so severely by the very people who are so loudly claiming what good people they are for saving these children from the evils of open-minded thought.

And, as many other episodes throughout history have shown, the worst and bloodiest battles that injured were fought in the name of religion.

There are too many denominations that have different beliefs to have religion of any but the most basic kind taught in the public schools without insulting someone's faith (and we know what that can cause), so therefore it should not be addressed in the schools.

However, this is not to say that educators should ban all religious practices from the hallowed halls of learning. Students should have the option to practice or not to practice if they wish, but it should not be decided who or how or when by the administrators.

It should be the church's job to teach of a deity; it should be the school's job to educate about what is necessary to survive in this world; and the parents should be the only thing in between, teaching a bit of both.

None of the three should attempt to decide what the other should do, or chaos will surely erupt.

The judges themselves should stay out of the classrooms, but they have repeatedly proven themselves incapable of keeping their noses out of that sensitive area or any other.

Perhaps we should close with something said by one of the students interviewed by NBC news as he turned in his "subversive" textbooks.

"I don't see why everybody's so upset. My teacher never said nothing about humanism."

"I don't even know what that is."

Early Spring Break causes woes

For the past weeks, we have heard over and over:

"Why is Spring Break so early?"

Indeed, why. Speculations run from the administration figuring fewer students will go to Florida and party less than if it were warmer to the idea that we would get out of school earlier — most of you have probably heard the latter since your preschool years.

Many if not most schools have their break a week to two weeks after ours. This time is later in the spring; temperatures are more springy (meaning you don't freeze if you get wet) and a later break doesn't make for quite so long a period before school is out.

Also, according to both officials here and at other universities, student stress is only beginning its annual upsurge. A later break — even only a week or so later — could conceivably give everyone that rest period they need before suffering mass nervous breakdowns.

For instance, one group that suffers worst is comprised of education majors who are finishing their student teaching terms in area schools.

We have two future teachers on our staff at the Seahawk; neither one will have any appreciable time off from either their studies here or from their student teaching, since few elementary and high schools have a break scheduled at the same time as our own beloved spring break.

Don't get us wrong — we are very happy to have at least the time off that we do, considering some schools such as Brigham Young University in Utah have no breaks between the beginning of spring semester and final exams.

But a more standard time be scheduled?

Few UNCW students have much in common with the motorcycle gangs they rubbed elbows with this past week in Florida, and while our weather here was warm, it still wasn't quite beach weather.

STUDENT FORUM

Ms. Mathis says thanks

Dear Editor,

I would like to partly direct this letter to all the participants in the suggestion contest. It was a successful turnout for the SGA suggestion committee. Fresh ideas were submitted and they will be passed on to the proper authorities to be considered. However, we did get our share of comical suggestions, and I implore from the students who fill out the suggestion forms not to subject this humble pen with suggestions reeking with irrelevance. I, however, am not against suggestions that will be 'seriously' significant to UNCW. If any student would like to discuss their ideas with me, I will be available between the hours of 11-12 MWF. I will be in the SGA office which is located in room 200 upstairs in the University Union. (Come up and chat a spell with me!)

Incidentally, the winners of the Suggestion contest were Linda Carlisle, Mike Pena, Gina Banta, Katharine Medlin, and Ginger Morgan. I would like to thank the latter group and the rest of the suggestion participants for their input and would like to further invite other students to fill out a suggestion form. The forms are always located in room 200 or at the information desk in the University Union.

Reader asks "Is this where we're headed?"

In the past few days, there has been a great deal of fuss over Judge Hand's decision to rule a mere thirty-one books be banned in the state of Alabama. These terrible books were removed because they taught the "religious" view of "secular humanism". Hand and a group of concerned parents did not want this anti-Christian religion being taught to their young formidable children.

Maybe they could just round up a whole corral of these heretics (oh, excuse me, I meant to say humanist teachers) and tie them to a stake, maybe even in the town square, pile all the copies of the thirty-one books below them and let them all burn. Then they can burn in hell for teaching non-Christian ideals. That would teach them.

Now this "religion" known as secular humanism is an intellectual and cultural movement that places the emphasis on man and not religion. And correct me if I'm wrong but doesn't "secular" mean not religious? I guess the distinction comes with the key words being "intellectual" and "cultural".

Now if these Bible thumping fundamentalist are mad because this "religion" is being taught, don't they realize that neither of the words used to describe this religion have nothing to do with religion at all? However, as a general rule, secular humanists don't burn books or even say that if large sums of money (say 4.5 million) aren't raised then they will be sacrificed.

I may be alone in my views, but I violently oppose this blatant step towards censorship. As an English major, I have read some fine outstanding Christian literature and I've read some taboo(?) books (one of my favorites being Catcher in the Rye) and feel that it's nice to see more than one side to the world. I also like the idea of having all literature available to me rather than just what the Moral Majority sees fit. Novels such as the aforementioned J.D. Salinger novel are under fire (not literally — yet) for teaching or promoting ideas that undermine good morals and certain religious beliefs.

Remember Dorothy and Toto? I just can't believe that these familiar childhood characters would run through a field of drugs (Nancy says "Just say no") and make deals with witches and wizards just to get back to Kansas. EVIL! WITCH! BURN! I wish we would learn from witch hunts, the red scare, and oppressed countries that we have something very special — free press. We can read or write, compliment or criticize. Now people want to regulate this freedom. George Orwell summed it up in his book 1984, "Strength through ignorance". Is this where we are headed? I would like to think we aren't. Wake up and be aware of what's going on around you. Censorship is only a step closer to strength — through ignorance. Be a free thinking individual and decide for yourself if you want people telling you what you can and cannot read.

The alternatives were unthinkable

View From Right Field

By Montague Britt

Let me make it very clear before I get started, I am not about to leave Ronald Reagan and I've never regretted voting for him twice.

If I had been expecting a perfect president I wouldn't ever have voted for anybody. There was only one perfect man and they crucified him.

With the exception of Herbert Hoover, who had enough problems on the domestic front to keep him occupied, every president in the last 60 years has been in trouble over foreign policy, and every one has made a few behind-closed-door deals.

Some of them haven't worked out well obviously, but some have been almost essential to our survival. And most of them would have failed had the details been known to the public before the proper time.

Yes, it does indeed look like the President has used some very bad judgement or at best, some members of his administration have gotten away with doing so, and I am not defending any such things.

But a fair analysis, balancing the good done by the Reagan administration against the bad, will surely result in giving the incumbent a very high mark.

If I didn't think so, we need only to look at the alternatives to make President Reagan look good no matter what he had done.

Whatever Jimmy Carter may have been at heart, and I have never questioned his being a sincere man, a Christian and a patriotic American, he had been completely taken over by the left-wing elements that destroy would our traditions and institutions if they could — organized labor, women's lib and the rest; and he system were not to be trusted, and the only hope for the country lay insulted the men who gave their lives or limbs for their country by his glorifying of the draft dodgers.

Walter Mondale was a gentleman and a fine man, but he was obviously convinced that the states and the private enterprise in a socialist government with power concentrated in Washington.

And there's never been a doubt in my mind that Richard Nixon's contributions far outweighed Watergate or any other wrong he may have done, but again, if there had been, a look at the alternatives would have been enough to convince me he was by far the best we could have done.

Nixon put four justices on the supreme court, two of them, William Rehnquist, presently chief justice and Warren Burger, retired chief justice, outstanding constitutionalists, the others

Lewis Powell and Harry Blackmun, middle or "swing" men.

Hubert Humphrey, sincere as he was in his beliefs, would have given us another "Warren Court," with left-wing activists joining Thurgood Marshall and William Brennan.

This would have resulted in a considerable saving for the states, since they could have closed down the state capitols and would have had no further need for state legislatures.

And George McGovern's election would have been the best news the communist countries had heard in many a year.

No, we haven't had perfect presidents, and we never will, but I still think we made the best possible choices in 1968, 1972, 1980 and 1984.

Veteran speaks out against 'Platoon'

I recently saw the movie "Platoon". As a Vietnam veteran who spent 12 months in the Infantry (Special Forces) from December 1968 to December 1969, I took personal offense at the way this movie depicted the American combat soldier. Normally, I would simply ignore such a mischaracterization, but "Platoon" has received so much media attention as to "true-to-life" glimpses of what combat was like from a "grunt's" viewpoint, that I am compelled to speak out.

I cannot allow my family, my friends, my colleagues, and particularly my students to misperceive me or any other American who fought in Vietnam as an undisciplined animal who committed abhorrent acts against non-combatants, children, POW's, or other Americans. The American combat soldier did not dishonor his country, or his family.

Having participated in many ground "sweep" operations in areas populated by civilians, not once did I see a non-combatant mistreated in any way, much less witness an old woman shot at point-blank range, a child brutally raped, or a half-blind cripple have his brains beat out of his skull. Yes, villages were torched, but only after civilians were safely removed or were not present to begin with. We went harsh circumstances imaginable to retrieve our dead and wounded.

For those who have seen or will see this movie, I strongly urge you to bear in mind that it is a profit-of it to remain under the skin and become infectious. In another scene, a scared lieutenant mistakenly called in artillery on his own men as they were pinned down in an ambush. From the first day of Officers Candidate School or ROTC, candidates learn to "walk in" artillery to its desired location of known geographical coordinates or a smoke round. I never saw an all-out "fire-for-effect" mission called in at first contact with the enemy even under the most severe conditions.

In closing, I hope these comments somewhat balance out the negative image of the American soldier who fought in Vietnam as portrayed in this spectacularly violent movie. I have great respect for my fellow veteran, and believe that "Platoon" does nothing but tarnish his honor by capitalizing on the sensational.

to great lengths to warn civilians living in "free-fire" zones to leave in order to avoid getting caught in a crossfire.

Additionally, not once did I see a POW tortured or in any way treated other than with the dignity available under the existing conditions. Finally, not once did I see or personally hear of any American soldier killing another American soldier, or leaving him for dead. Quite the contrary, we would exert every effort at very high risk under some of the making venture played out by some very highly paid actors. While it may represent some form of artistic achievement, the movie is not entertaining and contains many scenes that are technically inaccurate. For example, one would not remove a leech from his face by pulling it off with his fingers. Application of mosquito repellent or a hot match directly to the bloodsucker would cause it to relax its suction and totally drop off. Pulling a leech off could cause part

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood campus minister

One of the things that I appreciate about working in a university setting is its unique rhythm. After twenty-one years I have come to really enjoy the busyness of a semester broken by a spring break and followed by a slower time in May and different kinds of activities in the summer leading up to the explosion of activity in August. A pattern of busy times interspersed with times for reflection and recreation seems to suit me very well. I believe that there is a rhythm of work and busyness interspersed with times to relax and reflect and be nourished. And within this larger rhythm of life, we each need to be about discovering our own unique rhythm by which we operate. Some are morning people, others don't get going before noon. Some are outgoing and active and others more laid back and introspective.

The problem comes when we allow our rhythms to be overruled by the power we give to others and their expectations and the power we give to our larger society to dictate our values and therefore our style of living out our days. In my own case, it has become absolutely clear to me that I am much better suited to the rhythm of university life than to the rhythm of the corporate world. The key to discovering our rhythm and then, discovering its role in our life is attentiveness. We need to pay attention to the kind of person we are and how we operate in this world. Such attention will allow us slowly to claim our own style and resist the pressure that come into us from the outside.

Again, there are all sorts of forces outside of us that are telling us how we ought to be and how we must operate in order to be successful. Unless we have a fairly clear sense of who we are and how we operate, these forces can do us incredible damage. I am reminded of a passage I once read in Zorba the Greek:

"I remembered one morning when I discovered a cocoon in the bark of a tree, just as the butterfly was making a hole in its case and preparing to come out. I waited a while, but it was too long appearing, and I was impatient. I bent over it and breathed on it to warm it. I warmed it as quickly as

I could and the miracle began to happen before my eyes, faster than life. The case opened, the butterfly started slowly crawling out and I shall never forget my horror when I saw how its wings were folded back and crumpled; the wretched butterfly tried with its whole trembling body to unfold them, bending over it. I tried to help it with my breath. In vain. It needed to be hatched out patiently and the unfolding of the wings should be a gradual process in the sun. Now it was too late. My breath had forced the butterfly to appear, all crumpled, before its time. It struggled desperately and, a few seconds later, died in the palm of my hand.

That little body is, I do believe, the greatest weight I have on my conscience. For I realize today that it is a mortal sin to violate the great laws of nature. We should not hurry, we should not be impatient, but we should confidently obey the eternal rhythm."

I hope you find and learn to pay attention to your own rhythm. There is a butterfly that wants to emerge in its own time.

Mama's Kitchen

When is a teaspoon not a teaspoon?

BY CLAIRE COVERT

When I began cooking there were several sized spoons in the family kitchen but no measuring spoons as such.

When the recipe called for a teaspoon of something, we chose from the collection either a big one or a small one.

I remember one tablespoon in Mama's Kitchen. It was old, very old, and always seemed to be slightly black. One side was worn until it was almost gone. We, as children, knew that this was Mama's spoon.

It was years later that I came to realize that this spoon was "real" silver and that silver tarnish gave it the black appearance. The side was worn from many turns around the old yellow bowl, beating those cakes and cookies for generations of family.

I am not sure where the spoon is now, lost forever perhaps, but not the memories of it. That old spoon was made for that old yellow bowl.

It was in high school home ec. class that I discovered measuring spoons as such along with measuring cups. More important, I discovered that two teaspoons of something does not make a tablespoon—it takes three.

There was the basic four spoons in a set then, held together with a metal ring: a tablespoon, a teaspoon, and then the half and quarter spoons. I recently saw a long handled plastic set with extra spoons in it. I think they were a three fourths and one eighth spoon.

Made me wonder if they will ever come up with a measure to fit a dash, a dab, or a smidgen.

Only then will I be able to master a great chocolate cream pie made by a favorite Grandmother. This wonderful person cooked by handfuls, lumps, dashes and dabs. It was impossible for any of us to recreate her pies or biscuits.

Remember the "equals table"!

from grade school? Most of us learned it by its real name, the "times table", but a young friend called it his equals table and the name stuck.

In cooking the equals table is different but it is just as important. It has to do with substitutions in ingredients and sizes such as three teas equal one table.

Here are a few of those "equals":

One tablespoon of cornstarch will equal the thickening power of two tablespoons of flour (for gravy) and makes a clearer gravy too.

Need a square of chocolate, and the box is empty? Try three level teaspoons of cocoa with one tablespoon of oil, oleo or shortening—it works. There is no need to cream it all together, either. Just add your cocoa to your drys and the extra oil to the wet.

Recipe calling for buttermilk or sour milk and none in the house? Don't dash to the store, make your own with vinegar and regular milk. In your measuring cup put two tablespoons of vinegar and fill up the cup measure with regular milk, stir and let sit for a few minutes.

All of which brings us down to the best oatmeal muffin recipe I know of. I first had an oatmeal muffin high in the mountains at a marvelous hotel restaurant. Baskets of hot breads and pots of homemade jellies, jams and other toppings were brought to your table as quick as you were seated. I topped mine with spicy apple butter. There wasn't much room for a real breakfast when we finished the basket of muffins so we settled for a huge fruit platter. Food for the gods!

The cook would not reveal his recipe but I found one later equally as good in a southern regional magazine. The article said that the muffin was a mainstay of an annual hunt breakfast.

This one takes a little time since it has to be done in two stages but is well worth the trouble. It will last for several days and freezes marvelously.

In a large bowl mix one cup of uncooked regular oatmeal with one cup of buttermilk (you can use the sour milk), stir and let rest for up to an hour. I usually give up in a half hour and then add:

One half cup brown sugar, one half cup oil, one egg slightly beaten. Mix all together and then add your "dry's": one cup regular flour, 1 tea baking powder, 1 tea baking soda and one half tea salt. Stir until all is just moist.

Have your muffin tin oiled, your oven heated to 400 degrees, fill your cups two thirds full, bake 20 to 25 minutes.

You can find the apple butter in the grocery section with the jelly.

Tourney brought highs and lows to Sandy Anderson

Sandy Anderson is a senior on the UNC Wilmington men's basketball team. A six-foot-two-inch guard from Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Anderson played his final games of his college career at the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament in Hampton, Virginia two weekends ago.

It was a tournament that brought a lot of emotional highs and lows, and Anderson was there for every turn of the emotional rollercoaster.

Here is a championship weekend with Sandy Anderson.

"It was a very long trip to Hampton, but the excitement of the tournament built up such anticipation, it made the trip a whole lot easier."

Our goal of course is to win the tournament and capture an NCAA bid. We have the best chance of winning. We have beaten every team in the conference once, with the exception of JMU and Navy. JMU can't beat us a third time, and besides, we won't have to worry about them right away because of the seedings.

On the other hand, there's Navy. We should beat them if they reach the finals. They've been too lucky throughout the season. It's our time now!

Nevertheless, East Carolina scares me. They just beat JMU which means they are confident. They definitely have the talent and they have momentum in their favor. We have to be ready.

Our game starts at noon. I hate early games. I hope that we are ready. Charles and I are really worried though."

Sandy and his teammates weren't ready and ECU put them on the ropes early. Brian Rowsom rescued the Seahawks with a three-point shot at the buzzer. Despite a poor performance, Anderson was overjoyed.

"I stayed up late the night before the game because I was so excited, but it was game time before I knew it."

They were ready to play and we weren't. There was nothing we could do about it either. Nothing went right.

I shot several airballs, but I knew that I had to keep shooting. The funny thing is that I didn't miss a shot in pre-game warm-ups.

I wanted to cry, but then again I had to laugh. I'm really happy Brian made the shot so I can redeem myself tomorrow. That was the best feeling of my life because we had always been on the other end of those games with the last-second shots. I didn't want to go out with the way I played today.

I'm sure glad BeMOC (Big Man on Campus, the nickname for Brian) made that shot. The team has never been this happy before."

Anderson was a much more confident player in UNCW's Sunday semi-final game with Richmond. He felt so confident he scored a career-high 24 points in leading the Seahawks to a 69-63 win.

"We have beaten Richmond twice before, so we knew we could beat them again."

Anderson and the Seahawks did and looked towards a championship showdown with David Robinson and Navy.

"I really think we can beat them. Things are finally going our way."

With the way they started the game, Anderson and crew looked like they would finally sink the Middies and led at intermission 24-23.

"Things were going our way. We were 20 minutes away, but anything could happen as we had learned all season long."

Wojcik and Navy were constantly fouling and the refs would not call anything. It really frustrated us and we lost our composure."

Anderson had a chance to send the game into overtime with a three-point shot with 17 seconds to play, but like so many times before, it didn't fall through the net.

"It felt good when it left my hand, but you never know. Some feel bad when they leave your hand and go in. So that is hard to gauge."

When it didn't fall, I thought, "Not Again!" Total frustration. It's hard to explain.

I don't feel as bad as the last couple times they beat us. We played well, no regrets about it, although I wish we would have won."

The Navy game turned out to be Anderson's last as a college player. A post-season bid never came, so his career is now over.

"We thought we would get an NIT bid and we weren't as emotional as we would have been if we knew it was our last game. I was just glad to be there because of BeMOC's shot."

With no tournament bid Anderson is left with no bitterness.

"Nobody knew what to expect with the NIT bid. The anxiety was so great because we don't know if we would be playing anymore or if we're now alumni. I think we deserved one. I really thought they should have taken us."

With nothing left except memories, the future is cloudy for Sandy Anderson's basketball playing days.

"I will definitely miss it. It won't hit me right away. It will probably hurt next year when I watch UNCW play. All I have now is pick-up games, recreational play and the overall enjoyment of the game."

Anderson will have plenty of memories including his selection to the All-CAA Defensive Team. Joining Anderson are UNCW's Brian Rowsom, Frank Ross of American, Tracy Battle of George Mason, Benny Gordon of James Madison, and David Robinson from Navy. The All-Academic team was headed by two Seahawks, Kevan Miles and Greg Bender. Other members are Neal Fenton of Navy, Pat Witting of American, and Brian Miller of George Mason. Ken Atkinson the freshmen point guard for Richmond was named Rookie of the Year. James Madison Head Coach John Thurston was named Coach of the Year. The All-Conference Team was headed by this year's Player of the Year David Robinson. Other All-CAA players are Brian Rowsom, Marshall Henry of East Carolina, Frank Ross of American, and Kenny Sanders of George Mason. UNCW was also given the Sportsmanship Award for game administration, facility decorum, and fan participation.

Rowsom's prayer helps UNCW get to title game

Navy edges UNCW in tourney finals

Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Hampton, Va. - Athletic Trainer Jerry Middlesworth's face showed it all. As UNC Wilmington huddled in a timeout with just under nine minutes to play a trailing Navy 40-36, Middlesworth looked towards the scorer's table at a UNCW statistician and with his hands clasped together, said, "I'm trying, I'm trying. I'm praying as hard as I can."

But it wasn't meant to be as it had been so many times this season. Sandy Anderson's three-point shot failed to go down with 17 seconds to play and Navy ended the Seahawks' championship bid 53-50.

All-American center David Robinson led the Midshipman with 23 points and eight rebounds, while Brian Rowsom led UNCW with 15 points and 13 rebounds. Sandy Anderson chipped in 10 points while Ricky Griffin canned eight off the bench.

Robinson, Rowsom, and Anderson joined James Madison's Eric Brent, Richmond's Steve Kratzer and Navy's Carl Liebert on the All-Tournament Team. Robinson was named tournament MVP for the second straight year.

UNCW, which played one of its best defensive games of the year, opened up hard on Navy, taking on an early 11-2 lead.

Navy then got underway and closed the margin to 11-8 on a Carl Liebert jumper at the 12:12 mark. The Seahawks were able to push it back out to seven points with 7:20 to go in the period.

Yet the Middies were not going to roll over and took their first lead at the 3:58 mark 21-20 on a Cliff Rees jumper. UNCW continued to play well and retook the lead 24-21 on a Rowsom jumper before Navy closed it to the halftime margin of 24-23.

The halftime lead represented the first lead at intermission for the 'Hawks in the tournament. UNCW entered the CAA championships 14-2 when leading at the half, but could not improve that mark against Navy.

Ironically, the Seahawks were 1-9 when trailing at the break before the tournament, but came back from halftime deficits against East Carolina and Richmond to get into the conference finals.

The second half saw the Seahawks get out of their gameplan for a six minute stretch, which allowed Navy to go on a 17-4 run and take a 40-31 lead with 12:31 to play in the game. The Midshipmen had taken the lead for good when Robinson converted a three-point play at the 17:12 mark, giving Navy a 28-27 lead.

"We felt if we could keep it in the 50 point range, we could win the ball game," said Head Coach Robert McPherson. "Other than a six-minute period starting the second half, I thought we controlled the tempo."

Behind the support of some 1500 UNCW fans, the Seahawks made their final run.

Ricky Griffin hit a three-point basket to close UNCW to within one at 44-43. Navy's Byron Hopkins answered at the other end of the court to push the margin back to three. The Middies ran the difference out to five points twice, but Sandy Anderson got it to two with 2:16 to play, 50-48.

After a Robinson free throw, Charles Cherry, who grabbed nine rebounds on the night, hit his only basket of the night to bring UNCW to within one again at 51-50 with 1:18 to go.

The Seahawks could have taken the lead following a Navy miss, but Brian Rowsom missed the front-end of a one-and-one opportunity with just 1:03 showing on the clock.

Navy then brought the ball up court, was forced to shoot because of the 45 second clock, and missed. Carl Liebert came up with the crucial rebound and forced UNCW to foul with less than 35 seconds to play.

The Seahawks did foul, sending Robinson to the line with 20 seconds to play. The Player-of-the-Year candidate sank both free throws, giving the Midshipman their final points of the game.

After a timeout, UNCW had 17 seconds in which to send the game into overtime. Ricky Griffin threw the ball into Sandy Anderson, who got free in the left corner, but his shot rattled out. Mark Gary and Brian Rowsom both got hands on the miss, but it got kicked around before David Robinson slung it down court as the buzzer sounded.

Navy's David Robinson shoots over UNCW's Brian Rowsom in the CAA Tourney Final. Navy held off UNCW for the championship and an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament 53-50.

"We set up an out of bounds play," said Coach McPherson about the final shot. "We had two good shooters at the three-point circle. We set a down screen to bring Mark Gary off that screen. After Mark cleared, Sandy was deep in the corner behind the line."

Mark was covered and we thought he would be. We felt like Sandy would be open. He was, we got the shot we wanted and it looked good when it left his hand. It was a crazy finish with the ball kicked around."

The loss dropped UNCW to 18-12 overall and on the borderline of post-season play, while Navy, 26-5, will advance to the NCAA tournament. Last season, Navy advanced to the final eight before falling to national runner-up, Duke.

"I thought Navy's guards did a good job of pressuring our guards," said McPherson. "They got us out of our offense a couple of times. Overall, I thought it was a very good ballgame. It was a playoff. See Playoffs, page 9

UNCW downs Richmond before being trounced by JMU

Lady 'Hawks fall in CAA semifinals

D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The Lady Seahawks traveled to Harrisburg, VA last weekend to compete in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) Women's Basketball Tournament. UNCW entered the tourney as the fifth seeded team with an 18-8 record.

In the first round the Lady 'Hawks opened against the University of Richmond, the fourth-seeded squad. During the regular season the teams split their two meetings, with the home team winning each time. UNCW exterminated the Lady Spiders in the rubber match by the score of 78-60.

As it had been all season the inside strength of the Lady 'Hawks was the key to the victory. Elizabeth Bell and Sharon McDowell dominated the paint with 28 and 20 points respectively. Bell pulled down a team-high 11 rebounds, all of them on the defensive end. McDowell continued her sharp shooting by going seven-for-ten from the floor and six-for-six from the free throw line.

UNCW used their inside dominance to open up a 39-22 halftime advantage.

UR was led by Laurie Govenor's 24 points and game-high 13 rebounds. No other member of the Richmond squad scored in double figures.

The victory enabled the Lady 'Hawks to advance into the semifinals against defending conference champion and number one-seeded James Madison. The Lady Dukes, 14th ranked in the nation, embarrassed UNCW 107-48.

JMU, using a balanced attack, opened a 41-22 halftime lead. In the second half JMU crushed UNCW in every sense of the word. The Dukettes outscored the Lady 'Hawks by 40 points in the final period.

Every James Madison player scored, while five players finished in double figures. The Lady Dukes were led by Sydney Beasley who tossed in a game-high 26 points and grabbed 12 rebounds.

Senior Wanda Carroll scored a team-high 11 points before fouling out. Freshmen Kerry Albrightan came off the bench to score an additional 10 points.

James Madison went on to successfully defend their CAA women's title by defeating American 74-62.

UNCW finished the season with 19-9 overall and 7-7 in the CAA. All but guard Wanda Carroll retrain for the 1987-88 campaign.

Pitcher Kevin Davidson brings it home in UNCW's game Monday with Athletic Christian. The Seahawks won 7-6 on a ninth inning Mark Maultby homerun. The win raised the 'Hawks' record to 5-6.

Playoff Game

type ballgame where every possession was very important.

I'd like to wish Navy good luck and wish them well in the playoffs. I hope they represent the conference very well.

In UNCW's first round game, the Seahawks trailed for 39 minutes and 59 seconds before Brian Rowsom capped his first career three-point shot to give UNCW a 59-38 win over East Carolina.

The Seahawks came out flat-footed and shot a dismal 35 percent from the floor, but forced ECU into 18 turnovers. The Pirates shot 51 percent from the floor.

After trailing 30-24 at halftime,

UNCW fell behind by as much as 10 points in the second period before getting untracked. Down 42-32 with 11:21 to play, the Seahawks made a small win, closing the gap to 44-38 on a Greg Bender three-pointer with 9:38 to go. Bender finished the game with 12 points.

Yet East Carolina, playing their last game under Head Coach Chris Harrison, surged further ahead, taking a 52-43 lead with just 4:39 to play.

Rob Wagner canned a 16-footer to start UNCW's final comeback, cutting the margin to seven. After Brian Rowsom and Greg Bender missed one-and-one opportunities, Mark Gary nailed a three-pointer, slicing the lead even further to 52-48 with three minutes to play.

Following two East Carolina free throws, Charles Cherry plugged a three-pointer to cut the lead to three with under a minute left.

UNCW's only hope was to foul and hope ECU could not convert.

The Seahawks put John Williams on the line with 33 seconds left, but he made both free throws to move the lead to five. UNCW then brought the ball down court and Mark Gary launched an off-balance three-point shot that cut the lead to two. The Seahawks then put Marchell Henry on the line, but the senior who finished with an ECU-high of 17 points nailed both.

A desperate UNCW then got a layup from Brian Rowsom with eight seconds to play, but the situation looked too bleak. After a timeout, the Seahawks fouled Keith Sledge, the best free throw shooter on the ECU squad. Sledge, an 83 percent shooter, missed, giving UNCW one final hope.

Greg Bender rebounded the miss, dribbled the mid-court before passing to Rowsom, who dribbled twice and launched his buzzer-beater from just outside the NBA three-point stripe.

At first it looked long, but banked off the glass and cleanly through.

"Brian got off an excellent shot," said McPherson. "It was by no means a luck shot."

We came out a little bit tired. Early in the game we came out not to lose," continued McPherson. "but the last three minutes of the game we started playing to win. That's when our intensity picked up and we got a defensive effort that was very good."

Brian Rowsom finished with 17 points and 11 rebounds, Bender finished with 12, Kevan Miles with 8, and Sandy Anderson added 6.

East Carolina finished 12-16 and 4-11 in the CAA. The 'Hawks' semi-final game was somewhat anti-climatic. UNCW played much better than they did against East Carolina, but again waited until the last five minutes of the game to get down to business.

UNCW and Richmond, who downed American 75-68 in their first-round matchup, played a nip and tuck first half. Their were three lead changes and nine ties before Sandy Anderson's three-pointer closed the Seahawks to within one, 35-34 at intermission.

The second half saw Richmond lead until the 4:31 mark when Brian Rowsom scored two of his 17 points on a layup, giving the Seahawks a 58-37 lead.

That proved to be the turning point in the game as UNCW pulled away from a suddenly cold Spider group to win 69-63.

Rebounding was a big key for the 'Hawks' as they took control in the last five minutes. Charles Cherry grabbed nine big rebounds, while Rowsom had eight. Ricky Griffin came off the bench to pull down six coroms.

"I thought we were in good control for about 35 minutes of the game, said Richmond Head Coach Dick Tarrant. "I liked the tempo. Unfortunately you can't go dry for five minutes. Also, they were very aggressive on the offensive boards. Rowsom and Cherry did a good job inside."

Sandy Anderson led all scorers with a career high 24 points. The 6-2 senior was 9-of-14 from the field, including four-of-seven from three-point range and two-of-two from the charity stripe. Greg Bender and Charles Cherry added nine and seven points respectively.

"Sandy Anderson had an outstanding ballgame," said McPherson. "One of the best since I've been here and probably of his career."

The loss dropped Richmond to 15-14 overall on the season and 8-7 in the CAA.

The Colonial Athletic Association Men's Basketball Championships will again be held at the Hampton Coliseum in Hampton, Virginia for the next two years.

JAMES MADISON

1986-87 Colonial Athletic Association Champion

The Big Ten will remain powerful

The last few years, it seems, the power has been swinging from conference to conference, back and forth like kids in a schoolyard.

In 1985, the Big East ended up holding a block party at Lexington, and last year, the ACC dominated the AP-UPI top 10, even though Duke finally fell short in the finals to the Cardinals of Louisville in Dallas.

This year, it's the Big Ten by six lengths over the rest of the field -- with Commissioner Wayne Duke smugly resting his whip as he looks back over his shoulder.

Personally, I think the Big Ten will maintain that distance through next year -- the 1987-88 season -- and who knows how far beyond?

Talk about a solid line-up. Even the Rockettes have got to be envious.

Talk about a solid line-up. Even the Rockettes have got to be envious.

First, there's Purdue, and my prediction is that the Boilermakers will be the odds-on favorite to win the Big Ten next year, and to continue right through to the Final Four, when it's convened in Kansas City. The Troy Lewis and Todd Mitchell show is an automatic renewal, like Cosby, and with them back again, Coach Gene Keady finds himself at eye level in the state of Indiana with Digger and Bobby.

Then there's Michigan, which has a J. R. Reid-class player in 6-9 Terry Mills, who's now down under Proposition 48, as is another outstanding player in 6-2 Rumeal Robinson. And don't forget the Buckeyes of Ohio State, who are adjusting to Gary Williams' intense coaching style, as a new era gets underway along the Olentangy River.

Illinois has two Proposition 48 kids too -- 6-5 Nick Anderson and 6-6 Ervin Small, but the true All-American should be transfer Kenny Battle, a 6-6 gold mine who transferred from Northern Illinois. Add to that, Marcus Liberty, the high school player of the year, and the Fighting Illini should be an even better club next year.

Iowa loses very little and Dr. Tom Davis will have gotten through his baptismal year in Hawkeye-land. What is it they say? The beat goes on... And what can you say about Indiana? Except to know that year-in and year-out, with Coach Bob at the helm, that they're on the money.

Perennial orphans Northwestern and Wisconsin will have to find some new bog shoes, because there's very little chance they're going to get out of the sub-basement, but Minnesota has a proven warrior in Clem Haskins, who previously did such a great job of rebuilding Western Kentucky from the ashes. The Gophers might need another year to return to respectability, but look for them to bounce back.

And last, but certainly not least, there's Michigan State. Things are kind of on cruise control right now in East Lansing, but the Spartans are always testy and a killer at home.

Overall, then, the Big Ten is the conference of the immediate future, and I think could possibly make it awkward for the rest of the country this coming late March in the Crescent City.

There are a number of reasons I believe the Big Ten will repeat next season.

One, they have a TV package now during the week, which keeps the recruiting door about the size of the Holland Tunnel -- and they get more than their fair share of national hook-ups from the Big Three networks on the weekends.

Two, because Chicago has become the crown jewel, when it comes to producing Blue Chip high school players, passing up the New York-Washington D.C., and the L.A. - San Francisco areas as proving ground or factories. And Chicago is being pushed by Detroit. Then, too, most of the schools in the Big Ten are THE school in the state, so they pretty much get first pick of the litter, when it comes to home-grown players who develop in their areas.

Finally, I believe the Big Ten will do well at tourney-time, will be more ready for tournament play, because they don't have a post-season conference tournament. They play a solid round-robin, with each home and home game being a firecracker, and they play a reasonably tough out-of-conference schedule. And, they are -- without a doubt -- the most physical conference in the country, where it seems that the refs have consistently slow whistles, which allows both the coaches and players to realize that basketball is a contact sport.

One other thing: Look for the style of play in the Big Ten to change a little in the near future -- from Bobby Knight's motion offense and kamikaze defense to Dr. Tom Davis' coast-to-coast defense, multiple substitutions, and a wearing down of the opponent with movement rather than physical-ness.

This trend, I feel, should take about three weeks to work into place -- a lot quicker than when Bobby Knight's style changed the Big Ten from a run-and-gun conference to one of deliberate, half-court offense and strong, man-to-man, box out defense.

Now it's going to be changing again, because of Tom Davis, and Coach Williams at Ohio State -- who was Davis' assistant at Boston College. What you're going to see, in the Big Ten, is coast-to-coast defense, long benches, massive substitutions, all of which are ways of extending the intensity of the game by playing the whole court.

What you're also going to see is a conference so talent-laden, so solid, that it's going to take the rest of the country at least another season or two to catch up.

Brown Featured at Jazz Festival

Jazz Guitarist Steve Brown, will perform with the UNCW Jazz Ensembles at 3 p.m. Sunday, March 15, in Kenan Auditorium. General Admission is $3.00, $1.00 for students and free for UNCW students.

The concert will be the concluding performance of the Fifth Annual UNCW Jazz Festival. The festival begins Saturday afternoon, March 19, in Kenan Auditorium with performances of high school jazz bands in the state and clinics by Steve Brown. The Saturday high school performances are free and open to the public.

Steve Brown, born in Freeport, Long Island in 1942, began playing jazz at the age of twelve with his father Glen, a marimba player with the Xavier Cugat Orchestra. At Ithaca College, he completed an undergraduate degree in percussion in 1964 and a graduate degree in classical guitar in 1967.

As a guitarist from 1975 to 1980 with the National Jazz Ensemble under the direction of Chuck Israels, Brown received his first critical acclaim. He toured Spain, France, Portugal, and Turkey in 1980 and 1981 as a soloist, sideman, and clinician with Chuck Israels, Bill Dobbins, Jim McNeely, Sal Nistico, Claudio Roditi, Ben Riley, and Bill Goodwin.

Israels says of him, "He is an excellent guitarist, a beautiful improviser, with a clearly developed style, an organized teacher, a good composer/arranger." Since 1982, Brown has led the New York Jazz Sextet on a yearly tour of Spain, playing concerts and conducting seminars through the Taller De Musicos, a school of jazz in Barcelona. Gerry Niewood, Dave Schritter, Ron McClure, Don Friedman, Wallace Roney, Billy Hart, Joe Hunt, Walter Bishop, Jr., and Jimmy Madison have accompanied him during these approximately one-month tours.

In the United States, Brown leads his own quartet with such sidemen as Bill Goodwin, Steve Gilmore, Jim Gannon, and Bill Dobbins. Since the release of his own album and various records on which he appears as a sideman, Brown has become recognized as an accomplished guitarist and composer.

According to Dan Morgenstern of the Smithsonian Institute, "Steve Brown, less well known than his conferees, is an impressive discovery." Bill Dobbins says, "In all my professional experience as a concertizing pianist, jazz educator and recording artist, Steve is definitely one of the most tasteful and consistently musical performers I have worked with."

Billy Taylor "would like to commend Steve Brown for what he has done to direct and inspire his students. Judging from his own example as a musician, he sets a high standard."

A full professor in the School of Music at Ithaca College, where he has taught since 1967, Brown was recently awarded the Dana Fellowship for excellence in teaching. He initiated degree programs in guitar and jazz at the college, where he is the director of the Jazz Studies Program and teaches jazz improvisation, arranging, and history; big band and small group ensemble, calligraphy; pop and rock history; and guitar.

Steve Brown

He has taught clinics at the University of Akron, the National Association of Jazz Educators' Conference, the Eastern U.S. Music Camp, the Syracuse Civic Center, Loyola University, Dartmouth, and the University of Montreal. Marian McPartland says of him, "I know how terrific he is with the kids and what a talented guy he is in many ways." Brown is a member of local 332, American Federation of Musicians; the National Association of Jazz Educators; and B.M.I. (writer).

The second half of the concert will include the 7 O'clock Jazz Ensemble featuring Steve Brown as guest soloist. His program includes arrangements of Darn That Dream, Mi Burrito, Belle, and Mosey on Down.

'How The Other Half Loves' next at Thalian Hall

Alan Ayckbourn's comedy-farce "How The Other Half Loves," opens at Thalian Hall March 12 and continues through March 15 with performances at 8pm each evening and a matinee at 2pm on Sunday, March 15.

Directed by Mitchell Butts, this Thalian Association community theatre production concerns three suburban couples involved in a merry mix-up of comic situations which nearly cause family breakups.

The play was written by the creator of "The Mousetrap" and "See How They Run." Phil Silvers and Sandy Dennis received rare reviews for their performances in the original Broadway production.

The Thalian cast features Jim Dowd, Theresa Rossi, Larry Evans, Laure Quinlivan, Don Bland, and Kim Kiefer. Stage manager for the play is Sharon Alt, and settings have been designed by Frank Trimble.

The box office opens for reservations on March 2. Admission is $10, $8, $6 for students with valid ID and $5 for senior citizens for either performance on Sunday, March 15th. Tickets may be obtained by calling 763-3398 or 763-9328.

Laure Quinlivan and Larry Evans rehearse a scene from the Thalian Association Production of "How The Other Half Loves" to be presented in Thalian Hall March 12-15.

'Poe in Person'

New York actor Conrad Pomerleau will bring the master of the macabre, Edgar Allan Poe, to live onstage in his acclaimed solo show, "Poe in Person" at UNCW, 8 p.m., Thursday, Mar. 26 in Room 100 of the University Union.

Tickets are $2 for general admission and $1 for UNCW students with ID. Desserts will be served. This program is sponsored by the University Program Board.

One of America's earliest literary greats, Poe is acknowledged today as the father of the modern mystery story. His "The Pit and the Pendulum," "The Cask of Amontillado," and "The Raven," are among his best known works.

In "Poe in Person," actor Pomerleau portrays the poet at age 39 (just before his death), recounting his 20 years of struggle to establish a literary reputation for himself and his country despite poverty, personal tragedy, and ill health.

"Poe in Person" brings this little understood American genius into focus, revealing a complex man who is far from the sinister, brooding drunkard depicted by his early biographers. Pomerleau shows us that Poe was a political idealist with an inclusive wit and a satiric humor, an acute observer of his contemporary American society.

For ten years, "Poe in Person" has played to packed houses from Richmond to San Francisco, receiving rare reviews and standing ovations. It was chosen to open the Poe House in Philadelphia and is an annual event at Poe Cottage in the Bronx. In 1979, Pomerleau received Chicago's Jeff Award nomination for his performance. Last season he performed as Poe off-Broadway at the American Place Theatre in "The Doings of Gotham."

Del Suggs to appear in Union next Thursday

One of Florida's premier performers will be appearing at the UNCW-Wilmington University Union. Del Suggs, popular singer and songwriter, brings his guitar to North Carolina to perform at 8 p.m., Thursday, Mar. 19 in Room 100. Admission is free and refreshments will be served.

Suggs is breathing new life into the art of solo performing. As colleges across the country continue to discover, he grabs an audience and, well, communicates. For those unaccustomed to concerts as anything but rock and roll celebration, his show comes as a joyous surprise.

Drawing on his north Florida roots and guitarstream upbringing, Suggs has become one of the most popular performers on the college circuit. His solo album, Saltwater Music, has been compared to the best works of James Taylor, Jimmy Buffett and Paul Simon, by the critics. It has received extensive national airplay after being endorsed by the National Federation of Community Broadcasters in Washington, D.C. The album has sold thousands across America, and as far away as Japan and New Zealand. Suggs is also a featured artist on the double album, Styx Meisburg and Friends in Concert.

In December of 1985, the television special, "Del Suggs: With My Friends, For My Friends," was broadcast over satellite to PBS affiliates around the country. Originally broadcast live over WFSU-TV, the show was a 90-minute concert hosted by Suggs and featuring his music. The instant popularity of the program resulted in a local rebroadcast only 2 weeks later, and led to satellite distribution across the country.

Suggs has also performed on the public television series, "Studio A," "Thursday Live," and "Southern Circuit," and on film for the Governor's Energy Office. His album, Saltwater Music, has been offered as a membership premium by PBS affiliates.

Suggs tours exclusively on the college circuit and performs in concert at over 75 schools a year. He has shared the stage with such notables as Garrison Keillor (of Prairie Home Companion), the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Mac MacAnally, Tim Weisberg, Gamble Rogers, Steve Meisburg, Jerry Clower, Pierce Pettis and many others. He has been recognized with endorsement agreements with Ovation Guitars and Peavey Electronics. These fine companies provide him with outstanding guitars and sound equipment for tour support.

Del Suggs appears March 19

Laser Concert Next Wednesday

The Soundwave Concert Committee of the University Program Board will sponsor Voyager IV, a laser light rock concert on Wednesday, March 18 in Trask Coliseum. Performance times will be 8 and 10 p.m.. Admission for students will be $3, general public $5.

Voyager IV

The Laser. The purest form of light known to man

First there was Laser Rock, then Constellation II. Now, Voyager IV blasts off at 186,000 feet a second, bringing you the latest in high tech laser entertainment. Watch as Voyager IV turns Trask Coliseum into an odyssey of sight and sound.

Voyager IV features a one-watt Krypton laser with both computer-generated and live-visual illusions. The Krypton laser is projected on a gigantic 20-foot tall by 30-foot wide screen. An argon laser, based at the bottom of the screen, shoots out 3-dimensional laser beams right over the audience's heads. The beams then hit 30 crystal mirrors and cause a visual spider web of lasers. This is also known as the "star wars" effect. Smoke jets and the famous star-field, as seen in planetariums, complete the visual package.

The soundtrack for Voyager IV features the latest in album oriented rock; Genesis, ZZ Top, U2, Dire Straits, The Who, and more. The concert sound system supplied by Bose stuns your senses as you hear the state of the art in audio technology.

The Voyager IV Laser Concert tours totally self-contained, featuring two laser systems, computers, the Bose Concert Sound System and two laserists who will be your hosts. The evening includes two full 70-minute shows.

HMS Bristol will visit state port for Azalea Festival

The Royal Navy guided missile destroyer HMS Bristol will make a port visit to Wilmington March 23-27. This spring visit marks the fifth time she has called on Wilmington and renews the tradition that this city is the ship's "home away from home."

Bristol's last visit to Wilmington was in June, 1984. The 507-foot vessel carries more than 400 men. Bristol is scheduled to berth at 10:00 a.m., March 23 at the north end of the State Ports Authority. The public is invited to attend the welcoming ceremonies which will feature bagpiper Kirk Rose, an appearance by Miss UNC-Wilmington, elected officials, the New Hanover High School Band, and the John T. Hoggard High School Navy ROTC color guard and drum team.

Bristol arrives in Wilmington from her last port stop in Mayport, near Jacksonville, FL. As part of the welcoming ceremonies, seven crew members who will have run all the way from Mayport will complete their journey to Wilmington, meeting the ship at 10:00 a.m. The runners left Mayport on March 14, and will raise money along the way to be donated to the Brigade Boys Club Building Fund.

The ship is under the command of Captain Alan West, a decorated veteran of the Falklands War. HMS Bristol saw action in the Falkland Islands in 1982. Also scheduled to be present during part of the visit is Rear Admiral G. F. Liardet, the Flag Officer Second Flotilla.

Bristol will be berthed at the northernmost dock at the State Ports Authority. During her visit, she will be open for public tours between 2:00 and 4:00 p.m. on March 24, 25, and 26. Other special activities include a soccer match between the Bristol soccer team and the Micholob Soccer Club at 5:00 p.m., March 24, at Legion Stadium, followed by a rematch between the Bristol Rugby Team and the Cape Fear Rugby Club at 7 p.m. All British nationals are urged to come out and cheer on the Bristol teams. The public is invited to the free matches.

As has become customary with the visit of foreign ships, the popular Dial-A-Sailor program will also be operating. Individuals wishing to entertain members of the crew of Bristol may call 763-1329 beginning March 15. After 10:00 a.m., March 23, when the ship docks, call 251-0702 to arrange a visit.

As campus election day nears, more and more signs like these are popping up all over campus. Students will have the opportunity to eat lunch in front of the Union and meet the candidates Wednesday. ## Loftis impeachment approved by Student Senate

By David Rouse, Staff Writer

Impeachment proceedings were begun against Senator Ray Loftus at Monday's meeting of the Student Government Association.

The motion originated from Senator Mark Bremer's Judiciary Committee report on senatorial absences.

According to S.G.A. rules a senator who has four or more unexcused absences may be impeached. After the motion was raised, another motion came from the body proposing that the Senate move into Executive Session to consider the motion for impeachment proceedings against Senator Loftus. Before voting on the Executive Session the Senators talked among themselves, and Senator Fran Slater said, "This is for our own benefit (that the Senate go into Executive Session)."

The motion passed through a show of hands and visitors were removed from the meeting.

After several minutes the meeting was reopened and it was reported that the motion to start impeachment proceedings against Senator Loftus had passed.

According to Senator Bremer the charges against Senator Loftus will now be brought before the Senate Judiciary Committee and that committee will study the case and decide whether to send formal charges against Senator Loftus to the Senate. If the charges are sent to the Senate that body will vote on Senator Loftus's impeachment.

In the treasurer's report to the Senate, S.G.A. Treasurer Beth Riffe answered a question from another meeting as to how much money was left in the S.G.A. General Fund. According to her calculations $16,000 remained in the treasury.

The treasurer then made a recommendation to give $324.48 to the Racketsball Team to pay for their lodging at a Chapel Hill tournament.

Senator Jeff Silverman then made a motion to give the team half of the money they requested if the team would raise the rest. After Kevin Colaneri added a friendly amendment that required the team to fulfill regulations concerning the use of the money the motion passed by voice vote.

Next Ms. Riffe suggested that the Senate take $726.65 out of a fund of $8,000 reserved for office renovations, to buy new furniture for the S.G.A. office.

A motion was raised and seconded to give the money requested and the motion was defended by Senator Karla Alston who said, "This is what the money is for."

The Senators requested to see the price lists and after the Senators had seen them Senator Mark Bremer proposed an amendment that would delete two of the requested items and reduce the amount spent to $435.90. A debate on the proposed amendment followed.

Gospel Choir to recruit minorities

By Joseph Allen, Staff Writer

In hopes of increasing minority enrollment at UNCW, and increasing the performance experience of choir members, the UNCW Gospel Choir is embarking on a four day out-of-state tour March 19-22, said choir advisor Joyce Johnson.

"This will be the first time the UNCW Gospel Choir toured outside of the local area," Ms. Johnson said. Prior to this tour, the Gospel Choir performed only on campus, area churches and other local areas.

"The tour will broaden [choir members'] performance experience," she said. For the first time choir members will be crossing state lines to give performances at high schools and churches.

While increasing choir members' performance experience is one of the primary goals of the North Carolina-Virginia tour, the major goal of the tour is to help increase minority enrollment at UNCW.

It is hoped that by showing that UNCW does have a Gospel Choir and is interested in the music, it will increase potential college students' interest in UNCW, Ms. Johnson said.

Ralph H. Parker, UNCW Director of Minority Affairs, and Douglas Johnson, UNCW Assistant Director of Admissions, will be going along with the choir on their tour, she said.

Parker and Johnson will answer any questions about UNCW students and parents might have and they will be taking enrollment forms with them to distribute, Ms. Johnson said.

Frank Blair to attend awards here

Television broadcaster Frank Blair, veteran of NBC's "Today Show", will be on hand to receive the Albert Schweitzer Award for Artistry for Broadcast Journalism in Wilmington April 8.

Jim Burns, Executive Director with the Schweitzer Medals Benefit Concerts program, said in a March 12 release that Blair will join celebrities such as Mary Martin, Academy Award Winner F. Murray Abraham, and other celebrities in St. Mary's Catholic Church for the ceremonies. Blair served as Master of Ceremonies for the 1986 concerts.

Proceeds from the concerts go to fund the Albert Schweitzer International prizes awarded every four years at UNCW. Prizes recognize significant contributions to music, medicine and the humanities, three areas in which Schweitzer excelled.

Past recipients of the International awards have included Nobel Laureate Mother Teresa, Andres Segovia, and Gian Carlo Minotti.

Frank Blair began his broadcasting career in a telegraph office owned by his father in Charleston, S.C. He attended the College of Charleston, and worked at several radio stations as a newscaster until going to work for NBC shortly after the Second World War.

Blair was first Washington Correspondent for "Today" in 1952, transferring to New York as newscaster, a position he held for 23 years.

Blair has received honors and awards from Distinguished Eagle Scout to the Georgetown Medal of Honor. Blair has also received awards in journalism expertise from the University of Missouri and Ohio University, as well as four honorary degrees.

Blair lives on Hilton Head Island in South Carolina.

The UNCW Non-Traditional Student

What sort of students are they? Why do they come back?

By Carla Garrison, Staff Writer

The UNCW student body is composed primarily of students who entered college shortly after high school, but 25% of the entire student body are classified as Non-Traditional students, or Non-Trad.

The Non-Trad. is someone who enters a college career five or more years after high school. The ages begin at 23 and continue on up.

These non-traditional students have a different set of concerns and problems than the traditional student. They have all, for one reason or another, decided to embark on a college education after a long absence from school. What sort of students are they? Why do they come back? What problems do they face?

With such an emphasis being placed on college degrees in the work place, more and more people are returning to colleges and universities for some sort of degree.

More than half of the 25% of non-trads are women. Many are divorced or separated and want to begin a new life.

One divorced female non-trad student said, "I spent my whole life working for others. I came to college to start my life over just for me."

Others have children in college and decide to try it for themselves.

Both male and female non-traditional students said they simply got tired of dead-end minimum wage jobs and wanted a change.

The majority of male non-trads have finished military terms and want to continue their education.

Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, is responsible for providing moral support for the entering non-trad students.

Since they are usually more apprehensive than traditional students, Ms. Leonard is someone they can go to and express concerns, frustrations, and self doubts. She feels that more older individuals are making the decision to continue their education, even though it can be a very big step.

Once they are back, Ms. Leonard said non-trads generally are harder workers than many of their fellow students.

Ms. Leonard commented that "They often have a stronger commitment than the traditional student because they know what a person faces out there without a college education."

"They often have a stronger commitment than the traditional student because they know what a person faces out there without a college education."

Pat Leonard,

Comments such as, "We are often more determined because daddy is no longer paying the bills," and "Because I have been out in the real world I know exactly what I am here for," are often heard. Please see, Non-Traditionals page 3

PATA wishes everyone a great year!

Senator Bremer argued that some of the furniture was unnecessary. In an interview after the meeting Senator Bremer stated that it would be "Absurd to spend the students' money on new equipment...It's nice, but I couldn't see squandering the student's money" while Ms. Riffe called one of the desks in the office "rickety."

During debate at the meeting Senator Lee King said he agreed with Senator Bremer and that he felt that the office fund didn't need the $8,000 it was given anyway.

Joining the debate was Senator David B. King who said, "We can't go blowing it [the money] at every little hair that gets up our you-know-what."

The opposition included Senator Karl Alston and Eric Storm, who said the new furniture would be good for the University's image to those who visited the S.G.A. offices.

Both the amendment and the main motion passed, the amendment through a hand ballot and the main motion through a show of hands.

In standing committee reports Karl Alston announced that the deadline for applications to the Media Publications Board positions was March 19th.

In the Student Suggestions Committee report Gina Mathis made a motion to spend $10 to make ten S.G.A. ID cards. The motion passed through voice vote.

Besides the recommendation to have Senator Loftus impeached, Senator Bremer in his Judiciary report announced that Senator Jeff Silverman's absence last week had been excused, "Because he was stranded on an island."

Silverman was on a sailing cruise sponsored by the campus ministry to the Bahamas Islands when foul weather forced the ship into port in the Bahamas.

The constitutional committee report consisted of a series of amendments to the S.G.A. constitution. All of the amendments passed except two. One failed amendment would have required the S.G.A. president to be a full time student. The other would have required a student vote on all future proposed amendments to the S.G.A. constitution.

Senator Bremer's twice delayed motion on giving the Senate power over some S.G.A. Vice President committee appointments was finally voted on and passed Monday night.

In new business Kevin Colaner made a motion to take $500 out of the treasury to be used for framing the Who's Who in American College Students awards and for a reception for those who were awarded a spot on the Who's Who.

The motion was fought by Senator David B. King who said that the university, not the SGA, should recognize those students enough to pay for framing and a reception. After the motion passed Senator David King asked that the minutes read that he voted in the negative.

The last motion of the session Senator Ray Loftus asked that the Judiciary Committee be disbanded because, according to Senator Loftus, the conflict of interest rules prevent the Judiciary Committee from taking any action.

This motion resulted in a strong and long debate, for the most part between Senator Bremer and Senator Loftus. Towards the end of the debate Senator Louis Diccillo presented an amendment to Senator Loftus's proposal that would require all Judiciary Committee members to be non-Senators. This motion was objected to by Senator Bremer and Senator Diccillo withdrew the amendment.

The amendment then went to a show of hands vote and failed.

In announcements Senator Fran Slater said that the aluminum can collection drive had so far raised $6.40, "we can buy a plant," said Senator Slater sardonically. Senator Slater also said that more support is necessary from the freshman class to make the drive successful. Senator Slater is trying to raise money for a class of 1990 gift to the University.

DWI, hit and run result in arrest

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Campus Police arrested a UNCW student for DWI after a hit and run late Saturday night.

Capt. Billy Dawson of UNCW Public Safety, said Monday that police on duty saw the subject's automobile collide with the wooden rail fence in front of Hewlett and Graham Halls around 12:30 a.m. The subject did not stop, but continued to drive toward Reigel Road after the collision.

Police found the subject near parking lot "A" and apprehended him for driving while impaired. He was then transported to the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department to continue police proceedings. The student was finally charged with hit and run, property damage, and DWI.

Five other incidents of property damage were reported to campus police last week.

On March 12, an unknown subject threw a golf ball through the west window of Galloway Hall's fifth floor. Two days later, on March 14, a third floor window in Hall '85 was broken out by a baseball.

There is no indication that these incidents are related.

Also on the 14th, an unknown subject walked on the hood of a vehicle parked in "P" lot, by the apartments; and, a car parked in front of Galloway Hall on the same day received damage to its right rear window.

Non-Traditionals

Non-traditionals also tend to interact more freely in the class room because they are generally more confident about themselves socially. The older individual has already been through many of the trials and tribulations younger students are just now beginning to face.

Through her personal experience with non-trads, Ms. Leonard feels that these students probably do obtain more academically.

She said, "When the non-trad. student is taught something he/she is more likely to question and consider the information than the traditional student because it can be related to their past experiences."

Leonard also said that the faculty members enjoy teaching the non-trad and "appreciate the interaction from them."

The majority of non-traditionals seem to find college a very positive experience once they get over the initial fears.

Several non-trads expressed that they found learning much easier than anticipated because they already knew a lot more general information than they realized.

Though the non-traditionals may be overrun with determination they still face just as many if not more problems as the traditionals. Most have many responsibilities other than school and must deal with those while adjusting to a new environment.

The initial apprehension experienced by beginning non-trads is probably the greatest obstacle they face. Here are some comments made frequently by non-traditional students:

"In the beginning, I felt lost and alone."

"The first week at UNCW, I thought surely I had jumped in over my head. It felt good to find out that I wasn't the only one in that boat."

"I felt out of place. What was I doing here with all these kids? Then, I found out I wasn't the only student here that was 'over the hill.'"

Aside from the normal fears many also must deal with learning to balance their time between a family, job, and school. All these responsibilities leave little time for a social life and some students complained that they did not have the time or energy to devote towards school activities because of the tight schedule they are forced to keep.

One person stated, "I cannot make last minute arrangements to attend a meeting or event because my family is at home waiting for dinner."

Finances are often a big issue for these students as well.

Most pay tuition and fees from their own pockets. From that same pocket they must also support kids and themselves. Therefore, if a person in the non-traditional category decides to enter college they must be determined because they can not afford to mess around.

Non-traditionals also face other frustrations the average student does not such as the fact that all UNCW services and offices close at 5 pm daily. If he or she works all day and maybe only come for a class during their lunch hour or at night the student is unable to visit the bookstore or student wellness center.

Making appointments with professors and advisors can be difficult also. UNCW has a shortage of night classes so it is difficult for many to get all the courses needed if a day job is held.

Many female students feel the University should have some form of day care center since child care is often hard to come by.

As more and more non-traditional students are entering UNCW the university is receiving a greater number of complaints related to the accommodation of these students.

Though many problems and frustrations are sometimes involved with being a non-traditional student most of them say that it has been worth all the sacrifices and has been a very positive experience.

The UNC-Wilmington library will soon have a Graduate Studies room according to the Director of Library Services, Eugene Huguélet.

He said last week that the L-shaped glassed-in area upstairs is to be a "super quiet area." The largest room, which is at present the Reserve Room, will be for all students. The smaller room will be for graduate studies only.

The two rooms will be able to accommodate approximately 75 students altogether.

Huguélet said the library is ordering new study carrels and "With the growing graduate programs we see the need for a no-noise room," said Huguélet.

He said the entire library reconstruction project is supposed to be finished by the beginning of the second summer session and the Graduate Studies room should be open to the students for the '87 Fall semester.

Student aid getting more complicated

The Higher Education Amendments of 1986 significantly altered the guaranteed loan program for current borrowers as well as prospective applicants.

Unclassified students will no longer be eligible to borrow since regulations now prescribe that only regular degree students may borrow from the program.

In the past, students coming from families with adjusted incomes under $30,000 were automatically eligible. This will no longer be the case as all student applicants will be required to demonstrate financial need.

For most prospective borrowers, loans will now be packaged "up-front" with campus based and other aid, and the prospective borrower will be required to forward a promissory note provided by the University to the appropriate lender.

While the eligibility criteria has been narrowed, the borrowing limits for the program have been expanded. Undergraduates may now borrow $2,625 per year for each of their first two years and $4,000 per year thereafter for three additional years.

Graduates can now borrow up to $7,500 per year for five years.

The interest rate for either graduate or undergraduate students is calculated at 8 percent, and supplemental loans are now available to independent students. Independent undergraduate students may borrow up to $3,000 each year and $4,000 for graduate studies. Unlike guaranteed loans, supplemental loans will be available at the same interest as supplemental loans but can now be borrowed in amounts up to $4,000. Students and parents are to be advised that under the new tax law, interest paid on educational loans is no longer deductible.

Hawk's Nest from 3-5 p.m. compliments of ARA, the campus food service.

Marcella Williams, Assistant Director of Campus Dining Services, said, "This was arranged for the many people that submitted the name 'Hawk's Nest' in the contest that we sponsored." Any student, however, may attend.

Individual studies offered here

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

Eight Student Research Fellowship tuition waivers ($410) are being offered by UNC-Wilmington for the 1987-88 school year. The research can be in any academic area. Credit may also be awarded (along with the waiver) through the D.I.S. or the Honors Program.

"It's a scholarship for doing research," said Dr. Roer, Associate Professor/Research Physiologist and also Research Committee Chairman. He said this Fellowship promotes student involvement with the faculty and "promotes student research - this award is given on merit not financial need".

Joseph Cappell, Director of Financial Aid, said this scholarship program has been going on for several years.

According to Roer, there are usually 15-20 applications for the 14 member committee to choose from. These committee members are from virtually every department on campus.

The student must be a rising Junior or Senior. For more information contact a faculty advisor.

Are candidates intentionally misleading voters?

With the recent speeches and interviews that with the candidates, we felt that you the reader had a right to know that all these politicians promising to relieve the parking problem at UNCW are totally incapable of doing a single productive thing about getting you a place to park.

It was proven at several SGA meetings -- including one with administrators, parking officials, and others -- that while the Senate can suggest all it wants to (and good suggestions have been made), "You are never going to be able to park at your front door" (Vice Chancellor for business affairs R.O. Walton, December 1, 1986 Senate meeting.)

The parking on this campus is not going to get better until people decide to walk from the out-lying parking lots to class. The Senate -- or more specifically the SGA President and the Senate -- are worse than helpless on these and some other problems.

And the Senators and all candidates using the improved parking platform as a political springboard know this.

But they are still trying to tell you what they can do to improve -- or even perfect -- parking at the fastest growing University in the system.

Growth of the University aside, we wish to point out that only one candidate has not attempted to mislead their public by making promises that cannot be kept. That candidate is also the only female candidate on the presidential ballot. Ms. Elizabeth Riffe, present SGA treasurer.

Senator Patrick Toal and Gina Mathis did a fine job earlier this year with a proposal that quite possibly would have worked smoothly and efficiently; the only problem with that is the fact that decisions on parking, building, etc. are made much higher up in the power structure than at the SGA level -- from the level of Chancellor's Advisory Committee and then on and on.

The problem is not solved in a matter of days or weeks; something of this magnitude takes months and years.

And the most that the SGA president can possibly do is make a suggestion, or pass on recommendations as to what they think should be done regarding this problem or any other other.

The presidential candidates who proudly put down on their material "work toward solving the parking problem would -- if that position could do such things.

But it can't. And what is so bad is they know this, and are still misleading students into believing otherwise, that the SGA president can practically save the world singlehandedly -- or at least guarantee everyone a parking place (except resident freshmen, but that is another story.)

It would be grand if the president of the Student Government Association could guarantee parking, but that is impossible.

And yet they promise it.

STUDENT FORUM

Defending morality or violating the Constitution?

EDITOR'S NOTE: It is against stated policy at the Seahawk to print unsigned letters to The Student Forum; however, we decided that the controversy surrounding the subject matter of one of our recent editorials ("Fundamentalists win a round," in the March 11 issue of the Seahawk) and this resulting letter provided justifiable grounds for this shift in policy. The Seahawk does not claim any responsibility for the content of this letter, and we have no knowledge of the writer's name or address. The only clue we have to the writer's identity is an envelope postmarked Harrels, N.C. Once again, we accept no responsibility for the statements made in this letter.

Dear Editor,
In response to the Student Forum, March 11 - Why all the uproar about that Alabama judge's ruling to ban humanistic books in their public schools? Those parents were standing up for what they believed in. They felt that their children's morality was in danger. If any one of us felt that our child was in danger in any way would we just let things go? If he were drowning would we stand back and watch? I should hope not! Maybe it is the parents right to instill their beliefs into their children and the churches duty to teach of Deity. But all of that comes to naught if it is taken away from them at school. How would you feel if you raised your child in the ways you felt were right and someone came right behind you trying to tell him otherwise. This is those parents situation. Sure, some of the kids didn't even know what humanism is about; But sometimes the things we are ignorant of can hurt us the most. Look around you - see all the innocent children on drugs and things like that - granted it doesn't happen a lot. The point is that in our society, people have let things enter our country and stood back and let things go until they've slowly settled in and effected our young people the most because they are ignorant to them. I'm glad those folks down in Alabama decided to take a stand and fight for what they felt to be right. I didn't intend to get drug into this discussion. But I am a Bible-Believing Christian myself and I've decided it was time I started doing a little standing up myself! Oh yes, you are right - Humanism does teach reliance upon oneself instead of God. Let me just share this with you - During the long time that I was reliant on myself alone, I managed to mess up things pretty good in my life. But now I've turned to God and things sometimes still go wrong but now I have someone to talk them over with and I become refreshed - And I see the good things that come with my prayers. I've seen people delivered from the hands of alcohol and drugs through God's grace where many of our civilized rehab centers have failed. Praise God!

A problem that is deer to our hearts

Most UNCW students have never seen a whitetail deer closer than a zoo, or perhaps caught a quick glimpse of shining eyes beside a dark rural highway.

Others still may have seen a roadkilled whitetail, or even worse had this experience first hand -- with the deer and the driver's car coming out on the bad end of the deal.

While coming back from a play in Wilmington (when I still lived in Clinton, N.C.) some friends and I had the misfortune of just such an incident. A yearling buck stepped into the path of our car, and there was no way to avoid the deer without endangering our lives.

The deer shattered the front end of the fairly late model (1985) Buick, and rolled under the wheels before falling into a nearby ditch -- still alive.

There was nothing I could do to end the deer's suffering; the animal cried with a sound frighteningly similar to that of a young child.

A passing motorist found a payphone several miles away, and called the Highway Patrol. It still took the officer thirty minutes to get to where we were (at that point we were not sure if the car was too badly damaged to drive another forty miles).

The animal died a few minutes before the officer arrived.

While I sat in the patrol car with the officer (without an accident report an insurance company will not honor a claim, and very few deer have liability coverage), he commented that this was the seventh (!) deer accident he had seen that November night. Four had been badly injured, and had to be killed when he got there (it is illegal to shoot a deer for any reason after dark without a permit to do so) and the others had been killed outright.

Why do I bring up such a gory subject?

As an enthusiastic hunter and outdoorsman and a veteran roamer of the Sampson-Bladen-Harnett Counties area, I and many others have become aware of the rising problem of too many deer in an area that was once nearly devoid of animals.

And I have been involved in two deer related accidents (one over spring break) and nearly everyone in my hometown has a "deer story".

...and I was doing right on the speed limit, and suddenly it jumped out of a ditch, right into the road...

"I didn't know what to do. Here I was, a pregnant woman, in the middle of nowhere, and my car was nose down in a ditch because I hit a deer, and the thing was lying in the ditch screaming in pain..."

And literally dozens of others. During the mating (rutting) season, male deer (bucks) often become emboldened or blind to the dangers posed by a major highway such as US 17 or 421 - two highways many of you are very familiar with. Both my accidents occurred on US 421, in rural Pender County.

The first, over a year ago, involved a rutting deer; the second involved a pair of deer that were grazing on that beautiful, and apparently delicious, green grass that the state of North Carolina so thoughtfully planted along the highways, providing deer, and other animals, with the opportunity to get a very easy meal and make themselves targets for drivers whenever the deer decide that the grass is greener on the other side of the two-lane.

The grass (and I understand, flowers are next) are designed to beautify the highways, to make traveling in North Carolina more enjoyable.

Apparently, in the infinite wisdom that all politicians and bureaucrats seem to possess, they forget to take into consideration the animals that would be maimed or sentenced to a lingering death by their actions in that decision.

To be fair, the problem does not lay only in the decision to unwittingly transform highway right-of-ways into cafeterias. The problem also lies with a problem the South has only recently begun to experience -- Urban Sprawl.

Urban sprawl chases the animals out of their former homelands into an area that is already crowded with overpopulation and is not capable of safely supporting the numbers forced upon it. And mankind adds another twist to the noose already tight around the neck of wildlife.

The superfarm, capable of growing huge amounts of food, and humans aren't the only animal that enjoys farm products.

My father, a reporter for a Clinton newspaper, recently interviewed a farmer in Sampson County who was applying for a deprivation license in order to thin

Does the Safe Roads Act work?

View From Right Field

By Montague Britt

Montague Britt is a retired Capitol Hill reporter from Northern Virginia. Column distributed by LTI Features.

North Carolina's fine Governor, Jim Martin, is behind a long-overdue move to cope with the ever-increasing slaughter on the highways.

Since the safe roads act has been in force in the Tar Heel State, results have been mixed, a sharp improvement in the beginning but fatalities have been going back up for some time.

One important feature of the new list of proposals is a 15-year prison term for felonious death by vehicle. This is a step in the right direction, but doesn't go far enough.

Admittedly, my long-time proposal that drinking drivers involved in fatal accidents be subject to the death penalty - appropriate as I sincerely believe it to be -- would be difficult if not impossible to get enacted into law and if enacted, might not survive a federal court challenge.

But what the public ought to know and bear in mind is that a defendant sentenced to 15 years would serve only a fraction of that time. In North Carolina right now, for example, a life sentence actually means 20 years unless the defendant loses some of the automatic time off, which rarely occurs.

I have also proposed, for many years, that a second conviction for driving under the influence, or while impaired if that is how the law reads, should carry a mandatory prison term and the offender should lose driving privileges for life.

These acts wouldn't eliminate either drinking drivers or highway deaths entirely, but there certainly would be a major decrease in both.

Regrettably, there are also all sorts of efforts underway to legalize or "decriminalize" the use of some, if not all, drugs.

Admittedly, narcotic laws are hard to enforce, but with stiffer penalties now imposed in most states and with drug agents receiving more intense training and new methods constantly being developed, the task is by no means hopeless.

Instead of making it easier to obtain and use drugs we need tougher laws dealing with such cases and more steps to discourage the use of both alcohol and drugs, particularly if the person is operating a vehicle on a public highway.

No punishment that could be imposed could bring back a person whose life has been lost or restore to health a person crippled by these menaces on the highways.

Rather than condoning, even glorifying, the use of alcohol and drugs, their use should be stigmatized, which might be even more effective than the tough laws.

"YOU CAN'T DIRECT THE WIND; BUT YOU CAN ADJUST YOUR SAILS"

This saying which I have framed and sitting on a table in my office came to mind frequently as we sailed through the Bahamas during Spring Break. It was a good time to think. Life slowed down a good bit and allowed reflection.

It's really true. The winds blow where the winds will and there was nothing that we could do to make the winds come from any other direction than they did except change the set of our sails. We had to adapt to the conditions around us, for the conditions around us would not adapt to our whim and fancy or, even, need.

What is really important in terms of human behavior is coming to understand how responsible we are for the manner in which we react to conditions in our life over which we have no control.

There is a tendency among humans to blame factors outside of ourselves for bad moods, bad grades, bad relationships, and so on. It is true that many things happen to us that are unpleasant, i.e. the winds blowing from the wrong direction, but we choose how we react to these circumstances. If I run around on my cruise, I can get angry at the Captain or I can find a cold place to read and then swim. That's my choice. If a friend snubs us, we can get angry and pull away from them or we can wonder what's going on in their life that causes them to behave in a way that appears abnormal and show concern. A stimulus is a stimulus is a stimulus. Our plans and relationships get disrupted all the time. But no one makes you or I angry, sad, weak, or helpless. We are totally in charge of our response. Our peace of mind, happiness or sense of well-being lies completely in our own hands.

Rather than blaming outside circumstances, we would do well to take time and reflect on the way we react to the conditions around us. We would do well to look in ourselves and seek the deeper dimensions of peace and patience and joy and understanding that would allow us to enjoy our sail through life no matter which way the winds may blow.

Attic treasures yield recipes

By Claire Covert
Syndicated Columnist

Lucky is the house that has an attic; there are always treasures to be found. Things get tucked away all year long and then when spring begins its annual breakthrough, the attic (and the rest of the house) must come in for its share of spring cleaning.

It is that time of year, when it is too cold to work outside, too messy underfoot to clean the "living part" of the house, but just the right temperature to crawl around under the eaves foraging in boxes and cartons hidden away since last year.

At our house, there is never enough shelf space for books, so periodically, boxes of books get carried upstairs.

I had a friend whose mother said that if she didn't stop stacking so much stuff upstairs the ceiling was going to fall down. I sometimes think ours is going to do the same from the sheer weight of the books.

In those stacks found during my most recent foraging were books by two of my favorite authors, Gladys Tabor (now deceased), and the other, Peg Bracken.

Both authors sprinkled recipes liberally in their books.

Mrs. Tabor, a New Englander remembered for her Stillmeadow series, often gave us recipes for hearty stews, chowders and soups. Miss Bracken, a Californian, gives us recipes that have the cook in and out of the kitchen in short order.

One of my favorite of her's is called "Aggression Cookie". Why? The oatmeal dough is so thick and stiff that it refuses to budge for a mixer or a spoon. It has to have a hands-on touch, more like a beating, something that is not often used in baking.

She claims that by pummeling, kneading, punching, and mangling the dough, all tensions are removed and the dough still remains fit to eat when baked up into cookies.

For those on a limited time budget, you must wait until summer vacation — this recipe takes too much time. I have been told that all sorts of measures are taken by students to keep from releasing their tensions in like manner on professors who schedule exams just after spring breaks. Better to beat some dough than the professor who holds the grade power.

Miss Bracken did include a recipe that most college students should measure, though. It takes little time, effort and money, but reaps a harvest for hungry students.

It is enough for two or four with a big salad. I have not been able to figure out why, but she calls it "Let'er Buck."

During my college days, and I understand this still happens, friends would bring part of a meal, others would bring other parts and soon there would be an impromptu party with plenty of food. This is just the type thing that was taken, usually to a friend's house with small children so they would not have to hire a sitter.

Take a big piece of foil, turn it into a dish by turning the sides up a little, cut a long loaf of french bread in half, length-wise.

Now spread on the following, as listed: one jar, about 8 ounces, of processed cheese spread, make sure this goes all the way to the edge so your loaf won't get soggy.

Now cover your meat, any kind, sliced and diced or cooked and crumbed, left over Sunday roast from home, turkey, hamburger, anything.

Drain two small cans of mushrooms, sprinkle these on, top with 1 1/2 teaspoons oregano, 3/4 cup chopped green onions (tops too), 1 1/2 cup tomato sauce and finally drizzle 4 tablespoons of oil over the entire thing.

DON'T broil, just warm in a 350 degree oven for 20 minutes. I don't know about microwave ovens, but for those lucky enough to have one, experiment.

There is always the chance of finding a friend in some box hidden away under the eaves in the attic. Explore it someday.

Overpopulation killing whitetails

out the deer herd on his farm and save his crops. While they talked, a half dozen deer leaped, played and ate the farmer's soybeans, not three hundred yards away.

A deprivation license is granted to people who can prove that deer or other animals are destroying or harming their crops. The license, granted by the Wildlife Resources Commission, allows the licensee to shoot animals out of season, but under strict controls.

The farmer showed my father three deer that had been shot earlier that day by hunters. All three animals were starved, undernourished, and one had been suffering from poisoning caused by ingestion of herbicides.

"Nothing I can do. Too damn many of 'em to live off the land, so they eat my farm," said the farmer.

What can be done? How can the animals be reduced in population to a number capable of producing healthy (about waist high at the deer's shoulder) deer instead of the herd we have now, with rough average of about two thirds or less than the average.

A mass hunt staged in Florida two years ago was loudly acclaimed as "mass murder" by several animal rights groups who tried unsuccessfully to capture and return to the mainland several thousand deer that were trapped and starving on a small island surrounded by floodwaters.

While the hunters killed several hundred of the animals, even more managed to survive because the reduced numbers reduced demand for food among their survivors. And the animals were not wasted in death from disease or starvation.

A similar hunt in New Jersey some years ago saved the entire state's deer herd from destruction by trichinosis and a disease that deteriorates hooves and teeth (much like the same disease that is showing up in Cumberland and Bladen Counties as you read these words.)

Will it take a New Jersey or Florida situation to make us realize that something must be done if we are to save our deer herds? Or must we continue to see — or worse, experience — roadkills that waste one of our most precious resources, and cost unlucky drivers thousands of dollars (total on my first accident—$2000) time and time again?

Some of you will undoubtedly have seen the word "HUNTER" and immediately decided that I was a cowboy-booted-weekend-warrior who runs innocent deer down with his great big four-wheel-drive armored vehicle armed with heat-seeking missiles designed to blow away little spotted fawns. Nothing could be further from the truth.

There are too many rednecks who would call themselves hunters who fit that exaggerated description so closely it hurts the rest of us trying to preserve a more positive image.

But there are many, many others, involved in conservation groups around the nation, who don't stop thinking of deer when the season closes January 1, and if they have a full freezer, they don't shoot another deer for the hell of it.

These hunters — true sportsmen — are like the one who stopped with me that night over spring break when a deer had run full force into the side of my car. He didn't have to stop; he certainly didn't have to help me look for the deer after it ran away.

But, like all true sportsmen and outdoorsmen, he did so because he cared what happened to the animal.

Would a flower-planting bureaucrat from Raleigh or a flower waving animal rightist have done the same?

So Long Seniors

To the seniors on the 1986-87 men's and women's basketball teams: Thanks for all the memories.

Thanks to Wanda Carroll the four years she helped the Lady Seahawks challenge the best, for the game of her career in which she scored a school-record 39 points, for all her hard work, for the memories.

Thanks to Brian Rowsom, the Big Man on Campus these past four years, for all the records he set, for the miracle shot against East Carolina, for all those great battles against David Robinson, for that unbelievable soft-touch around the basket, and for all those unorthodox free throws (which almost always went in). Thanks for the memories.

Thanks to Rob Wagner, the fiery point guard who gave such solid effort every time out. For the great game against East Carolina last season that help UNCW to a crushing win, for the few times you shot, and for all those times you came off the bench to settle the offense and get things back on track. Thanks for the memories.

Thanks to Charles Cherry for his relentless play underneath the basket, for all those crucial rebounds, for all those shots from the top key, and for your silent leadership. Thanks for the memories.

Thanks to Ben Futman for just being Ben. For all those monster slams and for all those big smiles after those prime time jams. Thanks for the memories.

Thanks to Sandy Anderson for all those great shooting nights and the so-so nights, for the great defense you played, and for all those emotional moments that the media seems to always get. Thanks for the memories.

And thanks finally to Kevan "Crash" Miles for all those gutsy moves, for all those spectacular rebounding fouls that earned you the name "Crash", and that famous mouthpiece. Thanks for the memories.

To the Class of 1987, we've won some together, we've lost some together, but either way, you've enhanced not only UNCW with your contributions, but every Seahawk fan who followed you these past few years. We wish you all the luck in the world and again, THANKS!!!

Since basketball season is just about over, except for the nearly year-round NBA, here are my first annual Shanklin Superlatives.

Player-of-the-Year: David Robinson, of course. He was a one-man wrecking machine who could beat any defense. This one wasn't even close.

Coach-of-the-Year: Dale Brown of LSU. The psycho from Bayou Land found a way to stay in the headlines all-year long with the pursuit to sign him the Soviet National Team. He also wins the award for his coaching ability that got the Bayou Bengals to the semis of the Southeastern Conference and the sweet sixteen of the NCAA tourney.

All-University Team: David Robinson (Navy), Steve Alford (Indiana), Reggie Williams (Georgetown), Danny Manning (Kansas), and Kenny Smith (North Carolina).

All-World Team: Dennis Hopson (Ohio State), Ken Norman (Illinois), Troy Lewis (Purdue), Horace Grant (Clemson), and Gary Grant (Michigan).

All-No Respect Team: Derek McKey (Alabama), Roy Marble (Iowa), Fennis Dembo (Wyoming), Vernon Maxwell (Florida), and Billy Donovan (Providence).

All-Brick Team: Dave Popson (North Carolina), Mike Giomi (N.C. State), Marco Baldi (St. John's), Craig Neal (Georgia Tech), and the starting five for the William & Mary squad.

Best Fans: Indiana's fans. At every game, the Indiana faithful wear their red sweaters and have the most emotion of any fans you'll see. Truly first-class.

Worst Fans: American University's and Campbell's. American's because they have none and Campbell because they have the littlest knowledge of any basketball fans.

Most Obnoxious Fans: Duke's, who else would have them. (UNCW recieved a few notes from the Star-News, administration, and some East Carolina fans.)

Best Nicknames: UNCW's Kevan "Crash" Miles and Derrick "Band-Aid" Chievious of Missouri.

Shot-of-the-Year: (The) Rowsom's bomb against East Carolina and all of Ben Pittman's slam.

Dunk-of-the-Year: Mark Gary's slam against East Carolina, his first as a Seahawk.

Best Dance Team: The James Madison Dukettes. Words cannot describe these "fabulous babes".

Best Mascot: Mrs. Margaret Harris, the 81-year old fan of the Naval Academy who does a cheer and a cartwheel at every Navy football and basketball game.

Worst Mascots: Campbell's Camel who rides around on a silly tricycle (typical of Campbell) and Coastal Carolina's Chicken.

Best 3-pt Shooter: Brian Vreeswyk (Temple), Amp Davis (George Mason), Doug Novsek (Southern Illinois), and Michigan's Garde Thompson.

The Worst Zebra: Wayne Samford of Campbell and James Madison fame. Ya, you remember that short little guy who thought he knew every call.

Best Facility: The Robins Center in Richmond

Worst Facility: Boston College's answer for an on-campus arena. This is why they play all their games in Boston Garden.

Best Newspaper Headline: N.C. Wilmington expunges BC 62-59 (Boston Globe after the UNCW win over Boston College)

Most Ridiculous Line: "We are a much better team than UNCW," said Richmond Head Coach Dick Tarrant after his Spiders were beaten by UNCW for the third time this season.

Biggest Crybabes: George Mason's Kenny Sanders and Louisville's Denny Crum after his team was left out of the NCAA Tournament.

Best Sign: "The Fly is Open; Let's Go Peasy!" during the Austin Peay-Providence game in the NCAA Tournament.

Gold Medal Awards: To UNCW Head Coach Robert McPherson and his coaches for a fine season, to David Robinson for being David Robinson, to the Wilmington Community for finally coming out, and to the Star-News for their usual, nothing.

The Dirty Sock and Smelly Glok Awards: To the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) for snubbing UNCW from the tourney, to Atlantic Christian for coming to Wilmington, to Campbell for their hospitality, and to the Star-News for nothing at all.

Seahawks sweep USC Aiken

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

This weekend the UNCW baseball team swept a very explosive USC-Aiken squad. The Pacers, who had scored 108 runs in their last nine games entering the weekend, were silenced by the Seahawk pitching staff as the Seahawks downed the Pacers 6-3 and 3-2 in their two meetings.

In Sunday's game, UNCW used three hits and two walks in the first inning to get an early 3-0 lead. With two men on Chuck Jones doubled in a run, Mike Bryers followed with RBI single, and Eric Hickman knocked in the third run with a ground ball.

UNCW scoring continued with a run in the sixth inning, and two more in the seventh, putting the game out of reach. Mike Meadows started the seventh inning scoring with a walk and a stolen base. He was followed by three consecutive walks, producing the Seahawk two runs.

Wesley Currin went seven innings for the victory to run his record 3-1. Currin allowed five hits and one earned run, while walking six and striking out four.

The first game of the series was decided on what appeared to be a routine ground ball. With the bases loaded and none out, USC-Aiken's shortstop Barry Butler made a wild throw home to end the game.

Spring Roundup

The Seahawks tied the game at one apiece in the second on a fielder's choice.

UNCW took the lead for the first time in the sixth on a Chuck Jones double, driving in Mike Meadows.

Again, UNCW took advantage of base on balls in the ninth inning. Dwayne Graham and Scott Brady started the inning by receiving free passes to first. Calvin Garrett loaded the bases with a bunt single. Then Mitch

First baseman Chuck Jones slides around USC-Aiken catcher Vince Malizia to score during UNCW's game with the Pacers Sunday. Jones was scored after hitting a run scoring double. UNCW won the game 6-3 behind the pitching of Wesley Currin, who picked up his third win on the young season.

Wells stepped into the batter's box and delivered the unlikely game-winning hit.

The two victories over the weekend allowed the Seahawks to run their record to 7-6. The wins were the sixth and seventh straight for the UNCW squad. UNCW returned to action Tuesday at Campbell University.

Softball team has tough weekend

Sunday the Lady Seahawks softball team defeated Eastern Connecticut 2-0 in the first game of a double-header. The Lady 'Hawks were led by the five-hit pitching performance of Lisa Primovic.

In the second game UNCW collected only five hits, and were held scoreless in a losing effort 3-0. Kathy Cochran had three of the Lady Seahawks hits.

Eastern Connecticut is the defending NCAA Division III women's softball champions.

In other action over the weekend the Lady Seahawks dropped both games of a double-header to Wayne State by the scores 5-3 and 4-1.

In the second game UNCW's only run was driven by Colleen St. Ledger who had two hits on the afternoon. Pitcher Lisa Primovic did not allow an earned run in the game.

The Lady Seahawks ran their record to 7-9 going into today's contest with Baptist College.

Kurt Candler Finishes 19th

At the Southeast Regional NCAA Diving Qualifying Meet in Baton Rouge, LA, UNCW diver Kurt Candler placed 19th on the 3-meter board.

Candler's performance was the best finish ever by a UNCW diver. Candler finished with a score of 417.90.

Lady Netters win 2 of 3

The UNCW women's tennis team won two of their three matches during the past week. The Lady Hawks defeated Aquinas of Michigan 9-0 and Francis Marion 9-0. The Lady Seahawks only setback this week was to Elon College. Elon defeated UNCW in close match 5-4.

In men's tennis action this week the Seahawk squad split their matches. UNCW dropped a Colonial Athletic Association tennis match to James Madison 9-0, while blanking St. Andrews 9-0.

Junior League Follies open Thursday

The Junior League of Wilmington will present its annual special fundraiser Follies on March 19, 20, and 21 at 8 p.m. at Kanan Auditorium on campus.

This Follies theme, "Cheers for Years: Wilmington Celebrates," is the kick-off of Wilmington's 250th anniversary in 1989 and the 20th anniversary of the inclusion of UNCW in the University System.

Jersome H. Cargill Producing Organization, New York, NY, will produce the 1987 Follies. Billed as the "Leading Producers of Smart Amateur Revues since 1919," Cargill provides the director, the script, the music, and the costumes.

The Junior League and community volunteers provide the cast and crew. Approximately 200-250 people are involved in staging the production, which Wilmington pianist Duke Ladd has described as "a musical extravaganza."

Ticket information may be obtained by calling Lynn Dunn at 763-1061 or Martha Williams at 762-7693.

Junior League Activities

The Junior League of Wilmington has contributed over a half million dollars and countless hours of volunteer service to the Wilmington area in the past sixty years. In addition to special fundraisers such as the Follies, its continuous sources of income are an annual Bargain Sale and two cookbook publications. All funds raised from the community are returned to the community. Recent funds and volunteer services that have returned to Wilmington to:

- help a battered wife regain her self respect and her children to forget the nightmare of abuse (Domestic Violence Shelter and Services, Inc. - $43,000)

- teach fifth graders the wonders of marine life (Sea Scholars, North Carolina Aquarium)

- save teenagers from a life of drugs (Substance Abuse Curriculum for K-12, $25,000)

- provide the technology to detect hearing disabilities in young children (Tympanometer for New Hanover Public Schools)

- publish and preserve the architectural history of Wilmington (Wilmington, N.C.: An Architectural and Historical Portrait)

- provide a quiet place at the library for children (furnishings at New Hanover County Library, Children's Dept. - $25,000)
- dramatize the writings of North Carolina authors on Public Radio ("Carolina Bookshelf" - 13 week series)

- help preserve a national treasure...Thalian Hall (professional plans to redesign the theatre's backstage - $10,000)

And most recently...

The Junior League of Wilmington voted to support the North Carolina Society for the Prevention of Blindness in its efforts to reach people in time to prevent blindness caused by eye disease and accidents. The expected financial commitment is $8,500.

In the first year, (1987-88), League volunteer teams will be trained to screen pre-schoolers for early childhood diseases that can strike. In the second and third years, one non-contact tonometer machine and related equipment will be purchased for use in New Hanover and surrounding counties to do initial screening for glaucoma.

Funds raised at the "Cheers for Years: Wilmington Celebrates" Follies will be used to help support the new project "Sight: Our Most Precious Sense" and other ongoing projects of the League.

Schweitzer Award for acting announced

Murray Abraham, who won the Academy Award for Best Actor for his performance in the motion picture Amadeus, will receive the Albert Schweitzer Medal for Artistry for classic film acting in ceremonies April 8 in Wilmington, N.C.

Abraham's participation in the pageantry of the Schweitzer Medals for Artistry concerts was announced today by concert executive director, Jim Burns. Abraham will join Mary Martin and a host of other celebrities and young artists in the spring gala. This will mark the fourth year of the Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts, held in St. Mary's Catholic Church on Fifth Street.

Proceeds from the benefit concerts help to fund Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, awarded every four years on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The prizes recognize contributions in music, medicine and the humanities, three areas in which Schweitzer excelled. Prior prize recipients include Mother Teresa (later a Nobel Laureate), Andres Segovia, and Gian Carlo Minotti.

An announcement about the date and place of ticket sales for the Medals for Artistry Concerts will be forth coming soon, according to Burns. He also commented that he was extremely pleased that Abraham had agreed to come to Wilmington to accept the Medal.

In addition to the Academy Award for his performance of Salieri in Amadeus, Abraham received the Los Angeles Film Critics Award and the Golden Globe for the part. On Broadway, Abraham starred in the premiere of Isaac Bashevis Singer's Tebele and Her Demon. He has also starred in Legend with Elizabeth Ashley, Bad Habits, The Ritz and The Man in the Glass Booth.

Abraham has appeared in many Off-Broadway productions including Andrei Serban's Uncle Vanya at LaMama, for which he received an Obie Award, and The Seagull at the Public Theatre. Also at The New York Shakespeare Festival, he starred in The Golem, Antigone, The Master and Marguerite directed by Mr. Serban, and John Guare's The Landscape of the Body.

Other Off-Broadway credits include The Madwoman of Chailot with Geraldine Page, The Catecheter, at the Roundabout, Sexual Perversity in Chicago, Where Has Tommy Flowers Gone?, Tonight in Living Color, Adaptation/Next, Joyce Carol Oates' Miracle Play and The Fantasticks. With the New Theatre Establishment Company, he appeared in Rip Torn's Richard III, Fables, The Dog Ran Away and at LaMama in Last Chance Saloon.

Abraham toured with Sandy Dennis in the national company of And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little and starred in the revival of herb Gardner's The Goodbye People at the Westport Playhouse. He appeared in the title role in Center Stage's Cyrano De Bergerac.

In the film The Ritz, his other films include Scarface, The Big Fix, The Sunshine Boys, The Prisoner of Second Avenue, All The President's Men, Serpico, and They Might Be Giants.

On television he starred in the film Sex and the Married Woman and he guest starred on The Andy Taylor, Kojak and All in the Family. He co-starred with John Cassavetes in Nightshade and he appeared on How to Survive a Marriage. Abraham co-starred in the NBC mini-series Marco Polo. Abraham also starred with Sean Connery in The Name of the Rose.

Laser concert in Trask

The Soundwave Concert Committee of the University Program Board will sponsor Voyager IV, a laser light rock concert on Wednesday, March 18 in Trask Coliseum. Performance times will be 8 and 10 p.m.. Admission for students will be $3, general public $5.

Voyager IV

The Laser- The purest form of light known to man

First there was Laser Rock, then Constellation II. Now, Voyager IV blasts off at 186,000 feet a second, bringing you the latest in high tech laser entertainment. Watch as Voyager IV turns Trask Coliseum into an odyssey of sight and sound.

Voyager IV features a one-watt Krypton laser with both computer-generated and live-visual illusions. The Krypton laser is projected on a gigantic 20-foot tall by 30-foot wide screen. An argon laser, based at the bottom of the screen, shoots out 3-dimensional laser beams right over the audience's heads. The beams then hit 30 crystal mirrors and cause a visual spider web of lasers. This is also known as the "star wars" effect. Smoke jets and the famous star-field, as seen in planetariums, complete the visual package.

The soundtrack for Voyager IV features the latest in album oriented rock; Genesis, ZZ Top, U2, Dire Straits, The Who, and more.

The concert sound system supplied by Bose stuns your senses as you hear the state of the art in audio technology.

The Voyager IV Laser Concert tours totally self-contained, featuring two laser systems, computers, the Bose Concert Sound System and two laserists who will be your hosts. The evening includes two full 70-minute shows.

Brian Morris and Joseph Hoey combine talents in Les Deux Amis

Guitar duo in concert

Les Deux Amis, (the two friends), originally a guitar duo by the great 19th century guitarist, Fernando Sor, is an appropriate name for the exciting guitar duo which features the classical guitar expertise of artists Brian Morris and Joseph Hoey. The duo will be appearing in concert at 3pm on Sunday at St. John's Museum of Art.

The two artists began to play together while completing graduate studies at Florida State University. After only five months' rehearsal, they were awarded third place honors in the Guitar Foundation of America's first international duo competition.

At present, both Morris and Hoey are artists-in-residence in the North Carolina Visiting Artist Program. Their wide performing agenda takes them throughout the south and midwest, from country schoolhouses to major concert halls. They are often featured artists on public radio, and have scheduled a debut album for release sometime this year.

Brian Morris has performed throughout the U.S. He has studied with such guitar masters as Christopher Parkening, Bruce Holzman, and Manuel Barrueco. His sensitive interpretation and warm, vibrant sound have been lauded throughout the country, and he is currently the Visiting Artist at James Sprunt Technical Institute in Kenansville.

Joseph Hoey has toured throughout the U.S. and England. His career has encompassed numerous solo appearances as well as extensive work with both American and English chamber groups. He is currently the Visiting Artist at Wayne Community College in Goldsboro.

The duo recently toured the southeastern U.S. with the UNCW choir. Their Sunday concert is sponsored by the Visiting Artist Program at Cape Fear Technical Institute and is free to the public.

'How The Other Half Loves': A witty delight!

By Anne Simpson, Staff Writer

Frivolous, fun, witty, even wicked at times — that was the Thalian Association's latest offering this past weekend, "How the Other Half Loves."

Directed by Mitchell Butts, himself a talented actor, this show was as spritely an evening's entertainment as this reviewer has seen in a long time.

The story is about three couples; the husband of one is foolin' around with the wife of another, who throws suspicion on the third wife, who has no idea this intrigue is going on and whose mousy husband goes berserk when the twisted web woven by the two deceivers snags him...and so on through an unabashedly farcical plot.

All the performances sparkled and carried the show without a hitch. There was no dramatic depth to the acting, but then none was called for in this just-for-fun play.

James Dowd, as Frank Foster, was amusingly oblivious to the deceptions of his haughty wife Fiona, played elegantly by Theresa Rossi.

Larry Evans was appropriately insensitive as the macho-animal Bob Phillips, and Laure Quinlivan as his wife Teresa was delightfully kooky as the frustrated young mother with cabin fever.

The mousy couple drawn unsuspecting into the intrigue, William and Mary Detweiler, were played well (and it's hard to be really dull) by Don Bland and Kim Kiefer respectively.

The set was the two homes of the Fosters and Phillips, with an incomplete wall between. It pointed out visually the difference in the two women — Fiona's house just-so, Terry's a disaster scene. The dirty diapers and stacked beer cans on the Phillips' side were a nice touch. And the set made possible one witty piece of business — the domestically inept Terry lighting her dinner-table candle from Fiona's (poor Terry, she just doesn't have Fiona's touch.)

"The music, all classic old cheatin' songs like "I heard it through the grapevine" worked well between scenes.

Much credit goes to director Mitch Butts for making this comedy as funny and clever as it should have been — good light treatment for a good light play.

Theatre

Cast set for 'Cuckoo's Nest'

Opera House Productions proudly announces the cast of Dale Wasserman's Academy Award Winner, One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest. The show, about a sane man admitted to a mental institution and the conflicts that arise, promises to be hilariously funny while, at the same time, shocking with dramatic impact.

Featuring members of the Opera House Corps Acting Company, the show stars Clifford Daniel as the fun-loving yet rebellious McMurphy, and Rhessa Stone as the severe Nurse Ratched. Jim Grimshaw, Chuck Kinlaw, Michael Hartle, Myron Shuckman, Tommy Hull, Mark Smith, and Tony Pender appear as the patients McMurphy befriends. Also appearing are Lynette Ashby, Suzette Bridges, Eric Carl, Jason Evans, David Parker, Jack Pennycook, Bill Verreen, Dan Wargo, and Linda Jewell. The roles of Candy and Sandra, two friends of McMurphy's from "the outside" are played by Debra Shuckman and Peri Crapo. Anna Smith is guest director with set and lighting design by Rob Daughtry. Costumes are by Cindy Miles of Jacksonville.

Performances are March 23-29, 8:00 p.m., at Thalian Hall. A special matinee benefiting the Big Buddy program will be held Saturday, March 28, at 3:00 p.m. All tickets are $8 and $10, with matinee tickets $7 (general seating). Opera House advises those interested to purchase tickets early to insure best seats. Call the box office at Thalian Hall for information and reservations.

Midnight Creepers to appear at Kingfish's

The Midnight Creepers are a celebration of one of America's greatest contributions to world culture - blues music. And who better to celebrate it with than two generations of bluesbreakers led by one of the truly influential tenor sax player's Noble "Thin Man" Watts.

The career of the legendary Watts has spanned five decades. As a band leader, he sparked landmark blues combos featuring Bill Doggett, Paul "Hucklebuck" Williams and Tiny Bradshaw. As a recording artist, his classic blues instrumentals "Hard Times" and "Jukin'" topped the charts in the late fifties. As a pacesetter tenor player, his rhythm and phrasing inspired a generation of sax greats from King Curtis to Clarence Clemons. And, with the Midnight Creepers, this seasoned showman is playing and singing a brand of storming rhythm and blues that proves his chops are still among the best on the choppin' block.

The Midnight Creepers are more than just a blues band; they are a blues extravaganza. Their blues-arama runs the gamut from down-home country blues to urban Chicago-style rhythm and blues; from energetic electric blues to straight ahead tributes to such blues masters as Muddy Waters, Jimmy Reed and John Lee Hooker.

The band is a diverse yet cohesive array of blues apostles. Singer Mike Galloway's mastery of the harmonica is as complete as his voice is compelling. Bass player Bob Greenlee is the anchor, singing the blues with growling conviction. During Greenlee's reign as the figurehead of Rot Boy Slim and the Sex Change Band, he and Creepers' guitarist Ernie Lancaster created the Root Boy persona that made "boogie till you puke" a national buzz word. When it comes to scorching blues guitar Lancaster can ignite a six-string with the best of them. Axeman Bryan Bassett adds his unique style to the steady, driving force of Greenlee and Lancaster, creating a solid unified powerhouse of sound. Bassett began his musical career as one of the founders of Wild Cherry, a group best known for their #1 hit, "Play That Funky Music White Boy."

The Midnight Creepers' first album on King Snake Records, Daytona Blues, is a highly combustible mixture of white-hot rhythms and slow-burning roadhouse blues. The LP features "Jukin'" and "Hard Times," two classic instrumentals by Watts; and also highlights the song-writing talents of Bob Greenlee, who penned the remaining tunes on the album.

Alternately crooning and wailing, but always powerful, The Midnight Creepers are authentic blues. Led by the charming Noble "Thin Man" Watts, these talented performers work together as only veterans can, producing a gumbo of sight and sound so spicy you can't get enough. Dig in! You're going to enjoy the Midnight Creepers! The band will be making an appearance in Wilmington this weekend, when they appear both Friday and Saturday nights at Kingfish's Oarhouse downtown.

The Midnight Creepers will appear this weekend at Kingfish's Oarhouse

Suggs to appear

One of Florida's premier performers will be appearing at the UNC-Wilmington University Union. Del Suggs, popular singer and songwriter, brings his guitar to North Carolina to perform at 8 p.m., Thursday, Mar. 19 in Room 100. Admission is free and refreshments will be served.

Suggs tours exclusively on the college circuit and performs in concert at over 75 schools a year. He has shared the stage with such notables as Garrison Keillor (of Prairie Home Companion), the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Mac MacAnnally, Tim Weisberg, Gamble Rogers, Steve Meisburg, Jerry Clower, Pierce Pettis and many others. He has been recognized with endorsement agreements with Ovation Guitars and Peavey Electronics. These fine companies provide him with outstanding guitars and sound equipment for tour support.

'Poe in Person'

New York actor Conrad Pomerleau will bring the master of the macabre, Edgar Allan Poe, to life onstage in his acclaimed solo show, "Poe in Person" at UNCW, 8 p.m., Thursday, Mar. 26 in Room 100 of the University Union.

Tickets are $2 for general admission and $1 for UNCW students with ID. Desserts will be served. This program is sponsored by the University Program Board.

One of America's earliest literary greats, Poe is acknowledged today as the father of the modern mystery story. His "The Pit and the Pendulum," "The Cask of Amontillado," "The Raven," are among his best known works.

In "Poe in Person," actor Pomerleau portrays the poet at age 39 (just before his death), recounting his 20 years of struggle to establish a literary reputation for himself and his country despite poverty, personal tragedy, and ill health.

For ten years, "Poe in Person" has played to packed houses from Richmond to San Francisco, receiving rare reviews and standing ovations. It was chosen to open the Poe House in Philadelphia and is an annual event at Poe Cottage in the Bronx. In 1979, Pomerleau received Chicago's Jeff Award nomination for his performance. Last season he performed as Poe off-Broadway at the American Place Theatre in "The Doings of Gotham."

"Poe in Person" brings this little understood American genius into focus, revealing a complex man who is far from the sinister, brooding drunkard depicted by his early biographers. Pomerleau shows us that Poe was a political idealist with an incisive wit and a satiric humor, an acute observer of his contemporary American society.

DORM LIFE

Text by Jeff Weaver

"Big Joe," "Bud Man," and an unidentified friend discuss a disputable hit on a dart board in one of the suites in Graham Hall.

Oh, the joys of washing clothes. Almost makes you want to move back home.

Life in the residence halls of any campus is legendary. The cramped quarters, combined with a dozen loud stereos on as many stations, the partying, the studying, all these things combine to make dorm life either a blast or a bust.

We sent Head Photographer Wes Perry on assignment to the residence halls to snap a few shots that would express dormitory life at UNCW as well as could be done without experiencing life on campus.

Here are some of his most candid shots of some very surprised folks.

Editor's note: if your picture appears in this essay, and you would like a copy, please drop by the Seahawk office, and we will provide you with your photo free of charge.

"Anyway, there was this guy in the hall with a camera, and ... OHMYGOD! HE TOOK MY PICTURE!"

The second largest pastime in the residence halls — and elsewhere. Studying.

THE CANDIDATES SPEAK

The UNCW Seahawk March 18, 1987 page 15

By David Rouse,
Senate Correspondent

There are two people running for the S.G.A. Vice President seat this year, David B. King and Karla Fontaine Alston. In an interview with the Seahawk, King was more quiet than most on the issues, preferring to let his record as a senator represent him. About his work as a senator King says that he is proud of his habit of expressing his own viewpoint, and his support of underdog positions.

Ms. Alston has three main planks in her campaign platform: An improvement of inter-student relations, decreasing student apathy, and increasing the University's cultural arts program.

She feels that "more activities that allow students to meet each other" need to be planned. Getting the off-campus students involved is a goal for Ms. Alston who feels that UNCW students should "Get to know each other as fellow Seahawks."

"Eye catching" adds are necessary to promote student activities says Ms. Alston, who feels that increasing the visibility of existing programs, as well as creating new ones, is important to increasing student participation on campus. Ms. Alston also believes in increased visibility for all athletic events including girl teams.

"More entertainment is needed at UNCW," says Ms. Alston on the subject of cultural arts. She feels that more money to the U.P.B. may be necessary to increase its effectiveness in reaching the student body.

There are also only two contenders for Senior Class President: James Earl Jones and Louis Dicello. Both candidates stressed the two-fold nature of the position.

According to Jones two of his major points as senior class president would be the pushing the idea of additional graduation ceremonies in the fall, for students that have to stay longer at UNCW to graduate. Jones said that right now those students just get a diploma in the mail, and that the ceremony would be "a small thing that would mean so much" to those students.

In a role as Senior Class President Jones said that he would also like to raise again the proposal to have the graduate's area of specialization placed on his degree, as well as his major. Jones said that the specifications mean something and "should be justly awarded on the diploma."

Recognizing the nontraditional student more is an issue Jones feels important as a senator. He says that "right now, although nontraditionals comprise a substantial fraction off all students, there are not enough activities and services for them, although they still pay the same fees as any other student.

Jones says as long range goals a daycare center and perhaps a commuter service can be considered.

Jones also considers it important to try to increase student involvement in clubs and organizations. According to Jones the best way to get students involved is to get them excited with the University as they just get in.

Another idea of Jones's is to perhaps get the S.G.A. to buy and rent books and maybe even graduation gowns. According to Jones this would allow the students an opportunity to save money and the S.G.A. should at least recoup their investment.

According to Louis Dicello his main priority if elected senior class president would be to have a quality commencement ceremony. Dicello feels that talking with former senior class presidents would allow him to construct from the lessons of the past a ceremony that would be a positive one for the students and not a "long arduous ceremony." As a senator Dicello continues the ideology of using the experience that is available. One of Dicello's goals in the Senate is to keep the experienced senators so the senate can move quickly to find out problems that the Senate needs to fix.

Two people are also running for Junior Class President: Greg Berry and Sherry Lynn Brisson. Berry's main interest is to draw more attention to WLOZ, saying that hopefully he would get real air time for the station, as not all students have cable, but all students do pay for it. Berry also feels that students should be able and required to park in spaces designated for these dorms. Balancing the number of parking stickers and parking spaces is also a goal of Berry's. Safety on campus is another issue Berry wants to stress, he feels that additional lighting, patrolling, and more Seahawk Express vans are needed.

Sherry Lynn Brisson has another idea on how to use the Seahawk express. She wants to push the idea of a bad weather bus service running from the dorms to a few places on campus. This service, Ms. Brisson feels, would help decrease student absences on rainy days. Ms. Brisson said she would like to pursue more student tutoring groups. Students doing well in a particular subject could help those who need it.

Ms. Brisson also feels that the U.P.B. needs to concentrate its funds to get some acts that more students would enjoy and want to see instead of spending a little money at a time a lot of times on small name acts that few students attend. The U.P.B. needs to "pool its forces for bigger things," according to Ms. Brisson.

"I'd like to promote more Greek involvement with non-greeks," says Ms. Brisson. She says that a goal of hers would be to get students aware of the positive aspects of Greek organizations.

There is also a two-candidate race for Sophomore Class President between Fran Slater and J.L. Jackson II. Fran Slater's big issue for this campaign is the class of 1990. Ms. Slater would like to raise enough money so that the class of '90 could give a donation to the school. She would also like to increase the solidarity of the '90s class, and try to create an environment that would be conducive to students staying at the university, instead of transferring.

"My main concern is getting everyone together," says Ms. Slater who feels that supporting clubs, particularly new and smaller clubs, and class activities would help achieve that goal.

The option for students to be able to buy bike insurance when they register their bikes is another idea of Ms. Slater's. She also said she agreed with Lee King on the issue of giving senate seats to hall government.

"I don't want to make any promises I can't keep," says Ms. Slater. She says that "sometimes what you want, you can't do", explaining that things such as lighting, sidewalks and parking have been "argued this past semester...it's out of our [the senate's] hands."

J.L. Jackson's main issue is student awareness. He feels that the more input the S.G.A. receives from the students the S.G.A. can better serve the student body. Also Jackson wants to increase publicity for University activities.

"If they knew more about it, they probably would be more involved." One of the things Jackson wants to particularly emphasize is the Freshman class pictures, which he feels aren't given enough attention. Also he feels that student elections need to be given more publicity.

One of the things Jackson would like to accomplish is to have a sidewalk constructed behind the health and wellness center.

As in the Sophomore Class Presidency race there is a two way battle for sophomore vice president, between Gina Mathis and J.J. Leadingham.

Gina Mathis says that her experience with the students suggestion committee has exposed her to the needs of the students, needs that she would like to work on as Sophomore Class V.P.

"I'd like to do more for the residence halls," says Ms. Mathis who suggests installing juice machines, fixing the tennis courts, and a shuttle service for bad weather days."

Ms. Mathis says, "Since these people live on campus, I'd like to do something for them." But she stresses that she does not want to discriminate against commuters.

Ms. Mathis acknowledges that not all of the things she wants to present to the senate as Sophomore V.P. might be accepted by the senate but, "I'd like to see at least one of these suggestions come true."

Bob Garlow is creating a write-in campaign for student attorney general. When asked why he was running Garlow said that "The judicial branch of the Student Government Association has been abused."

"He feels that the attorney general needs to have office hours, take an active role in reviewing the S.G.A. constitution and make the judicial branch an active part of the student government."

Thousands attend 'Claw for the Contras' UNCW rally

By Justin A. Word
Special Correspondent

WILMINGTON N.C. - In response to peace rallies happening on campuses all over the United States, student organizers at UNCW held a "Claw for the Contras" rally here this past weekend.

The rally, sponsored by the student newspaper and START, the Students against the Red Threat, a "pro-war, meat eating, red-blooded" group that only recently began to rear its head on college campuses.

I.M. Hardcore, organizer and president of the UNCW START chapter, said in an interview Monday that speakers ranging from pro-contra to the Norwegian Baby Seal Slaughterer's union appeared and led students in singing "lusty ballads about apple pie, eating steak and driving 1957 Chevrolets" during the course of the day long event.

Hardcore refused to comment on the rumor regarding the alleged assault of a local animal rights worker, but said "if I heard something, I don't remember it. Can you remember everything you've ever said and done?"

Gordie Liddy, president of the Real Men Against Equal Rights for Anything spoke on his group's lobbying efforts in Washington, (toward mandatory ownership of a machine gun in every home in the United States).

Said Liddy, "When the congressman asked me if I was serious, I held up my hand... and shoved my lit cigar into the palm, so he would get my point."

Liddy also asked for contributions to his groups attempt to supply the Contra rebels in Nicaragua with nuclear weapons.

"Give or else," shouted Liddy, brandishing an UZI submachine gun and blazing away at an effigy of Nicaraguan leader Daniel Ortega.

Federal Authorities attempting to arrest Liddy on charges of possession of a weapon of mass destruction were mercilessly beaten by a horde of RMAER members, who shouted "Up the Contras!" as they attacked the officer agents with baseball bats and tear gas.

"It's nice to know you're loved," said Liddy as he personally smashed a karate chop across the back of the neck of one of the officers. "It keeps you from developing aggressive attitudes...that could get someone hurt."

Federal officers attempting to flee were killed when a privately owned A-10 antitank aircraft scored a direct hit with a heat seeking missile. No one else was injured.

As he brushed some gravel from his suit jacket sleeve, Liddy muttered into the microphone. "Serves 'em right."

Other speakers included: Dr. Duke McMasstiff, head of the Coalition Against small dogs (author of "The Chihuahua-Communist connection") who spoke on possible uses for poodles, pomeranians and pekinese dogs in the fields of science and defense.

Representatives of FURR, Furriers for Resal Rodents, who spoke on "What did a mink ever do to help you, anyway?" and "elchinchillas as a national pastime."

Col. Jack Killplenty, famed mercenary and former Marine commando, spoke on why the United States should have never given up Mexico, and how he thought the US should take the country back, "to increase our oil supply and eliminate the communist factions that are slowly creeping up on the United States borders."

Yorgi "the Basher" Yorgensen, of the norwegian Baby Seal Slaughterer's Union, who raised a ceremonial club with notches in the handle for seals killed and shouted "up with walnut, down with seals!" to the delight of all present.

R.A. Cyst, chairman of the new campus organization called "No Red, all white, not you," who told of his groups efforts to have former White Patriot Party leader Glenn F. Miller elected President of the United States in 1988. Cyst was also soliciting contributions for the South African Riot control Policemen's ball, to be held in June in an undisclosed city in that country.

More than four thousand people showed up for the festivities, which were held on the front grounds between Hoggard, Alderman, and James Halls. The centerpiece for the event was the cannon beside the flagpole, and several speakers climbed onto the cannon to make their points.

"Reactivate and Decimate!" screamed members of the Revitalize our Battleships and Produce Anarchy Club, which

Bryan says he was 'born to be wild'

By Justin A. Word,
Special Correspondent

Like a scene out of the 1970 movie Easy Rider, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs William Bryan resigned his post here today, driving off into the sunset on a vintage 1958 Harley Davidson motorcycle with the intentions of "looking for America and hopefully finding it somewhere."

Bryan, dressed in pegged blue jeans, leather jacket and a "Born to Ride" T-shirt, cited a need to "be all he could be" and the need to find himself in a world of ever-changing social roles.

Bryan was the fourth official to resign in past weeks as spring fever hit hard in administrative offices here, and more are expected.

Extremely cramped office space and rising inter-office tensions were cited as causes behind the recent rash of resignations.

Another official, Asst. Dean of Students Richard Mullendore, resigned last week after his wife demanded he stay home and care for their newborn child while she went back to work.

"She makes more money than I do anyway," said Mullendore, with a characteristic shrug.

Other resignations included Steve Sher of the English Dept., who was leaving school to join Sen. Jesse Helms' Committee on Increasing Consumption of Red Meat and Dr. Steven Weiss of the Speech Communications Dept. who said, "Nobody understands me anymore... we just can't communicate."

Bryan said that he was not influenced by any of the other resignations, but he applauded their bravery and the fact that they, too, want to be all they can be."

Bryan's Harley Davidson was a classic black Panhead with eighty-cubic-inch two cylinder and four speed transmission. Asked why he chose the four-speed instead of a newer five speed model, he said, "That fifth gear can be murder."

Asked about the top speed of the panhead, Bryan said, "Ask Highway Patrolman E. T. Speeders. He claimed his radar said I was doing 125 when I left 'The Monk' (a popular local night spot), but I know I was doing at least 140."

Bryan's Panhead also featured a semi-chopped front end, white-letter Michelins and matching king/queen seats with detachable saddlebags.

As he finished his resignation speech, Bryan shook hands with all present and kick-started the Harley on the first try. After making a few runs around the Alderman Hall parking lot, he lifted the front wheel off the ground and "pulled a wheelie" from one end of the lot to the other before driving over the sidewalk, past reporters and onto South College Road through the decorative gateway directly opposite College Manor Apartments.

"Always wanted to do that!" he shouted as he drove by.

Senate solves parking problem

By A. Nonymous,
Special to The Seahawk

The Student Senate, in a surprise motion Monday night, passed a resolution calling for unlimited parking on all lawns and courtyards. This action is expected to alleviate the shortage of parking spaces all over campus, a problem that was much discussed during the recent SGA elections campaign.

The action comes in response to the UNC Board of Governor's decision to ban all parking on all campuses in the UNC system.

Asked how students will know where to park to avoid blocking other drivers and being blocked in themselves (since no parking spaces are marked on these newly legalized parking areas) SGA President-elect Lee King said, "Who cares? That's their problem."

The new parking regulations include unrestricted parking in all parking lots, even reserved spaces.

"Park in the chancellor's space if you feel like it — it's OK with me," said Senator Mark Bremer.

In other action, the Senate passed a motion, authored by Sen. L. King, increasing the SGA President's salary to $3,762.41 per month.

Asked to comment on this action, which is in direct opposition to one of King's campaign promises, he said, "Aw, everyone knows campaign promises are just a bunch of lies. Wouldn't you do the same thing if you had a chance?"

Also, a motion was made to end indecision in the Senate. After nearly two hours of debate, the motion was postponed indefinitely.

Senator Fran Slater said "I don't think this motion was at all necessary — or is it — maybe — I just don't know."

In a surprise move, no one was impeached in this Senate meeting.

"I'm sick to death of impeaching people," said Senator Mark Bremer.

There was no treasurer's report because, according to informed sources, SGA Treasurer Elizabeth Riffe had left for Bolivia with the entire treasury of $220,000. Ms. Riffe could not be reached for comment.

Senator Kevin Colaner introduced a motion to allow Senators to leave Senate meetings early without penalty. No action was taken on this motion because by this time there was no quorum.

New security officer slithers into dorms

By Al. E. Gator,
Special Correspondent

Assistant Dean of Students Charles Maimone announced today that a new security system would be turned loose in the dormitories this weekend.

"Sweetums," a twelve foot bannase python, will be released in an undisclosed hall this weekend in an effort to deter the problem of unauthorized persons gaining access to dormitory rooms and possibly endangering inhabitants.

The snake will be placed in a different dormitory hall every night, and the drop off point will be kept secret "to keep them guessing," said Maimone.

While pythons are not poisonous, Maimone pointed out,

"How would you like to sneak into a dark, creepy dorm and be confronted with a twelve foot snake?"

Signs warning trespassers about the snake will be posted on all doors and ground floor windows.

The signs, which read "A twelve foot python patrols these premises three nights a week. Guess which three" were donated by the snake's owner, who asked not to be identified.

Sweetums' owner runs Progressive Protection, Inc., which recently gave out free "ALP" face masks and jogging suits to operators at the Claw for the Contras rally here, reasoning that, "Would you attack a jogger dressed like that?"

"Flasher" lights up the night

FROM STAFF REPORTS

A 27-year-old man was apprehended on campus Friday after allegedly exposing himself to several students Sunday night. The suspect was reported to be wearing an overcoat with interior lighting.

A witness to the incident, who asked not to be identified, said, "It was sure considerate of him to use those lights, since it was dark out," then giggled and nudged her friend in the side with her elbow.

Authorities said that while neither young woman actually filed a complaint, they did offer to post the accused's bond.

"He's cute!" giggled one of the witnesses.

A black 1984 Chrysler New Yorker with a trustee parking sticker was reported stolen from near Alderman Hall late Friday. There are no suspects in the case.

Three cars were confirmed destroyed Friday in the first tests of the new AH-64 attack helicopters recently purchased by Campus Security officials for use against persons who persistently park illegally on campus.

Police reported 4,567 bicycles stolen this week. 72,567 parking tickets were written, and Student Security pilots had three confirmed 'kills' of illegally parked vehicles.

Said Director of Public Safety Joseph Johnson, "When somebody sees a 37mm Gatling gun with uranium tipped shells work over their car, they will think twice about ever again parking where they shouldn't." (See related story.)

came into being after the UNC Board of Governors decided to do away with all restrictions on campus organizations and clubs. ROBPAC members handed out "Reactivate and Decimate" bumper stickers, and several sported "Kill 'em all, Why sort 'em out?" t-shirts.

Members of the local Drunks against Mad Mothers group handed out "get out of jail free" cards and raffled off a free tanker truck loaded with beer to benefit the Tappa Kanna Brew Fraternity, TKB's.

Several vendors were on hand, donating food and drink free of charge to all who participated in the "Claw for the Contras" rally. Featured were charcoal steak of waterbuffalo, fried whooping crane served up by the Real Men Society ("We killed off an entire endangered species for your Note: see the feature in this week's Seahawk about the TKB Fraternity.)

When two Wilmington Police officers tried to stop them, EILS members asked the officers, "Who is going to stop us?" and wielded their shovels "in a threatening manner. The officers relented, and members responded by pounding the two on the back and giving them cold beer.

Members of the Grease Corners Fire Department were on hand with a 'pig cooker' behind their hook and ladder fire truck.

The Volunteer firemen, dressed in jeans and stained t-shirts or Dickies coveralls, handed out free barbecue pork to everyone.

Grease Corners Rescue Squad members were also on hand for assistance in case any diners happened to eat the free barbecue. Representatives of the photographers of Reclining Nudes (PORN) had set up a portable photographic studio and were offering complimentary photos wallet sized of couples who wanted to "grab all they can out of life."

Festivities ended with a fireworks display supplied by ROBPAC, including a low level, fast decaying nuclear device that ended the show.

Officials claim the area will be inhabitable in about ten years.

Said ROBPAC president Ann Arkcy, "We wanted the show to end with a bang...to be something that no one would forget for along time, at least until the fallout dies.

Residence hall stolen from pg. 1

Residence Life area.

Dozens of Hall '85 residents awoke Saturday morning to find that they had been placed in their beds outside in the yard and then the building was stolen.

There are no suspects in the case, but police believe the building thief may be the same one who stole Morton Hall several weeks ago.

"We have notified all the pawn shops in the immediate area," said Chief Johnson. "It is only a matter of time before the thief or thieves make the mistake of trying to hack a hot building."

Sher joins Helms' Task Force

By Jefferson C. Weaver, Staff Writer

Associate Professor of English Steven Sher announced here last week that he will be resigning his position here as English instructor to join Sen. Jesse Helms' Committee on Increasing Consumption of Red Meat.

Sher was not available for comment at press time.

Sher was asked to join the committee after a bicycle accident last week that resulted in severe head injuries and his registering to vote in the Republican Party.

The registration was greeted with a steady stream of students who had been active in recent peace movements leaving his office and began battling with a group of local "Young Republicans" who had come to his office to "congratulate him on his choice to join the right."

"We were just peacefully walking along," said David B. King, chapter president, "and they jumped us."

Mark Henderson, one of the peace workers, said, "We were just calmly walking along, and they jumped all over us."

No one was seriously injured in the incident, although three American flags and four "American Chicken Foot" (a symbol of the 1960's peace protest) flags were destroyed.

Sher came to work as an English instructor here last summer and has worked at Oregon State and the University of Iowa. His wife's name is Nancy and they have one son.

U.S.S. North Carolina to be recommissioned

From Staff Reports

Wilmington Mayor Barry Williams announced today that the Battleship North Carolina memorial, which was permanently berthed here in 1962, will be reactivated and put back into service as a privately owned "smuggler buster" sometime this year.

The North Carolina is armed with a 16-inch cannon capable of destroying an area three times the size of a football field thirty to forty miles away.

"The reactivation of the battleship, said Williams, "will be Wilmington's contribution to the war on drugs currently taking place just off our fair shores."

"We are happy that we can help out in any way we can."

Williams would not comment on whether the reactivation was influenced by recent demonstrations by the Reactivate Our Battleships and Produce Anarchy Club at UNCW. However, club president Ann Arkcy said that the decision to reinstate the battleship to her former glory was a landmark victory for the organization.

"There is nothing in the world, not even sex on the beach or an LSD pizza, that can compare to the sound of a battery of 16-inchers ... obliterating some disgusting little peacenik wimp island," she said.

"Someday, we'll have our own battleship, and then we'll blow up Wilmington, we'll blow up Raleigh, we'll blow up everybody! Reactivate and decimate! War, War, Kill, Kill, Don't tell us to take no pill!"

"Reactivate and Decimate" is the battle cry of the ROBPAC group, whose members participated in the Claw for the Contras rally this weekend at UNCW. (See related story this page).

Julio Juarez Sancho de Mozzarella, a local independent shipping underwriter, loudly protested the move as "warlike and antagonistic."

"It's getting to the point that you can't turn a dishonest dime anymore," he said, as federal agents escorted him from the courthouse in handcuffs and legions.

"Wassamatta wif a little coke-powder occasionally, hah? Never hurt nobody."

de Mozzarella was in Federal Court facing felony charges of trafficking cocaine. He was arrested last June after his 260,000 ton Panamanian-registered fertilizer was found "loaded to the gills" with cocaine after docking here. Federal Drug Enforcement Agents raided the leaking, rusty ship after dockworkers noticed fish swimming in lazy circles around the craft and bumping into each other.

"We thought it was toxic waste at first," said one agent, "but we knew we couldn't have anything that exciting here in Wilmington."

'Grove for Peace' festival this weekend

By Jenni Brown,
Staff Writer

Student excitement is rising with the upcoming Grove for Peace this Saturday and Sunday, April 4-5.

When asked to describe Grove for Peace, Brenda Boyle, the founder of the festival, said, "It just popped into my head."

"It wasn't meant to be called that, but it just turned out that way. The whole thing is on some of our posters. 'Stop groping in darkness. Grove for peace.'"

Last year an idea for a peace vigil was given to Boyle, who spent two weeks planning the vigil.

"It was small," she said. "It was a candlelight vigil for peace and there were some powerful speeches."

She said that after last year, she thought that if she could spend a lot of time planning, she could come up with a big peace rally this year.

"After Christmas break," Boyle said, "I spent two months of planning. I went into it blindly and found out about procedures the hard way."

Her goal was to have the festival with no money at all.

"I hate dealing with money," she said. "I figured people would respect the idea and try to help out."

So far, with the help of some WLOZ staff members, Boyle has found sponsors from all over town.

"The Pepsi Company is giving us all the Pepsi and Pepsi stands we need, and whatever they sell, we get 15% of the profits," she said. "Jackson Beverage Company is underwriting. McKee Ice & Coal Company is supplying all the ice we need, and the Quality Inn is donating sheets for banners and artwork. They may also donate rooms for some of the band members."

Also helping are some of the area media such as WHQR, WUNI, WJKA, Encore Magazine, This Week Magazine, and the Star-News.

As far as bands go, Boyle and WLOZer Sonis Bland have fourteen musical acts — some individuals and some groups —

King edges Toal in runoff

In the SGA runoff elections last Wednesday, Lee King beat out Patrick Toal for the Student Body president's position with 57.5% of the votes cast.

When the results were announced, King was heard to say, "I'm happy, real happy." He was inaugurated Tuesday night in ceremonies in the University Union.

See next week's Seahawk for a face to face interview with former senator, residence life worker, fraternity leader, and now president of the Student Body president Lee King.

Student killed as truck rams apartment

By Jenni Brown,
Staff Writer

William "Bill" Bondurant II, 21, was killed Tuesday, March 24, when a truck drove through an apartment in Leland where he was spending the evening.

Bondurant, a senior Business Management major, was at a private meeting of a home computer users' club. When the meeting ended, Bondurant and two other members of the club stayed in the apartment.

The two other members went to the store for cigarettes, and when they returned a white truck was parked in the driveway of the apartment. One of the members, Brenda Davis, knew the driver of the truck and went over to speak to him for a few minutes.

The two members then went

Goode search called off; no remains found

The North Carolina Division of Wildlife Resources is currently investigating a boating accident which left UNCW sophomore John William Goode missing as of March 22.

Goode, and three other men experienced difficulties with the engine of their 21-foot fishing boat March 21 around 8:40 a.m., and the boat was swamped by a large wave. The boat then rapidly sank, leaving the four men stranded.

The only survivor was twenty-seven-year-old Douglas Sherwood of Wilmington who had jumped into a four-foot ice cooler, and waited for rescuers who arrived at 11:00 a.m. on Sunday.

Senators approve donation of $2000 to Gospel Choir

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

The final Senate meeting of the 40th Student Senate was called to order at 6:10 p.m., Monday.

Senator Mark Bremer and Speaker of the House Joe Pressley were among several senators who gave brief farewell addresses and "hearty thank-yous" for diligent support from various SGA-involved students. Pressley asked in his address that each newly elected senator "remember what you've here for: to improve student life for everyone at UNCW."

Chris Meredith, President of the UNCW Gospel Choir, presented a financial report of the recent tour by the choir's 27 members and other school officials, including Ralph Parker, Director of Minority Affairs.

Meredith said in an interview following the meeting that part of the tour's purpose was to make a serious effort to increase minority interest in the University. Their effort resulted in an "enthusiastic response from their audiences at churches and schools across the state."

The SGA had allotted to the gospel choir $2000.00 for use on their 1987 tour and Meredith followed up with a detailed account of all monies spent on the tour, including hotel expenses and a subsistence fund which was used for "deserving students who then expressed his own gratitude to Meredith, which was followed by a full agreement by the remaining senators, for following up with a detailed account of the organization's expenses.

During the committee report session, Steve Freeman, chairman of the elections committee announced several newly elected or appointed senators and Kevin Colaner, chairman of the Media Publications committee, announced their appointments of various posts in campus communications organizations. Jefferson Weaver was reappointed by unanimous decision as editor of The Seahawk. Max Perkins and Linda Carlisle were appointed as General Manager and Station Manager of campus radio station, WLOZ, and Laura L. Story was appointed as editor of The Atlantis. It was also announced that the position of editor of The Fledgling, the campus yearbook, remains open and because no applications have been submitted, showed a crucial need for financial assistance," Meredith said.

Following his report Meredith extended a final expression of thanks on behalf of the gospel choir and pointed out that they were leaving unanswered the question of whether or not they were to repay the money allotted to them by the SGA.

In response, the senators unanimously approved a proposal by Senator David King to allow the gospel choir to keep the $2000.00 as a donation. King

Exposure reported in King; officer hits wall at bookstore

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

An unknown male subject remains at large after an indecent exposure that occurred in the Curriculum Library of King Hall Mar. 26.

The female student who reported the incident to campus police "around 4:00 p.m. Friday was sitting in a corner across from the subject when he exposed his genitals and masturbated in the victim's view."

Upon noticing the subject's actions, the victim began to report the incident and the subject fled the scene immediately. According to Capt. Dawson, however, the victim "may be able to recognize the subject at some later time."

There were several incidences of larceny and/or breaking and entering involving automobiles this past week and weekend.

One student was victimized by larceny Mar. 29 when an unknown subject removed his Bosch covers and one light from the fog lamps of his vehicle parked in "L" lot.

In parking lot "H" a female student's purse was stolen from her car March 29 and on the same day, an unknown person removed the surf racks from a vehicle in lot "P."

Finally, a UNCW Public Safety vehicle struck and damaged the decorative wall Wednesday in the courtyard of the University Bookstore knocking two bricks from the wall. No one was injured in that incident.

Cadets learn life saving skills in class from Red Cross

By Jefferson Weaver,
Staff Writer

For the past few weeks, cadets in Captain Kris Frasure's entry level military science course have been learning the finer points on saving lives.

The students have been taking classes in artificial respiration and Cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, commonly known as CPR.

CPR is an emergency technique for restarting a person's heart after it quits beating because of accident or injury.

Captain Frasure said that while not all the students will eventually become soldiers who could conceiveably need knowledge of emergency first aid, CPR and artificial respiration are skills that could be called on in everyday life — for instance, after an auto accident or in household emergencies.

The captain mentioned that the Dept. of Military Science is striving toward certification of all the ROTC staff, who in turn could help conduct classes on campus for faculty and staff members, especially campus security officers, without having to go through the American Red Cross. The Red Cross is teaching the CPR classes in the MilScience Dept. now.

"However," she said, "we would need our own practice dummies like the 'CPR Minis' supplied by the Red Cross."

The dummies are facsimiles of a human torso from the naval up, and have operable lungs that inflate or deflate like human lungs.

Ms. Frasure did not know how much each dummy would cost, but said she hoped that the "entire University community" would help price on the project.

"With enough trained personnel and equipment," she said, "we could at least improve someone's chances of surviving a serious accident on campus, because the chances are, there would be somebody nearby who could help."

'Grove for Peace' on the Union Grounds this Sat.-Sun.

Boyle. Most of the speakers are instructors from the campus.

Another interesting part of the festival is the "sole box" that will be provided.

"Everyone should bring an old pair of shoes to drop into the box," said Boyle. "The box will be sent to D.C. for an April 25th peace march. They're lining up the shoes for people who can't be there. Then the shoes will be sent to Good Will or something like that."

"We hope to send a busload of people up there for the march," said Boyle.

Boyle said she expects more out-of-towners than Wilmingtonians to show up. The word has been spread all around North Carolina and organizers expect people from Chapel Hill, ECU, Raleigh, Asheville, Greensboro, Beaufort, as well as other areas to participate.

"We expect all people to realize that they're there for a peace festival and remain open-minded and non-aggressive," said Boyle. "I want people to come without inhibitions and preconceptions and to open their eyes to the things we've provided for them to learn about."

We expect the crowd to be as diverse as the topics we've provided.

"If people have floor space available for band members to throw a sleeping bag, they can call someone at WLOZ and we'd really appreciate it," Boyle said.

Grove for Peace will be held from 12 noon to "around 7 p.m." said Boyle, outside the University Union on the Behavioral Science building side.

Boyle stressed that everyone is welcome and that it is a free event. "Vendors, artists, arts and crafts, and people spreading their message will be there," Boyle said. No alcoholic beverages will be allowed and campus police will be present.

"The campus police will be there, but outside the perimeter of the area. WLOZ people will be on hand to control the crowd inside the area," she said.

Boyle finished by saying, "There's gonna be lots of sweat and progressive music. And lots of groping for peace."

lined up from Atlanta to D.C. who play folk to reggae to punk music.

"Some friends and I brainstormed on bands... we made a list and just called and called them," Boyle said. "Some got all the confirmations. All the bands are great, and we want to show these people a great time."

Eight speakers are lined up to give short speeches on many topics ranging from "Nicaragua to inner peace to world peace," said

From the Office of Special Programs

If you ever wanted to learn to skillfully handle a canoe, the Office of Special Programs, at UNC Wilmington, can show you how, with four trips planned this spring along the Black and South Rivers.

Instructors Buck Aycock and Jack Harvey, who have 16 years of professional teaching experience, will work one-on-one with all skill levels.

Beginners with absolutely no previous experience are encouraged to attend, the instructors said. Safety will be the top priority with life jackets provided.

Participants will meet in Burgaw at Cripple Creek Corner at 9:00 am and return by 5:00 pm.

The dates for the trip and registration deadlines are:
Saturday, April 11 -
Deadline: March 27
Saturday, April 25 -
Deadline: April 24
Saturday, May 16 -
Deadline: May 8

Fee for each trip is $21 for individuals age 13 and over. The fee will be discounted to $16 for registration before each deadline.

Cost for a family of 2 adults and 1 child (age 12 or under) or one adult with 2 children is $45.

For more information call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Get loose in Hanover

Two courses to improve body movement, flexibility and reduce tension and stress will be taught for UNC Wilmington Office of Special Programs by Marylil Humphreys, registered therapist.

"A Night With Alexander: An Introduction to the Alexander Technique" will stress the correct posture habits to reduce tension as you walk, sit, stand, reach, drive and use the phone. The class will meet on Wednesday, May 6 from 6:30-9:30 pm in room 201, University Union. Fee is $12. Registration deadline is April 23.

"Yoga Dance: Movement

Awareness" combines the awareness of yoga with the freedom of movement. Participants will develop poise, body awareness, flexibility and muscle tone while exploring techniques of quiet relaxation, easy yoga stretches and creative movement. The class will meet on Mondays and Thursdays, April 6-April 23 from 6:30-8:00 pm in the back room of UNCW's Hanover Gym. Fee is $43. Registration deadline is March 27.

For further information, call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

"Southern Comfort" opens this week

Cast members of "Southern Comfort" rehearse a scene. They are, from left to right, Shelly Kearney, Susie Witkege, Russ Bower, Marsha Utterback, and Karla Stith. The play is adapted from three short stories, all with southern flavor: "My Side of the Matter," by Truman Capote, "Good Men of God," by Lewis Grizzard, and "Revive Us Again," by Golria Norris. Performances will be April 2-5 at 8 p.m. each night in the SRO Theatre. Reservations are recommended.

Political Science Club goes to Washington, D.C.

On March 18 at 3:00 p.m., seven of the 17 members of the UNCW Political Science Club departed the UNCW campus for a four-day fieldtrip in the nation's capitol. The seven returned March 22nd, with photographs, literature, several roles of film, very little money, and millions of memories.

The trip had been jointly arranged through the offices of Congressman Charlie Rose in Wilmington and Washington, D.C.

The group consisted of Dean Bunn, John Stuart, Chris Brinson, Cynthia Weaver, Lewis Swindell, Anise Swindell, and Robert L. Smith, Jr.

The group began their trip March 19 at the office of Charlie Rose; then met with N.C. 2nd District Congressman Tim Valentine and attended a committee meeting later which he chaired, then the group spoke with Senator

Terry Sanford and had a group photograph taken with him. Terry Sanford gave passes to the group to view the action on the Senate floor from the gallery. Numerous Senators interacted, including Jor Biden, Ernest Hollings, Al Eranson, Jesse Helms, Terry Sanford, Bob Dole, Lowell Weicker, Sam Nunn, Paul Simon, Richard Lugar, Bill Bradley, Pete Dominici, Daniel Moynihan, Strom Thurmond, Ted Kennedy, Lloyd Bensten, Orrin Hatch, Patrick Leahy, Robert Byrd, etc.

Later in the day the group met with Senator Jesse Helms and had photographs taken with him.

On Friday, March 20th, the group met for 90 minutes with Congressman Charlie Rose in his office. Further, the group attended a tour of the Congressional Quarterly.

Later, the group toured the Pentagon facilities and met

William F. Vance, Chief of Inspection Plans, Policy and Operations of the Department of Defense's Office of the Inspector General.

The highlight of this tour was a personal tour of the office of Casper Weinberger in the Pentagon. The contingent then visited the U.S. Supreme Court facilities.

On Saturday, the club members were treated to a VIP tour of the White House, visited the Smithsonian, Georgetown, attended Richard Thomas' Citizen Tom Paine at the Kennedy Center, and were treated to a sumptuous dinner at the home of I.D. Fuller in nearby Henndon, Virginia (Production Manager for the Congressional Quarterly, Inc.).

On March 22nd, the members visited the Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, and Vietnam War Memorials. Then, on to Arlington National Cemetery where they saw the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, Robert and John Kennedy's grave sites.

One comment all the members of the group agreed upon was their surprise in the extreme personable and attentive attitudes of the politicians they came in contact with. Another interesting aspect was the Metro rail transportation system which connects the majority of Washington's points of interest — a safe, clean, and (usually) comfortable ride.

While in Washington, the group met with students from George Washington University, Georgetown University, American University, George Mason University and other area schools.

Further, personal requests were registered with Sanford, Helms, and Rose to attend the 1987 Fall Political Science Club-sponsored lecture series.

"Many other universities and college groups were touring Washington while we were there, we feel that our group may make a small contribution to UNCW in the long run as we attempted to impress upon the government leaders and other college students we met, that UNCW, located in eastern North Carolina, is a vital attentive, and important attribute to our state," commented club president Dean R. Bunn.

The driver of the truck, a 15-year-old male, drove to the end of the cul-de-sac, turned around, and sped up the road, ramming the truck straight through the apartment.

Bondurant was killed instantly. The others in the apartment received only scratches.

The juvenile, whose name was not released, was not hurt. He will be tried as an adult for the murder of Bondurant.

"The Landmark" will replace parking lot

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

UNC-Chapel Hill has a bell tower, N. C. State has a clock tower, Duke has a chapel. And now, UNCW is going to have as its landmark...

An Edicula is a large scale reproduction of a map made with man-made materials. In this case the mapped area will be of southeastern N.C.

A pool will represent the Atlantic Ocean. Bronze plaques will be placed on the map to designate locations where events that are relevant to UNCW history took place. Large inscribed stones will also be placed along side the map. A raised platform will be in front of the edicula so a person can look down on it for an overall view.

The Edicula will be located beside the Student Union building and will take up most of Parking Lot M. Money for this parking lot came from student fees and other appropriate funds so donated money will be used to replace the parking spaces.

The Board of Trustees were the first to come up with this idea and the firm of Boney Architects designed the model. All the money for this landmark is being donated.

Construction at UNCW here to stay

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

Do the sounds of buzzing saws and pounding hammers bother you? If so, hope you are graduating this spring because these sounds are going to continue for quite a while here at UNCW.

Other than the new business building already under construction, more student housing is being built. An athletic office building, a track, the beginnings of a stadium, a new cafeteria, parking spaces, classroom space, and a double sidewalk mall are also planned. All of this construction should be completed by May of 1989 (except the business building, which should be completed by May of '88) Carl Dempsey, Associate Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs said.

The student housing will consist of 14 buildings that will be able to accommodate 400 students - 30 students in 12 buildings and 20 in two buildings reported Dempsey. There will also be a service building which will house a laundry room, a vending room, a large meeting and a resident life room. Also included in this project is a second floor for the resident life building near Hall 85 he said.

An athletic office building is going up at the northeast corner of Trask Coliseum. It will be between Trask and Hinton James, "But it will not be built such as to block the street," said Dempsey. He also said the building will be approximately 5,000 sq. ft. The second floor of this building will have an overhead passageway into the Trask corridor.

An Olympic size track will be built on the south extension of the athletic field. "It's got all the vents, pole vault, javelin throwing... it's got water jumps," Dempsey said. Faculty seating will be built at Brooks baseball field. "They will be placed in front of and around the press boxes," commented Dempsey.

Plans for Bear Hall after the business department moves out to be converted back to its original condition, which was classrooms. "We will just see how the money runs on that... it will create some valuable classroom space," said Dempsey.

"Looking on down the road, we have got to build another cafeteria," stated Dempsey. He said the present one is already overloaded so the new one will have to be built about the same time of the new housing. The location and size of the building is still in the planning stage, according to Dempsey.

Five-hundred fifty additional parking spaces are planned. "Three hundred will be to accommodate resident students (students that live on campus). Two hundred will be intended for commuter students and 50 places will be for staff," stated Dempsey. The staff parking will be added to Parking Lot R, which will be for the convenience of the staff at the new business building he said.

Construction has already begun on a double sidewalk mall in front of the library. "It will be more or less a straight line from the front door of the library right on by the Social Behavioral Science building and past the new business building where the new parking is going to be," said Dempsey.

The student housing and the cafeteria construction will be a revenue financed project. This means the money comes from student rent and from food services money, explained Dempsey. The three athletic projects are financed primarily through donated funds, the parking spaces will be paid for with parking decal fees and Dempsey also said the business building and the Bear Hall renovations will be funded by dear ole S. A. M. - State Appropriated Money.

UNCW Small Business Center opens here

The newest regional office of the North Carolina Small Business and Technology Development Center (SBTDC) is now open in Wilmington and is staffed full-time to help residents of Southeastern North Carolina with the start-up, expansion, and successful operation of small businesses.

Working in cooperation with the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, the office is located near campus at Room 206, Oak Park 2, 4107 Wrightsville Ave.

Under the direction of Fred C. "Ted" Jans, Jr., the center provides free business counseling and other services.

Jans explained that the center places "greatest emphasis on providing one-on-one confidential counseling and technical assistance to small business owners and those planning to go into business."

Another important function is to facilitate technological development and transfer within the state's small business community.

Services provided range from pre-business start-up counseling to assistance in the preparation of business and financing plans. More specialized technical assistance services provided include patent searches, product searches, product feasibility assessments, and assistance in locations research and development funding to support new product development efforts.

"Although the SBTDC is a university-based program, the office has been located off-campus to make access to its services as easy as possible for the general public," Jans said.

According to Jans, clients should call first for an appointment.

Interested persons in Wilmington should call 395-3744, and those from out of the local calling area should dial 1-800-2580-UNC to arrange an appointment.

Jans said that he is available to appear before service and professional groups to explain the Center's program in greater detail.

Search called off from pg. 3

The bodies of the other two men, Marshall Allen of Wilmington and Charlie Ingfor (Sherwood's visiting relative from Wisconsin), were recovered but Goode's body remains missing.

Goode was a twenty-one year old biology major from Elon, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. John William Goode.

The victim should not be confused with Johnny Clifton Goode, a UNCW senior from Lumberton.

Campus Capsule

The UNCW Toastmaster's Club will meet Thursday April 2 in Room 201 of the University Union at 5:30 p.m. All interested persons are invited to attend.

Greets will reign a UNCW April 4-11 as UNCW Glee Week gets underway here.

Activities ranging from a clean up project to a pig pickin' will be offered.

Field events will be held every afternoon after 3:00 p.m. in Brooks Field and are open to the public.

SGA Vice-president as an administrative position and the Station Manager's duties "will include the operations aspect of the station."

Max Perkins was appointed General Manager and Linda Cartlie as Station Manager.

In other business, Laura L. Story was appointed editor for the Atlantis; there were no other applications.

As of March 24, there were no applications for the job of Fledgling editor.

"Nothing against them, but don't put them here"

As Disability Awareness week is approaching, we thought you should know about the efforts of some Fayetteville residents to establish a "Willie M." home for mentally and physically handicapped residents in that city.

Everyone agrees that the home is a good idea, but they can't seem to agree about where "to put them."

Some of the excuses given by residents who don't want the home in "their neighborhood" are:

"The retarded make funny noises at night and they will keep us awake."

"It's not safe in the country."

"It's not safe in the city."

"We have dangerous railroad tracks near our house in the country."

"A home is right next door to the railroad tracks in town."

"The house they want is in the middle of the block, it's too dangerous."

"That house is on the corner, its too dangerous."

"That side street is too dangerous for a house for them."

"The retarded need to be in the country where they can run free" (sounds like the writer is describing a large dog.)

"The retarded need to be in the city where they can easily reach services."

"One of them will go crazy and attack my little girl."

All these people claimed to have nothing against handicapped (or disabled, or special, or whatever you want to call those less fortunate — a different word doesn't help them walk any better) persons, but the writers certainly sound as though they could be advocates of the 1800's brand of treatment for the mentally ill — boxes with barred sides, isolation chairs, etc.

Until we can eliminate the ignorant fear of the handicapped and start helping Willie M. and all the others like him, all our words are just so much hot air.

Some barbershops are a cut above the rest

Once every couple of months, it comes time to get a haircut, and as much as I love Wilmington, it doesn't have a barber shop that can give me what I want in a haircut.

I'm afraid I have to admit that I suffer from being brought up in a small town where men and boys didn't go to a "hair stylist" and haircuts never cost more than a few bucks.

The barber shops I like are the kinds that still have a candy stripe pole outside, and there is a big picture window so that passersby can peer in to see if their son or husband or father or brother is finished yet, so they can go out to the double feature.

I like barber shops where there are a lot of old men chewing tobacco and watching basketball on TV or listening to the baseball game on an old Panasonic transistor radio.

I like barber shops that allow old dogs to sleep across the doorway or in the middle of the floor, because old dogs have led a hard life and they deserve the right to sleep wherever they want. A barber shop needs to have a rickety Tom's Snack machine in the corner (red with the long glass fronted racks that let you see if there are any Peanut Bars or Boston Baked Beans left) and a soft drink machine, Coke or Pepsi. There should be a hatrack and a coat tree that has several jackets and a snap brim hat hung there that has been there for several years because the owners always forgot to retrieve them after a Saturday afternoon $3.50 haircut and shave.

Barber shops should have cracked china bowls full of water for the dogs, and one of those flip top trashcans with the lid that opens when you step on a pedal, and there should be one of the older men "who is kind of down on his luck" who sweeps up the clippings and empties the ashtrays for a free haircut or maybe some of the barber's wife's chicken and pasta.

Barber shops should have autographed pictures of politicians or country singers on the walls, and there should be at least one calendar from a feed store with a picture of a couple of bird dogs over each month. Calendars with old cars are acceptable, but there should be no "pin-ups" or any pictures of naked women in the place. A dried out vase of flowers from a long past funeral is acceptable.

There should be two wall length mirrors, one in front of and one behind the barber chairs, so you can see if the length of your hair is about right.

There should be no more than two barbers, but there should always be at least one chair more than there are barbers, so the old men with bad backs can relax and adjust it to whatever position is most comfortable to them.

Barber shops should have toasty kerosene heaters in winter and clattery air conditioning units over the door for the summer days when it is too hot and still to prop the door open with an empty World War II artillery shell or a brick.

There need to be at least three old men chewing tobacco or smoking cigars and watching sports on a battered television with tinfoil on the rabbit ear antennae. The men mustn't agree on anything except that things ain't like they used to be.

Maybe that's the problem.

April Fool's Day is venerable custom

By Joseph Baneth Allen

Hey! Your shoelaces are untied!

Didn't fall for the old "your shoelaces are untied" trick, did you? After all, the above trick is a very tired old April Fool's Day classic. No, it isn't as old as the traditional prankster holiday. It will come as a surprise to some people, but the origins of April Fool's Day can be traced back to the Sixteenth Century.

No fooling!

The traditional day for practical jokes can be traced back to 1564. It is believed that the custom probably began in France when it was decided to change New Year's Day from April 1 to Jan. 1.

April is the fourth month of year in the Gregorian calendar. In the Northern hemisphere April is the first full spring month. April was probably the first month of the new year because the religious holidays Easter and Passover usually occurring in April.

The fourth month is probably named from the Latin word aperire. Aperire refers to the opening of spring buds. Since April was looked upon as the beginning of spring, it was only natural that it was at ope time the first month of each new year.

When France decided to change New Year's Day to Jan. 1 from April 1, the concept naturally met with some resistance. Some dihardes refused to celebrate each new year on Jan. 1. They continued to celebrate New Year's Day on April 1.

Since the change over was a popular one embraced by almost everyone, those who refused to celebrate New Year's Day on Jan. 1 were ridiculed.

Practical jokes were played on those who still celebrated April 1 as New Year's Day and the name All Fools' Day or April Fools' Day caught on.

For four centuries playing practical jokes have been the highlight of prankster's holiday. So beware! Your shoelaces may just be untied.

If you were offended by this week's front page stories, remember that it was all in the good spirit of

'Super Tuesday' leaves little hope

By Montague Britt

Much is being made of "Super Tuesday," the day of the Southern multi-state presidential primary.

I can't get excited over the idea, and for three very good reasons.

First, I know that only an out-and-out socialist is going to wind up with the Democratic nomination.

Second, I know that, no matter who the Republican nominee may be, the worst of them will be more nearly acceptable to me than his Democratic opponent.

And third, I am as certain as anybody can be 18 months in advance that the Democratic nominee will be the next president and will enjoy strong majorities in both houses of Congress.

If I were a gambler I would gladly give odds of 100 to one on that.

Teddy Boy Kennedy is still the worst of the lot, but not very much worse than the rest of his party's aspirants.

If there was a Democratic possibility I might be able to live with it, it would be Sen. Sam Nunn.

But Nunn is temporarily sitting it out, and should he enter and win the primary he would be as firmly under the control of organized labor, women's lib, Americans For Democratic Action and the rest of the left-wing pressure groups as was his fellow Georgian, Jimmy Carter.

On the Republican side, Rep. Jack Kemp's conservatism is suspect because of a recent vote on a very bad piece of labor legislation.

Howard Baker looks better to me than he does to a lot of my fellow conservatives.

But he has some serious weaknesses, from my standpoint.

I will forgive his vote in the Senate to give away the Panama Canal but only if he repudiates the so-called Equal Rights Amendment. That I can't live with.

Sen. Bob Dole emerges as perhaps the most likely GOP candidate, but he will have to convert a lot of voters.

Of course I could live with Vice President George Bush, assuming, as I am assuming, he is sincere in the positions he has stated since becoming vice president.

But there is no denying that Bush has been badly hurt by events of recent months.

And no sitting vice president has succeeded to the top office in this century.

Calvin Coolidge, Harry Truman and Lyndon Johnson first took office when the presidents died.

Richard Nixon was defeated when he ran to succeed President Eisenhower and come back later to win.

The bright side of the presidential election picture is...

Sorry, I just can't think of one right now.

Suicide myths hide facts

Suicide is on the national mind this week. The deaths of the four teenagers in New Jersey and the others that followed haunt us.

Pain, despair and loneliness are indeed part of life. In the opening sentence of his best-selling book, "The Road Less Traveled," Dr. M. Scott Peck, a Connecticut psychiatrist, puts it succinctly: "Life is difficult." Because life is difficult, every human being is apt to experience periods of depression. That's normal. But the tragedy is that an estimated million people a year in the U.S. deal with life's difficulties by attempting to take their own lives, while perhaps as many as 90 thousand "succeed" at it. No one is sure of the figures, because so many deaths are covered up or erroneously reported as accidents.

Facts: People 60 years and older commit twenty-three percent of the suicides while being only 18.3 percent of the population. Suicide is the second leading cause of death among adolescents. The incidents of suicide is greater among single people and divorced than those who are married.

Why? There are lots of reasons — drug abuse, alcohol, unemployment, despair, revenge and on and on, but the end result as discovered in a study of suicidal people is that "life seemed meaningless" to 85 percent of them.

As we grow and develop, I believe it is incredibly important to work at understanding what brings meaning into our life and seek to know where others find meaning in ways that we might want to appropriate. Buscaglia, noted author and lecturer once wrote: "Life was given you by God ... in a great big box with a wonderful ribbon on it ... what we expect in there is joy, peace, contentment, and an abundance of love. But we also find that in that life are pain, despair and loneliness. They are all part of the same box called life. It is not until you dive into and experience all of it that you will really know life. We learn from pain just as much as we learn from joy.

A month before his seventeenth birthday, Paul Garver of Denver underwent surgery for cancer. Although he lived with the knowledge that he would soon die, he wrote a poem about life on his birthday. This is an excerpt.

"Well, here I am! Seventeen years old today, boy the clock's ticking fast. Birthdays are a special time, a day to celebrate your existence and cherish the ones around you.

Life is so full, abounding with wonders to be seen and emotions to be experienced.

If we all just open our eyes and gaze upon the subtleties and finer shading of life, greater worlds unfold.

Worlds we rarely find time to look at. But they're here and always will be when we choose to find them.

I'm grateful to be a leaf in the ever growing tree of life and this leaf's not falling off for nothing."

Some face the despair and other problems of life and commit suicide. Others, like Paul Garver, deal with tragedy in a way that maintains a sense of meaning and a positive perspective about life. What makes the difference? Why do some use tragedy as "the raw material of triumph" and others succumb to despair?

I think there are two fundamental elements available for our human existence to provide the foundations for the kind of meaning that breeds survivors.

First, the kind of faith in God that generates a positive view of the value and possibility of life provides a sense of purpose and mission and a mental, emotional, and spiritual support system for the living of our days from birth through death and beyond. Second, significant positive human relationships that provide us a place of security where we can fully be ourselves without fear and experience the caring support that sustains us. We simply need each other in significant ways.

How strong are these foundation elements in your life? Perhaps it is time to work more intentionally on them as resources for whatever life brings our way.

Mama's Kitchen

The quest for pie

By Claire Covey

Years ago, as a young wife, it was a serious job to try and juggle the monthly household allowance to cover all those necessary things. The important things such as tuition and those ever present books came first. Items such as food and clothing, rent, and medical bills fell into place somewhere along the line, and more often than not clothing fell completely off the budget.

Come to think of it, those lean college years are not so different than the present time. There are no babies to run and no group of young college friends to share ideas and dreams with.

But neighbors still gather in the backyards and compare recipes, both old and new.

Our fancies still roam as they did during those years, dreaming of thick rare steaks, marvelous table settings and unlimited food budgets.

If there is one thing that binds generations together more than lean budgets, I don't know what it is other than love of course.

During one of those college day conversations, a friend spoke lovingly of "fried pies".

Recently, other friends were remembering when their mothers always had fried pies on hand. Much of the time, entire flour sacks of them hung in the cooling pantry for eager hands to dip into.

One spoke of her mother's "pie safe," only to laugh and recall that no snack was "safe" there.

For years I have tried to make a fried pie, but for some unknown reason this accomplishment is completely beyond my capabilities.

Before we lost Mama, I begged her to teach me to make fried pies. She never was able to and no one else has either. I have come to the firm belief that as far as my education goes it is still woefully

I can make double crust pies, lattice crust pies, single and no crust pies. Little pies, big pies, cream and fruit pies, even double glazed pies with fruit, but never that southern standby of a fried pie.

I do know how to make a big pie, filled with all sorts of rib-sticking vegetables, meat and smooth cheese sauce. So, I will share it with you.

When I first made this "pie" it was preparation with a capital P. You had to pare, slice, cube, then cook the vegetables (carrots, potatoes, onion, celery and green peas), then cube your meat, fix the cheese sauce from scratch and do the same for your pastry. It meant hours for a simple one dish meal. Now we can find all those vegetables and crusts in the store freezers and refrigerators.

We made our cheese sauce the hard way: loaf processed cheese mixed with milk, and melted over a double boiler. Now you have the option of choosing the jar of soft cheese which can be popped into micro-wave, or using a can of cheese soup.

The meat? My recipe called for those little canned meats, cubed and tossed into the sauce.

To be really truthful, I think some ex-GIs wife dreamed up the recipe when she served another slice of fried Spam or Treet to her student husband. GIs returning from the World War! were supposed to hate both of those meats.

You can use leftover ham or beef chips.

The size of your dish determines the amounts of your vegetables. I used lots of vegetables and meat because my dinner was planned for five hungry people. It also meant leftovers for the kids' lunch the next day.

Check the cup capacity of your dish and go by that to determine the amount of prepared pie.

Your tastes determine what spices you use, but mostly salt, pepper, and a sprinkle of parsley would cover what was needed.

With precooked freezer vegetables there is no need to cook further. You may want to lengthen the oven cooking time just a little.

Combine your cheese and meat sauce with your vegetables, fill your dish, and top with a crust. Make sure your crust is sealed to the excess. To do this, touch the crusts with a bare amount of water (wet fingertips will do it), and crimp to the pie dish. Slit a couple of air vents to keep it from puffing and exploding, pop it into a 400 degree oven, and in less than 54 minutes dinner is ready. Add a salad, a piece of fruit for dessert, a beverage and hungry people.

But back to the original question: When is a pie not a pie, when it is the mainstay of your supper meal?

And then there was the day when we were invited over to a friend's home for pie 'n coffee.

Imagine our surprise when we were served something called "onion pie": but that is another story.

I am still trying to master fried pies.

Seahawk reporter takes a vet to see 'Platoon,' and the results may surprise you — but maybe not

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Since Platoon has been hailed as the movie that may well be as close as anyone in Hollywood will come to in producing an accurate movie about the Vietnam War, I decided to take a United States Marine who served three tours of combat duty in Vietnam during the war. I took the Marine with me because he had been wounded several times in combat and I figured that if anyone could tell me if Platoon was as accurate as the Madison-Avenue advertising claimed, he could.

It should come to no surprise that Platoon is not as accurate as a Vietnam War movie as the advertising claimed. Yes, the combat scenes are accurate, and yes, the jungle scenes are accurate, but beyond that, very little about Platoon is accurate.

Believe it or not, American soldiers were not the dope-smoking rapists and murders portrayed in Oliver Stone's Platoon. Granted some incidents like the ones portrayed in Platoon did occur, like the rape and murder scenes in the movie, but those incidents were extremely few in number. Any American GI who committed rape and/or murder would immediately be tried and sentenced to the fullest extent of the law. And any private who decided to gun his Platoon Sergeant down would find himself spending the rest of his life in a military jail, instead of going back home soon-free.

I know it is extremely fashionable to like Platoon, but I do not like it. Oliver Stone, the director and author for the screenplay, served in the 25th Infantry Division along the Cambodia border in 1967-68. A realistic film portrayal of the Vietnam War based on his own experiences has been a goal of Stone's since he first became involved with the movie business.

Too bad he lost sight of his goal. Stone's first failure immediately comes within the first twenty minutes of Platoon. No platoon commander would allow a fresh, young GI, newly arrived in Vietnam, to serve as the platoon's point man. Only the most experienced and knowledgeable soldier would be the platoon's point man. The point man in each platoon is responsible for guiding the men in his company in the jungle and keeping them from stumbling into an enemy ambush. Green kids weren't given such a heavy responsibility their first night in the jungles of Nam. Also, when you're out on a night ambush, everybody does not go to sleep except for one man. At the most, fifty-percent of the men in the platoon would be awake.

So much for Stone's authenticity.

Stone showed a platoon at war with itself rather than with the Viet Cong. Why Stone opted to portray a war fantasy is unknown, especially since he wanted a realistic film portrayal. In the reality of the Vietnam War, platoons did not war amongst themselves. There was a food comradeship among platoon members and the goal was to come back alive, not in a body bag.

I believe Sgt. Al Santoli, author of Everything We Had, 2nd Battalion of the 22nd Infantry, 25th Division, in an interview in Soldier of Fortune magazine sums up the inaccuracy of the movie quite well. In the Soldier of Fortune interview, Sgt. Santoli states: "When I was with the 25th Division, we didn't burn villages, kill civilians and go around raping people. Stone is a disgrace to every brave person who served in that division. He doesn't deserve to wear that patch."

Strong words from a Vietnam Veteran are hard to ignore. It is extremely hard to find an interview where a Vietnam Veteran speaks highly of the movie Platoon. All Stone did in his movie was bring back the old stereotype of dope-smoking, baby-killing veterans. It's easy to see why so many Vietnam Veterans are angry about Stone's movie.

It is a great pity that Stone decided to make a fantasy film about the Vietnam War. The first casualty of war may be innocence, but that doesn't mean that the American movie going public is gullible. The best way to find out about what the Vietnam War was really like is to ask several Nam vets for a broad overview. What you will be told will be 100-percent more realistic than wasting money going to see yet another inaccurate war movie.

Editor's note:

Alright, all of you creative types, this is your chance to showcase all of those talents and let the campus community see what you are capable of.

There is an abundance of creative talent on this campus, and I often hear disgruntled comments from those who feel left out when other artists in the community revel in the media spotlight. You must SHOW your talents in order to gain attention for them. Please take advantage of this opportunity to let the rest of us know what you can do.

Schweitzer Awards to feature stars

Gala events at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Wilmington April 6-8 will bring together Broadway legend Mary Martin, Oscar winner F. Murray Abraham, television newsmen Frank Blair, and pioneer woman attorney Kathrine R. Everett of Durham, N.C., to receive the Albert Schweitzer Medal for Artistry. Also being honored posthumously is Paul Green, North Carolina playwright, whose grandson concert pianist Frederick Moyer will perform and accept the medal on his behalf, and young concert pianist Laura Melton, Wilmington native.

In addition to the six notables receiving Schweitzer Medals, Jim Brown of NBC's "Today" show will serve as master of ceremonies. Giving encore recitals at the 1987 Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts are 1986 Medal winners, pianist and piano teacher Mary Eunice Troy of Wilmington and violin prodigy Nicholas Kitchen of Durham.

Proceeds from the benefit concerts help to fund the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, awarded every four years on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The Prizes recognize contributions in music, medicine and the humanities, three areas in which Schweitzer excelled. Prior Prize recipients include Mother Theresa (later a Nobel Laureate), Andres Segovia, and Gian Carlo Minotti.

The three days of concerts are reminiscent of the Salzburg, Austria, Music Festivals. St. Mary's Catholic Church, a Spanish Renaissance-style structure designed by Rafael

Mary Martin will receive Schweitzer Award

Guastavino, Sr. in 1908, will be illuminated with state-of-the-art lighting equipment provided by the De Laurentiis Entertainment Group Film Studios Inc. of Wilmington. Hundreds of candles amidst a garden of spring flowers will complete the exquisite setting.

Following their performances, each artist will receive the Albert Schweitzer Medal for Artistry amid great pageantry. The medals are cast by Stephen LeQuire, associate professor of art at The University

Writers and Readers Series Continues

The UNCW Creative Writing Program Writers and Readers Series will feature a series of readings throughout the upcoming months. Novelist Jill McCorkle and poet Cathy Smith-Bowers recently visited campus, and the upcoming readings promise to be as delightful as those readings were. All readings will be held in room 100 of the Student Union.

The April 11th reading features several creative writing program alumni poets, including Jean Jones, Allan Johnson, and Berwyn J. Moore. The readings are scheduled for 2-4 p.m.

The April 25th reading will feature novelist Elizabeth Cox of Durham, and is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m.

The May 2nd reading will feature poet Chuck Sullivan of Charlotte, and will begin at 8 p.m.

Novelist Marianne Gingham of Greensboro is scheduled to visit on May 9th from 2-4 p.m., and Candace Flynt, another novelist from Greensboro, will read on May 23rd from 2-4 p.m.

Other artists scheduled to visit include poet Ron Bayes from Laurinburg, who will appear June 6th from 2-4 p.m., and poet/novelist Fred Chappell from Greensboro, who is scheduled to visit from 2-4 p.m. on October 3rd.

All readings are funded by the N.C. Arts Council in Raleigh.

Reynolda offers summer seminars

Reynolda House, Museum of American Art offers American Foundations summer seminar in conjunction with Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, June 29 to July 29, 1987. This interdisciplinary learning community is open to graduate students, teachers, and undergraduates. American Foundations offers six hours of graduate credit or eight hours of under graduate credit.

The course has twenty participants who make a full-time commitment (Monday - Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.) to the pursuit of interdisciplinary studies for four weeks. Applicants from fields other than the liberal arts who are prepared to be challenged and exposed to new ways of thinking are welcomed.

American Foundations includes a study trip to New York City. All students pay a $225 registration fee. All other expenses are funded by a scholarship. Applications must be received by June 1. For more information, contact Nicholas Bragg or Marge Wagstaff, Reynolda House, Museum of American Art, P. O. Box 11763, Winston-Salem, N.C. 27106 (919) 725-5325.

Concert Party

A concert party featuring the piano mastery of Katharina Wolpe will be the highlight of next weekend's musical activities. Ms. Wolpe (who is currently the Distinguished Visiting Artist here on campus) will be premiering a piece by British composer Ian Hamilton that is one of several written especially for her. The piece is entitled The Garden of Monet.

The London pianist has been perfecting her rendition of the work for over a year, and all indications are that it will be an outstanding treat for those who thrive on piano mastery. Other featured works include Hadyn's Sonata in Eb and the Debussy preludes La Puerta del Viento, Fenilles mortes, and General Lavine-scentric.

The concert party will take place on Saturday, April 4, at Kenan Auditorium. The curtain rises at 3 p.m. and the public is invited to attend both the concert and the reception that follows immediately afterward. Attendance is free.

Mojo Collins appears at Kingfish's Oarhouse on Sunday

For you blues fools...

Blues guitarist Mojo Collins will be struttin' his stuff when he appears April 5th at Kingfish's Oarhouse. It's been a while since Collins breezed through town, so it's anybody's guess what he's been up to in the last few months.

The blues player, who has opened for the likes of Pink Floyd, Alice Cooper, and Creedence Clearwater Revival, will undoubtedly have some hot licks in store for the audience and some interesting war stories about life on the road in store for everyone else.

If you don't have anything better to do, check him out.

UNCW Jazz Combo competes in Chicago next week

Cheer on the combo...

Musifest USA will be held next week in Chicago, so show your support next time you see one of the combo players. They have been practicing furiously to get ready for the competition, and I don't put it past them to win.

I will be accompanying the combo to Chicago (as a guest of Downbeat Magazine) so I'll fill you in on all of the details when I return. In the meantime, cross your fingers that we win.

Many types of bands to play at Grope for Peace

By Pamela Weisalein

The Wilmington Grope for Peace Festival, scheduled for the University Union grounds this coming weekend should have something for anyone with an ear for popular music.

Progressive, punk, rock-n-roll, reggae and progressive pop bands will be featured during the two day festival.

Nine of the thirteen groups that are going to be there come from North Carolina, and the others hail from Washington, D.C. Atlanta, Ga. Annadale, Va. and Virginia Beach, Va.

The progressive music scene will be strongly represented at the upcoming festival with groups such as Other Bright Colors from Carboro, NC; Rockin Bones from Atlanta, Ga; the Young Caucasians from Washington, DC; the Flipp from Annadale, Va. and last but not least Al Fungus and the Bacteria, Elegant Mess and God Food all from Wilmington.

When asked why his group accepted the invitation from WLOZ to play the festival, Matt Adore from the Young Caucasians said: "We're dedicated to the cause of peace."

The Young Caucasians have been around for five years and have released two albums "Pop Quiz" and their newest LP "The White Stuff". The group has acclaimed for their blending of "James Brown Funk, Rick Rubin hip-hop and the Gimmer Twins rock-n-roll".

Adore, the groups' singer/manager states that the group is huge in Colorado and their song "Right on Time" is "almost the state anthem."

Besides Adore, other members of the group are Andy Social, guitar, keyboard and songwriter; Justin Time, guitar; Jerome Business, bass; Bill Ding, drums. The Young Caucasians will play Wilmington twice in one week, performing at the Mad Monk Wednesday after they play the festival.

Punk music is being represented at the festival by DiArm from Virginia Beach, Va. and the Floating Children from Chapel Hill, N.C.

The Floating Children are considered by Brenda Boyle, organizer of the Grope For Peace, "A cross between Frank Zappa and something else bizarre."

"When WLOZ asked us to be at the festival we didn't just jump at the chance, we didn't just leap at the chance, we dove at the chance," Billy Warden, from the Floating Children, wildly stated. Warden also states that "There is nothing like being outdoors in the fresh air sharing good vibes." The Floating Children recently played at the Mad Monk on March 25 and were well received.

Well last but definitely not least, comes the reggae, rock-n-roll, and progressive pop. Groups that fall into these categories are the Amateurs from Greenville, the Black Jacks from Chapel Hill, Generals of the Swamps from Wilmington and Jo-Jo Ex-Mariner from Raleigh.

Joe Woodson, of the Black Jacks, expressed that not only is the festival for a good cause but it is also a good opportunity for his group to play with the other groups that are going to be in attendance.

The music will start around noon April 4 and play through 5 and each of the bands will be able to play for about an hour. In between the bands there will be either speakers or solo/folk performers so that the next band can set up to play. Sonia Brand, band coordinator, said, "There will be something for everyone. Please come out!"

Numerous stars scheduled for Azalea Festival

"Leave it to the Azalea Festival" to bring great stars to Wilmington.

Attending the 1987 North Carolina Azalea Festival, on April 9 - 12 will be Tony Dow, who is better known as Wally Cleaver on both the "Leave it to Beaver" and "The New Leave it to Beaver" series.

For the past 27 years Dow has used his acting talents in roles ranging from a villain on "Knight Rider" to being a romantic lead in "The Love Boat". In past television movie roles he has played a concerned father and a coroner. He has also hosted a prime-time syndicated TV special, "Weekday Heroes."

"We are glad to have Tony Dow as a celebrity guest," said Doug Echols, President of this year's 40th annual N.C. Azalea Festival. "His has been practically a household name for many years, so he should be well received by Azalea Festival visitors." His breakthrough role came in the "Leave it to Beaver" series, which ran for six years. At the end of that role he spent six years in the National Guard and during part of that duty he studied photo journalism under Lt. Col. Don Blake of Wilmington, an instructor in the Defense Information School. Although he chose acting as his major career, Dow and Blake have remained friends during the ensuing years.

Dow has returned in the new "Beaver" series on Turner Broadcasting. "Wally" has grown up to be a successful lawyer with children of his own. Dow has done script writing for this new series and is also a television producer. Soon he will try his hand at directing. He follows a full schedule in TV, movies, commercials, and the stage.

The popular TV show "Falcon Crest" will be well represented this year at the 1987 North Carolina Azalea Festival here in Wilmington on April 9 - 12.

Festival President Doug Echols announced Wednesday night that Robin Greer who plays the role of Dina Wells in the CBS-TV series has been named Queen Azalea XL.

At the festival from "Falcon Crest" will be Lorenzo Lamas, who portrays Lance Cumson whose character is a love interest with Miss Greer.

Jerry ver Dorn, a member of the cast of the daytime series, "Guiding Light" will be master of ceremonies for the Queen's Coronation Pageant and Show on Saturday night, April 11, in Trask Coliseum.

Miss Greer, as Queen Azalea XL, will be a very important part, of many activities throughout the four-day festival. Accompanied by the Queen's Court and escorts, Miss Greer will be officially crowned during special ceremonies at the Queen's Coronation Pageant and Show. Governor James Martin will be on hand to crown the Queen.

Johnny Mathis, the headliner of the 1984 Azalea Festival will return this year to perform at the ceremonies. Tickets for the Coronation Pageant are $20 each and can be picked up at the festival office in Long Leaf Mall. The telephone number is 763-0905.

It's time to play ball

For those of you that are sports fans, you know what next week is. For those of you that aren't, let me let you in on the big secret.

BASEBALL SEASON OPENS APRIL 6TH!!!

Since our national pastime is just around the corner, it's time to take a look at the divisions and see how they shape up for 1987.

American League East - This division has had six different winners in the last six years, and this could be the seventh. Cleveland has high hopes for a pennant after finishing above the .500 mark for the first time since the strike-shortened 1981 season. Toronto, New York, and Boston all look to challenge. The key to the whole division is pitching, because the A.L. East is loaded with offense.

Toronto - The Blue Jays should be the team to break the trend in the division. They boast one of the best outfields in baseball and their bullpen could be one of the strongest.

The outfield of Lloyd Moseby, Jesse Barfield, and George Bell have a rare combination of speed and power. The bullpen of Mark Eichhorn and Tom Henke gives manager Jimmy Williams plenty of options in closing out a game.

The key to the Blue Jays winning the East will be their starting pitching and the emergence of someone to handle the catching duties.

If Williams can find a fulltime catcher in rookie Matt Stark, or a suitable platoon with veteran Ernie Whit, it will solidify an already potent lineup. And if the starting rotation of Dave Stieb, Jimmy Key, Jim Clancy, and Joe Johnson can get the Jays to the seventh inning, Henke and Eichhorn will spell double trouble for American League opponents.

New York - Pitching is the key if the Yankees are to compete. The starting rotation of 18-game winner Dennis Rasmussen, Rick Rhoden, Joe Niekro, Charlie Hudson, and Tommy John can give manager Lou Pinella six solid innings every time out, closer Dave Righetti could put the Yanks over the top with a season like last year's major league record 46 saves.

The offense is definitely there, especially with the addition of free-agent Gary Ward. Even if the pitching falters, the Yankees could be the one team to get by on offense alone.

A lineup of Ricky Henderson, Dave Winfield, Claudell Washington, Mike Pagliarulo, and the soon-to-be Hall of Famer Don Mattingly, will make opposing pitchers cringe. If Toronto is unable to get out of the gates quickly, New York may be the team to watch.

Cleveland - The word in Cleveland is offense. The Indians led the majors in runs scored, but what this team gets in offense, it gives away in pitching.

Without one proven starter, and a host of reclamation projects, manager Pat Corrales can only hope for some career seasons on his pitching staff. And with any kind of pitching, the defense behind Corrales staff has to hope the fielders can catch it as Cleveland led the majors with 157 errors.

Offense by Joe Carter, Cory Snyder, Julio Franco, and Tony Bernzard lead the Indians to an upper-division finish, but not high enough for the A.L. East crown.

Boston - Calling any doctor who can cure the Repeaters Syndrome. That affliction has plagued all since the 1978 season in winning back-to-back titles.

Well Boston will suffer from this ailment after winning the American League pennant last year. In a year in which pitching should be strength and offense not too shabby itself, both will come apart at the seams.

With the holdout of Cy Young Award winner Roger Clemens and loss of catcher Rick Gedman, Boston will start the season off about as slow as Bill Buckner runs to first. The rest of the pitching staff may be overrated and the offense will not be able to produce like it did last season.

Buckner is almost completely handicapped, while age is creeping up on Don Baylor, Dwight Evans, and Jim Rice. The lineup will still produce runs, but the pressure to repeat and the loss of key personnel will hold the Red Sox in the middle of the pack.

Detroit - The Tigers could surprise some this year, but the loss of Lance Parrish and a shaky pitching staff will hold manager Sparky Anderson's club down again this year.

Age has crept into the outfield of Chet Lemon and Larry Herndon, two key figures in the 1984 season, and the unreliability of pitcher Dan Petry should put Detroit in the second division.

If Petry comes back to old form and the Tiger offense wakes up to its 1984 form, come September Sparky's boys may be right there. But I doubt it.

Baltimore - The addition of three veteran players should help the Orioles improve on their last place finish in 1986, but will not help them get out of the second division.

Catcher Terry Kennedy and infielders Rick Burleson and Ray Knight should help the offense, but an old pitching staff that will not make it through the summer should hold new manager Cal Ripken Sr.'s club at the bottom of a very strong A.L. East.

The one positive thing that will happen to the Orioles is the usual pursuit by Eddie Murray and Cal Ripken Jr. of the MVP Trophy.

Milwaukee - A very talented pitching staff and a very young nucleus of players led by rookie catcher B.J. Surhoff (of North Carolina fame) and pitcher Teddy Higuera, should make trouble for any team that takes the Brewers too lightly.

Manager Tom Trebelhorn will be looking to piece together a squad that is on its way up in the division. The only problem with this team is the too much youth for such a competitive division. Give this team a couple more years.

American League West - The talk is all about the boys from Texas, but Kansas City has the offensive punch to go with their great pitching to take the A.L. West title again. The Athletics will also contend, as should the Twins and Angels, but then everyone can contend in the weak A.L. West.

Kansas City - The acquisition of Danny Tartabull from Seattle will give some protection to George Brett in the lineup and help the Royals give some support to their excellent pitching staff. With any

Seahawks rip Richmond in crucial series

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The Seahawk baseball team traveled to Richmond this weekend to face the defending Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) champions University of Richmond Spiders. UNCW won two of the three games in the weekend series.

In Sunday's action the Seahawks used a season-high offensive attack to route the Spiders, 16-6. UNCW hammered four home runs, including two by Dwayne Graham.

The Hawks used a seven-run seventh inning to blow open the game. The inning was highlighted by Tim Langmeyer's towering three-run homer.

Other members of the Seahawks' battery were Calvin Garrent with three hits, Chuck Jones with three sacrifice flies, and Eric Hickman who crushed a ball for his ninth home-run of the season.

UNCW did not rely totally on their power as they stole seven bases in the afternoon.

Kevin Davidson was the winning pitcher as he improved his record to 3-1.

On Saturday the Seahawks split a twinbill with UR, winning the first game 4-2 but dropping the second 2-3.

Pitching was the key to the victory in the first game as Mike Freeman tossed a five hitter. Freeman gave up a solo home run in the second and an "oh by the way" run in the ninth.

UNCW opened the scoring in the first on a Hickman double. Mark Maulsby gave the Seahawks the lead in the third with his second home run of the season. UNCW scored two more runs in the seventh. Langmeyer drove in one of the runs with a single and Graham pushed him home with a sacrifice fly.

In the second game the Seahawks had numerous chances to win but were just not able to capitalize as they left 10 men on base. UNCW had a 2-1 lead on a Mitch Well's single in the third and a Hickman double in the fifth.

Richmond answered with two runs in sixth to take the lead for the first time. The Spiders held on for the win, 3-2.

Wesley Currin took the loss dropping his record to 3-2.

UNCW's record goes to 2-1 in the CAA and 12-10 overall after the series with Richmond. The Seahawks return to action Wednesday against Atlantic Christian College.

and Jay Wyrick (230) also shot well for UNCW.

Guilford College won the team honors with a 878, and Kent State finished second with a 883. Lee Porter of Guilford received the medalist honors while shooting a three-day total of 216

UNCW takes Seahawk Inv.

UNCW women's softball team won their own tournament, Seahawk Invitational, over the weekend. The Lady Hawks won three of five games to take the tourney championship. They lost two of the three qualifying games but due to a run differential tie-breaking method they were able to advance to the semi-final round.

In the final four of the invitational the Lady Seahawks defeated Methodist 5-4 in eight innings and moved on to face Campbell. In the final game UNCW downed the Lady Camels 2-1 to take the championship.

Men golfers finish 5th

The UNCW men's golf team opened quickly but finished slowly as they fell to fifth place in the 17-team Intercollegiate Golf Tournament. UNCW shot a combined 300 in the first round leaving them in second place after the initial round but two consecutive rounds of 306 dropped the Seahawks to their fifth place finish.

David Teem led the Hawks with a three day total 227, eleven strokes off the lead. Richard Kimble (228), ## Ball!

Mike Meadows takes a pitch low and outside for a ball. UNCW behind an error by Kent State in the bottom of the kind of offensive support, KC will take the division crown once again. Another key is the culmination of the Dick Howser ordeal and the hiring of steady Billy Gardner to take the reins.

Besides Tartabull, who clubbed 25 homers in his rookie season, the Royals also added Juan Beniquez, who has hit .300 his last four seasons. These players combined with stalwarts Brett, Frank White, Willie Wilson, and rising star (or dud and future Denver Bronco running back) Bo Jackson, the pitching staff should be able to take the Royals to the top.

Mark Gubicza, Charlie Liebrandt, Danny Jackson, Bud Black and the questionable Bret Saberhagen form one of the better rotations in baseball and with this kind of staff, any manager could win with this bunch.

Texas - Manager Bobby Valentine has a very good bunch of kids in Arlington, but maybe not enough to take the Royals. They should contend all year long, but the summer heat in Texas, coupled with a young pitching staff that will have to learn to keep their ERA's down if the Rangers are to capture their first title.

Other keys will be the production of Larry Parrish and Oddibe McDowell at the plate and injury free years from Pete O'Brian and Pete Inaviglia.

Another year or so and another player or two could make this team top-notch. They may not win it, but they should definitely be a team to watch.

Oakland - Questionable pitching and just not enough hitting will keep the Athletics (no longer the A's) from capturing the division. Some power hitting by rookie sensation Jose Canseco, old times Reggie Jackson, Dwayne Murphy, and Mike Davis could help the Athletics lead the league in homers, but nothing else.

Pitching is the mystery as Joaquin Andujar anchors a staff of question marks. If Andujar has a good year (which is unlikely because he could not get an extension on his contract which will distract the fiery Dominican) the rest of the staff may come around. Too many question marks for manager Tony LaRussa are the culprit this year as so many years in the past.

Minnesota - Here is a team that could surprise the whole division and is the most likely to sneak away with the title.

With the addition of reliever Jeff Reardon, a reliever that the Twins have needed desperately for years, manager Tom Kelly could cause quite seventh came back to take the second game of a double header, 6-5. UNCW returns home to host CAA foe George Mason this weekend. (See related story this page) a stir.

Laden with a strong offensive arsenal of long range bombers (Kirby Puckett, Tom Brunansky, Kent Hrbek, and Gary Gattis), Kelly should have all the ingredients to pull the big one off.

Pitching will again be a key, with Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven leading the way. Kelly must find two more starters to fill in behind his two veterans. If not, he will have to pray for rain every two days.

California - For coming so close, the Angels will have nothing to show for it this year. Also known as the California Ages because their players always seem to be on their last leg, this year's squad will be a little younger, but not quite as talented. After cutting many of the veterans that led them to the playoffs last year, manager Gene Mauch will have to replace these guys with some unproven rookies.

The Angels will have a very strong pitching staff, led by Mike Witt and Kirk McKaskill, but so do the Royals and Rangers. A lack of cohesion and youth will drop California into the second division.

Seattle - Despite leading the league in striking out, the Mariners have some pretty good sluggers. If the strikeout total can be kept down, and a pitching staff helps out any, the M's may cause some trouble in the division.

The hitting of Ken Phelps, Alvin Davis, Phil Bradley, and Jim Preley should help the cause, but off the field problems will play badly into the hand of manager Dick Williams. Owner George Argyros will probably sell the team and buy the San Diego Padres, and unless the Seattle community comes out and supports the M's, they could wind up in Denver next year.

Chicago - Manager Jim Fregosi may want to reconsider taking a White Sox club that General Manager Ken Harrelson destroyed last year. With no pitching and only two players, outfielder Harold Baines and infielder Greg Walker, as potential stars, the talent is thin the south side Chicago squad.

The trading of Joe Cowley will also hurt Fregosi as the pitching will be quite an adventure. Offense will also be a joke.

National League East - If you ask all the experts, they will tell you that the New York Mets will repeat as National League Champs. But this is quite a biased statement, since most of the writers expressing this view are from the New York area. The Mets probably won't win their division because of the same people that are picking them to win, the media.

If the Mets, with all their arrogant and outgoing personalities get involved with the media, the media would like nothing more than to exploit the situation. Sportswriters like to do that, because it gives them more to write about and makes their jobs much more easier. The New York press corps would like nothing more than another Bronx Zoo to write about as they did with the Yankees of the late 70's.

Since the Mets will succumb to this outside pressure, Philadelphia and St. Louis will be the most likely to take their place.

After these teams, it is a toss up.

Philadelphia - I would have picked the Cardinals as the division winner, but they don't respond too well to pressure. Besides, Philadelphia has the best offense in the league and if the pitching of Kevin Gross, Bruce Ruffin, Mike Madson, and a healthy Shane Rawley and Don Carmien holds up, the offense of Mike Schmidt, Von Hayes, Juan Samuel, Glenn Wilson, and newly-acquired Lance Parrish should give the Phillies the right combination to unseat the Mets.

The key to the Phillies season should fall on the backs of Schmidt and Parrish, especially Parrish. Schmidt has hinted this may be his last season and Parrish must prove again that his back problems of last year are, literally, behind him.

Mike Easler and Joe Cowley were two other acquisitions for manager John Felske that should push the Phillies to the top. If Parrish and Schmidt do not perform up to par, then the Cardinals will be the next team to take its chances against the Mets.

St. Louis - When you talk about the Cardinals, you have to talk about speed and defense. If the hitting comes around, then the Cardinals should revert to their 1985 form that won them 101 games and the National League pennant.

The keys will be Clark, Willie McGee, and Tommy Herr. If these three players hit like they are supposed to, then the rest of the team will follow suit. If these players are to have good, if not great years, then Vince Coleman or "Vincent Van Go" is the key to their seasons. The speedster must improve on his .237 batting average and get on base more than last year when he stole 107.

As far as pitching, the rotation of John Tudor, Danny Cox, Bob Forsch, Greg Matthews, and rookie Joe Magrane, with spot starters Rick Horton and Dave LaPoint, should provide manager Whitey Herzog with one of the best, if not potentially the best (including the Mets) pitching staff.

The bullpen is one of the best with Todd Worrell the kingpin. If Ken Dayley and Jeff Lahti comeback from injuries, they may be invaluable (well, almost).

If pitching and defense win titles, then the Cardinals should wait to October. But for the speedy Cardinals, who steal everything they can (262 bases in 1986), the key may be if they can find a way to steal first base. If they can, the domino effect will occur on the team much like in 1985 and the Cardinals could steal the division from the Mets.

New York - The only thing that can be said about the Mets of Davey Johnson is off the field problems.

If the off the field stuff doesn't interfere with the on the field playing, then the Mets should win the division. But think of a team with so many stars, all groping for attention on the same team, all wanting that standing ovation, all wanting the headlines, trying to out do each other.

If you combine Gary Carter, Keith Hernandez, Dwight Gooden, Lenny Dykstra, and Darryl Strawberry with a host of others, the New York media should have a field day.

Another reason the Mets won't repeat is the loss of Kevin Mitchell and Ray Knight. That leaves Johnson with the worst left side of an infield in baseball, Howard Johnson and Rafael Santana. It was also Knight and Mitchell who were the big hitters early in the season when the Mets buried the rest of the East.

The pitching staff is led by Gooden (a mortal now), Ron Darling, and Sid Fernandez, not to mention Bob Ojeda. It may be the best in baseball, but can they duplicate last season. Odds are they won't.

The addition of outfielder Kevin McReynolds to the outfield should improve the lineup, but it is the chemistry that will be missing from the 1987 Mets.

Chicago - If Andre Dawson could have brought his friend Tim Raines to the Windy City, then the Cubs could challenge. But with an overpriced pitching staff and a lot of new faces, the Cubs are a team in transition.

The defense is shaky with Shawn Dunston at short, Leon Durham at first, and Keith Moreland at third and the hitting should be just average outside Wrigley Field.

The pitching is supposed to be led by Rick Sutcliffe, but he can't seem to find the form he had in 1984. Steve Trout and Scott Sanderson are average at best, leaving Dennis Eckersley as the only candidate for a stopper.

Without Dawson, the Cubs could be cellar-dwellers. With Dawson, they are average at best.

Pittsburgh - Manager Jim Leyland is building a winner for the future in steel town. He can only hope the organization and the fans have patience. Since the Pirates are rebuilding, not much can be expected of them.

Jim Morrison, Tony Pena, Johnny Ray and Sid Bream anchor a solid lineup that will produce some runs. Barry Bonds, in only his second year could provide the much needed spark at the top of the lineup for Leyland and pitchers Doug Drabek, Logan Easley, Brian Fischer (all acquired from the Yankees for Rick Rhoden), and Bob Kipper anchor a young staff that will get more than its share of experience.

The Pirates are about five years away and will be content with a fifth place finish.

Montreal - What can you say about a team that lost two of their star outfielders and their top relief pitcher.

The only thing I can say is GOOD LUCK!

The loss of Tim Lincecum, who still may return May 1st, and Andre Dawson will hamper any bid to get out of the cellar. Reardon will cost the Expos a handful of victories as he has been the stopper the past five years.

The pluses, very few indeed, consist of Hubie Brooks, Tim Wallach, Andres Galaraga, and pitcher Floyd Youmans. These players will help make the Expos of manager Buck Rodgers competitive, but not enough to get out of the N.L. East cellar.

National League West - The West should be won by the Astros who dominated the division last year. But last year Houston got help from the Reds with their poor start. If push comes to shove, then the Reds may have the power to unseat the Astros.

Pitching will be the big key. Houston has it, the Reds are trying to find it.

As for the rest of the division, the Giants lack the firepower to win it, while Los Angeles, San Diego, and Atlanta will look for the mystery ingredient to challenge. Seems as if Cincinnati and Houston are the only ones with that secret this year.

Houston - If the Astros are to win the N.L. West, then the pitching of Mike Scott, Bob Knepper, Jim Deshaies, and Nolan Ryan must be as good as their 1986 performances. Ryan will be the key as he had surgery in the off season. Manager Hal Lanier could be hard pressed to replace Ryan.

The offense will again be led by Glenn Davis and Kevin Bass who have emerged as stars. Bill Doran is also a key as he anchors second base about as well as anyone.

If the Astros get out to a quick lead in the division, then the Reds and Giants will be in a very deep hole.

Cincinnati - If Pete Rose wants a division title, he is going to have to find a pitching staff that will hold up throughout the season. If he can get to the bullpen with a lead, then he will challenge the Astros. If he falls behind early and by a lot, his quest may be short-lived.

The pitchers that will make or break Pete and his boys are Mario Soto, Tom Browning, Ted Power, and Bill Gulickson. Only Soto and Browning are capable stoppers, while Power and Gulickson are average. The key will be Soto's shoulder which underwent surgery this season. If the starting pitching holds, so will John Franco and Ron Robinson of the lead late in the game.

Where you can catch all the real action!!!

Mark Gary enjoys community work

by Leslie Capps
Special to The Seahawk

When UNC Wilmington sharpshooter Mark Gary has the basketball, Seahawk partisans anxiously await a three-point attempt. But there's much more than three-point stardom to the popular shooting specialist.

Gary, a 6-2, 185-pound junior from Anderson, Ind., is actually a juggler of sorts off the court. In addition to the usual pre-game preparation and class work, he devotes his time to helping young basketball fans learn the game.

Gary serves as an instructor and leader to the Little Seahawks, a contingent of 40 boys and girls who perform basketball routines regularly at area high school and college games.

"It gives me an opportunity to put something back into the game," said Gary, who averaged 7.3 points and 1.6 rebounds this season. He was UNCW's top three-point shooter, hitting 39-of-91 for 42.9 percent from the mystical line.

"Hopefully, the kids learn something that they can use in the future," he said.

The Little Seahawks originated nine years ago as the brainchild of former UNCW player John Calipari, currently an assistant coach at the University of Pittsburgh. In fact, Calipari recently initiated a similar program, The Little Panthers, at UNCW Head Basketball Coach Pitt.

Through the years, 500 youths have participated in the Little Seahawks program and many have gone on to test their skills on the hardwood in high school and college. Today, 40 young basketball enthusiasts, ranging in age from 9 to 12, are members of the local group, sponsored by the Winter Park Optimist Club.

"The experience is good for them," said Ken Johnson, president of the organization, "because there's no competition with anyone and no one is waiting for them to score two points."

"The most competition is within themselves to learn the skills. Young people idolize the players and learn good habits. They have a lot of fun and enjoy it."

Gary works in conjunction with Jim Harris, director of the program for the Optimists, on techniques, drills and musical accompaniment for the Little Seahawks.

Harris, who has overseen the project since its beginning, said, "When I first started, I didn't think it would take as much time. We practice each Sunday and in the middle of the week when we're scheduled to perform."

"I just get personal satisfaction from working with the kids and seeing an opportunity for them to better their skills. It's important for the community to get involved with the program. The Little Seahawks are an extension of the basketball program."

Robert McPherson also believes that community involvement is important.

"Any time the youth in the community is involved, it's a step in the right direction," said McPherson. "Maybe the Little Seahawks will play ball in college or here at UNCW one day."

"It teaches the kids teamwork, they make new friends and teaches them fundamental skills in the game. It helps build interest in the game and respect for others."

"The players serve as role models and it helps fan interest in the players. I hope the program continues."

A business major, Gary was selected by Harris to work with the Little Seahawks.

"I chose Mark because he's well-liked, gets along with the kids, is a good basketball player and, most importantly, is willing to give his time," said Harris.

Fourteen-year-old Shawn Jensen, a former member, remembers his experience with the group. "I didn't know what to expect in the beginning, but it was fun. My dad helped me get involved. It was a good program to learn ball handling skills, especially for coordination."

This season was Gary's first with the special program. "It's been hard to budget my time with my studies. But it's done a lot for me," he said.

And it's done a lot for the Little Seahawks, too.

Offense should be little problem as the Reds boast young star Eric Davis, Dave Parker, and emerging star Tracy Jones. Buddy Bell will also chip in on offense and defense at third base.

The first two months will decide if the Reds will be for real or not. It also depends how quick the Astros bury the Reds. If the Astros don't, then the glory days may return to Cincinnati.

San Francisco - If manager Roger Craig can teach all his pitchers the split-fingered fastball, then the Giants could ride to the crown on that alone. The pitching staff consists of no name starters outside Mike Krukow who won 20 games last season.

Offense will be supplied by third baseman Chris Brown, and outfielders Jeff Leonard and Chili Davis. Injuries to any of these players could send the Giants tumbling in the standings.

The Giants aren't that strong, but can't be underestimated, Craig can do wonders with a pitching staff. But come time for the stretch run, San Francisco will be left in the dust.

Los Angeles - Manager Tommy Lasorda can only hope Pedro Guerrero stays healthy all season long. It is Guerrero that makes LA go and it was Guerrero that led to the Dodgers' downfall last year.

Pitching should be strong again, but the offense is what the Dodgers need to find. The timely hitting just wasn't there last year and Lasorda is going to have to work wonders again this year if LA is to make the playoffs.

Steve Sax and Mike Marshall will lead the Dodger attack behind Guerrero, but it probably won't be enough.

San Diego - The Padres are rebuilding and they have all the right ingredients for a winner in the future. That will be their problem this year, playing for the future.

Pitching will be supplied by Andy Hawkins, Eric Show and Ed Whitson. Competitive but not enough.

Offense will be led by the always consistent Tony Gwynn and newly acquired Kevin Mitchell. Steve Garvey will likely lose his job to hot-shot John Kruk, while Stanley Jefferson (also acquired from the Mets) should make an impact immediately for first-year manager Larry Bowa.

A couple more years and a few more Big Macs from the owner (Joan Kroc who owns McDonalds) should put the Padres where they were in 1984.

Atlanta - You would think that their Braves, who have the likes of All-Stars Dale Murphy, Ken Griffey, and Damaso Garcia, would be able to challenge. Then you have to see who else they have and you will see why they are ticketed for the cellar.

First-baseman Bob Horner and pitcher Doyle Alexander will not return because of free agency. Since the Braves lack any kind of pitching, then Alexander's leaving will definitely affect the lowly Braves.

General Manager Bobby Cox has the ballclub going in the right direction, but it won't be enough this year. No pitching and an offense that sputters at times can only lead to one result -- LAST PLACE.

Its going to be a long and boring summer on WTBS.

Lady 'Hawks

All three of UNCW's victories were related to the pitching talents of Lisa Primovic. Primovic was the winning pitcher in each of the Lady 'Hawks' wins and was named the Most Valuable Player of the tournament. Other Seahawk players named to the all-tournament team were Colleen St. Ledger, Mel Cope, Rita Scott, and Janet Ballard. In the first round UNCW opened with a victory against Tusculum (TN) College 3-1. The success in the first was lost as the Lady Seahawks dropped their next two games to Hillsdale (MI) College 5-4, and Limestone (SC) College 5-3. After this weekend's action the Lady 'Hawks' ran their record to 14-15 overall. UNCW returns to the diamond April 4th to participate in the Methodist Invitational.

New SGA President King speaks out

By Jefferson C. Weaver,
Staff Writer

"I want to listen to the students as a student and represent them like they deserve," said new Student Body President Lee King.

In an interview last week, King said that he wanted to increase cooperation between the SGA and clubs, and he wanted to increase student interest and involvement, starting with the incoming freshmen.

"You can't really get a senior involved," he said. "They are usually all tied up and don't see why they should get involved when they won't be here in a few months."

King stressed that upperclassmen would not be forgotten, though.

King is a sophomore, and has been in the Senate for two years.

He has been a member of the North Carolina Student Legislature, and while in the UNCW Senate he has served as chair of the Finance Committee, Speaker Pro Tem of the Senate and Senate Parliamentarian.

King's duties as president include representing the students on the Board of Trustees and acting as administrator in the SGA office. He also appoints different committee heads and the SGA Treasurer.

Louis DiCello, former senator and a Delta Tau Delta Fraternity brother of King's, was appointed to the position of treasurer Monday.

King: the fraternity member

King said that while "rumors have circulated" about his fraternity ties, "The SGA office will never become a Greek office or the Delta Tau Delta office."

King pointed out that the reason so many Greeks are in the Student Government is because they are the only ones who get involved to a large extent.

King said that the recent Greek vs. Non-Greek sentiment is really very "counter-productive," and that he hoped all the problems were over.

Greek vs. Non-Greek sentiments peaked during the recent election with accusations being hinted at from all sides of the campaign after a number of signs from various candidates were removed or defaced. King was confident that these problems were over with.

"You put a bunch of Greeks together, and then put a bunch of independents together," said the former senator, "and the Greeks are naturally going to work together better."

King said he thought the Greek vote had a

Job search is a challenge

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Writer

"Finding a job is a job," said Darrell Johnson, Wilmington's Employment Security Commission director. "I would encourage students not to look just in this area, but in a broader area. The more flexible they are the better chances of finding the job."

Some have jobs lined up now, while others will be looking soon, Johnson added.

"It depends a lot on the field they are entering and... especially, are they willing to relocate, do they have unrealistic salary expectations, or do they also have some other talents and skills that may enhance their resume," said Sandra Harkin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, here at UNCW. "It takes longer than most students realize. It probably should be a minimum of six months." Gaining federal employment could take at least one year she added.

"Locally the biggest demand is for nurses," said Johnson. Both directors agreed that business was the most employable major statewide and that computer skills are a definite advantage in any major of study.

"However, we are increasingly seeing a trend toward the employer not being so concerned about a specific major as being concerned about particular skills or qualifications," said Harkin.

The local salary medium is $16-18,000 a year. Educators are starting at $16,000. Non-technical areas are starting at $18-20,000 and (with a lot of hands-on experience), computer science majors are starting at $30,000 reported Harkin. The accounting field and a good sales person will also tend to draw a larger salary and "graduates should look at experience and potential for growth and advancement instead of starting pay," said Johnson.

Harkin doesn't think a UNCW graduate needs to hire an employment agency to help find them a job.

"We (the Career, Planning and Placement Center) have here all the services a student needs to be successful in their job search," Harkin said.

Johnson was neither for or against using the agencies but he said, "If I were a student I would pursue all avenues. I would use every resource available."

A Special Olympian gives a look of determination as he competes in an event here Friday. Over two hundred olympians and dozens of UNCW students spent Friday afternoon participating in various events near Trask. See next week's Seahawk for a full report.

Greek Week is celebrated here

By Jennibeth Kennedy
Advancement Office/Special to the Seahawk

Alpha, Beta, Gamma, Delta — what is that mumbo jumbo? It's Greek, of course, and over 350-400 UNCW students will be shouting it loud and clear during their seventh annual Greek Week celebration, April 4-11.

Greek Week is a time when all fraternities and sororities come together to compete in fun field events, learn more about Greek life through educational sessions, recognize special accomplishments of faculty and fellow Greeks, and, most of all, show and support Greek unity.

The week gives everyone a chance to get to know each other on a more personal level and to learn more about the organizations that each Greek represents. The agenda follows this schedule:

Sat., April 4 — Philanthropy project, Campus Clean-up.

Sun., April 5 — Opening Ceremonies, including banner contest and lip sync.

Mon., April 6 — Float and sing competitions, beginning of field events, Brooks field, 3:00 p.m. Educational sessions — 8:00 p.m., Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

Tues., April 7 — Field events — 3:30 p.m.; Educational sessions — 8:00 p.m., Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

Wed., April 8 — Faculty wine and cheese party — 3-5 p.m., University Union.

Thurs., April 9 — Field events — 3:30 p.m., Brooks Field.

Fri., April 10 — Field events — 3 p.m., pig-pickin', tennis courts behind Galloway dorm.

41st Senate convenes for first time

The 41st Student Government Association Senate convened last Monday night, with nominations announced to and solicited from the Senate for various positions. Lee King, S.G.A. president, submitted his nominations for Kim Tracy for the Chancellor Safety Advisory Committee, Sandy Diaz for the University Union Board, and Louis DiCello as Treasurer. All of President King's nominees were accepted by the Senate. Karla Alston, newly elected S.G.A. Vice President, announced the appointment of two new senate secretaries, a new Senate Finance Committee, and Lee Barnhill as Parliamentarian; the Senate approved of all the appointments.

The Senate as a body selected Jeff Silverman for President Position.

Nance Lonaworth, Student Development Director and coordinator for the Service for Students With Disabilities, announced that a Disabilities Awareness Week was coming up and asked the Senate to consider giving the organization $500, the same amount of money provided by the Senate last year. Senator Fran Slater made the motion and it passed.

Senator Brian McMurray criticized the Seahawk for its April 1st "Bloop" cartoon. Senator McMurray said that the strip was "blatant" and offensive to homosexuals. Although Senator McMurray stressed that he is not a homosexual he felt that the material was not appropriate in the newspaper.

Senator Fran Slater announced to the new senators her plans for collecting aluminum cans to allow the 1990 graduating class to give the University a gift. She urged everyone to give their aluminum cans to her as the drive had so far collected only a little over six dollars.

Want to be heard? Survey's how ....

Did you ever feel unimportant? Think you make no difference at all? Wish your voice would be heard?

Now's your chance, and all you have to do is check your mailbox.

The Center for Business and Economics at UNCW is conducting an economic impact study as part of the University's Fortieth Anniversary.

Students are selected at random and all responses are confidential. The study is being conducted to determine the impact on the UNCW community that student spending habits have.

Instructions on how to fill out the survey and on returning it are contained in the envelope with the other material.

University Advancement Officer Mimi Cunningham said Monday that she urged "all students to cooperate with the survey, so we can get the most comprehensive information available."

Cadets are honored at awards banquet

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

Congressional Medal of Honor recipient Col. Ola Mize, U.S. Army, retired, spoke to a packed house in the University Union Friday night for the Fifth Annual ROTC Awards Banquet and Military Ball, sponsored by the Dept. of Military Science. Immediately preceding the meal, a reception was held in the Union Living Room, complete with a string trio and refreshments.

Mize spoke to a crowd of several hundred cadets, instructors and guests after a meal of roast beef, breast of chicken and various other dishes catered by the campus food services.

Mize, a short, powerful man with more than thirty years in the Army, received the medal while a sergeant in the 15th Infantry Regiment near Surang-Ni, Korea. Mize was responsible for rescuing wounded American soldiers who were caught forward of the lines in the midst of a heavy enemy assault. After the rescue, he returned to the position and Mize was knocked down three times by enemy fire and injured but continued to get up and continue fighting. He eventually led a successful counterattack the following morning after directing artillery fire against the approaching enemy.

established "an effective defense system and inflicted heavy casualties" on the North Korean troops attacking the position.

Lectures offered

"Native Americans in the 20th Century" is the subject of a three-night lecture series sponsored by the Museum of World Cultures at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Focusing on the Cherokee, Lumbee, and Pueblo Indians, the series begins at 8 p.m., Tuesday, April 14 and runs through Thursday, April 16, with all three lectures held in room 212 of the Social and Behavioral Sciences Building. All lectures are free and the public is invited to attend.

The series will incorporate the following subject areas:

*April 14 - "Pueblo Potter: Maria Martinez" by Stephen D. LeQuire, associate professor of art at UNCW, who will discuss the Indians of the Southwest through a slide lecture concerning Pueblo pottery. LeQuire has a life-long personal and professional interest in the cultural and aesthetic dimensions of Pueblo pottery.

*April 15 - "The Lumbee Indians in the 20th Century - A Success Story" - by Dr. David K. Filades, of the history faculty of Pembroke State University. He is co-author of "The Only Land I know: A History of the Lumbee

King means business

King said he thought the Greek vote had a significant impact on the elections, but that was again because Greeks tend to get more involved.

"We have maybe four hundred Greeks on this campus," he said, "and the rest are independents. The independents say they aren't getting fairly represented, but where are they (at election time)?" He pointed out that three out of the four candidates in the recent elections were Greek, and 14 out of the 27 new members of the SGA were Greek.

"You cannot restrict Greeks in the Senate just because there are few independents."

King said that the 'Animal House' image of fraternities is slowly changing, and that academics are beginning to become more important in fraternities and sororities nationwide.

"Most Greek organizations have raised their GPA requirements," he said. He said, though, that Delta Tau Delta's required GPA was only 2.0.

"Many of the organizations are raising their standards...to place more emphasis on academics."

King on the Black Student
King dismissed rumors that he had made any racist statements during his campaign or any other time, and said he was disappointed that such "accusations" had been made against him.

"I feel a person should be chosen for a job because he or she is qualified — not because of their skin color."

He said that while minority vote (along with all voting) was up, he did not feel that the minority vote played too great a role in the recent elections, but pointed out that "not all the students filled out the optional questionnaire on the ballot, so we don't know for sure."

"Karla ran a heck of a campaign," said King, referring to Karla Alston, the new vice president, who is a black woman, one of the first to occupy that seat.

"She would be in the dorms, and I would see her talking to groups of four or five people at a time, all the time...she spent the whole time on Monday (election day) running around in front of the Union talking to people, handing out flyers...the other candidate for that office didn't even begin to work that hard."

"I was really impressed."

King and clubs: "A lot has been blamed on the SGA."

The new president said that there is "always room for more clubs in the community...clubs mean people are getting involved, and that is the name of the game."

Asked about funding for clubs and organizations, King said that he hoped to see larger budgets for clubs that had shown improvement in the past years, and "find out what was wrong" with clubs that had barely reached their minimum revenue requirements.

The MRR is a percentage of funding that has to be raised by a club if it wants funding from the SGA. Usually the requirement is approximately 30% of their total funding.

King feels that this is unreasonable for clubs such as the University Program Board, which generally has a budget of $60,000 and encounters difficulties raising that much revenue.

King says that the SGA has been blamed for many problems encountered by clubs and organizations whose paperwork has to go through the SGA office.

"We hope to distribute the work load better between Susie (Goodrum, SGA office manager) and Gina (Britt, office receptionist)," he said confidently, "and that should eliminate some of the problems."

Approximately $240,000 of student fees goes to support the SGA each year, and $60,000 of that money goes to pay the SGA office expenses and the salaries of the two workers there.

"We are the only SGA I know of in the state that employs two office workers full time," he said.

King and the infamous USA Card

King said he hopes to increase community support of UNCW and increase the SGA's treasury at the same time with a discount card much like the USA card that turned into an albatross around the last administration's neck after it failed to raise the predicted $50,000 for the SGA.

King said that "conservative estimates" gave the USA card credit for less than $10,000.

"Our card will hopefully do three things," said King. "Raise money for us, help students save money, and increase community support from businesses that would benefit from advertising with our card."

"I'm looking forward to an exciting and productive year as president," said King, "and I hope that all the students will share in that excitement."

Be doers of good, says Pressley at SGA ceremony

By Anne Simpson,
Staff Writer

The 41st SGA officers were sworn in last Tuesday, March 31, at 6 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union.

Outgoing Vice President Joe Pressley presented a gavel and key to new Vice President Carla Alston.

In his farewell remarks, Pressley said the Senate should realize their importance and not just be dead weight.

"We don't need talk; we need action," he said.

Outgoing President B. Allan Dudley presented a medal to new President Lee King, starting a new tradition. This same medal will be handed from outgoing to incoming president each year.

In his farewell speech Dudley advised the new Senate members to be "doers of good deeds." He said the medal represents "the voice of the students" that will be passed down each year.

Dudley expressed special appreciation to Susan Goodrum and Gina Britt, who work in the SGA office and gave both a commemorative paperweight.

The new Senators were then sworn in as members of the 41st UNCW Senate.

A reception followed for incoming and outgoing officers, and refreshments were served.

Group fighting depression

Have you ever been depressed over a relationship that didn't work? Or have you ever had family problems? Have you ever felt overwhelmed by schoolwork? Or have you felt a little low in the area of self-confidence?

Dealing with Depression is a group on campus that was founded by counseling psychologist Dr. Michael Affemann and Paul Barnes, a psychology major, to help students deal with their depression.

"I had helped someone else with a group at other universities and found it interesting," said Dr. Affemann, "and when I came here I saw some students that were getting depressed and thought it would be a good idea to start a group here."

The program got underway just before spring break this semester so it is still a fairly small group. "The students don't necessarily have to have a one-to-one counseling session. In fact, most people found out about it through others," said Affemann.

Their meetings, held weekly, focus on problem-solving and coming up with solutions on getting out of depression.

"People share their problem-solving ideas with the others," Affemann said, "we end up doing a lot of laughing! It's fun, a lot of fun, but that doesn't mean it's inappropriate to cry. Anything is alright."

Another thing stressed in the weekly meetings is to focus on the good things in life.

"We open every meeting with each person sharing a good thing that has happened to them in the past week," Affemann said.

"It's not necessary for someone to be deeply depressed. It doesn't make any difference how depressed you are. You could just be feeling a little blue that week," said Affemann. "It's also not only appropriate for the traditional student, but non-traditionals as well."

Affemann said that they have no other scheduled plans, except for meetings, as of yet, but he would like to involve recreational activities in the near future.

"The nice thing about the group," Affemann said, "is the sense of community, that other people have solutions, the chance to talk to others, the sharing and the encouragement and the support for and from others."

If anyone is interested in the program, Affemann asks that they see him in the Student Development Center for information, or call him at 395-3820. Paul Barnes can be reached in the Resident Directors office of Graham Hall.

'Grove' is postponed

The Grope for Peace festival scheduled for here this past weekend has been postponed yet again, according to WLOZ campus radio staff members.

The Grope was originally scheduled for this past weekend, but as weather forecasters predicted rain, wind and cold temperatures, organizers decided to postpone the festival until the weekend of May 9-10, but that would have required paying a fee to keep the Union open.

Lance O'Brien, music director at WLOZ, referring to the first postponement said Friday that the postponement "can be looked on as a plus because we can have more time to raise community awareness and publicity."

Most of the bands are still planning to attend the Grope, and organizers are still searching for speakers and bands.

An actual date for the festival has not been set yet, but organizers are hoping for late September.

Hit and run citation issued

By Robin Hudson, Staff Writer

A police investigation led to the issuance of a hit and run citation for a UNCW student early Sunday morning.

Reports said the subject's vehicle struck the curb on Randall Drive at 4:22 a.m., causing slight damage to the curb and extensive damage to the student's vehicle.

In a Monday afternoon interview, Capt. Billy Dawson of UNCW Public Safety explained how the subject was identified. Apparently, the student's car was damaged so badly that he had to call a wrecker to have the vehicle towed. This action led investigators to question the student about the damages to his vehicle and the student admitted fault in the Hit and Run incident.

Dawson said "the student will have to appear in a New Hanover District Court" as a result of the citation.

Also last week, one incident of larceny involving breaking and entering and one possible larceny occurred in residence halls.

A student reported the theft of approximately $80.00 from his room in Hall '85 Apr. 3 and another student reported money missing from his room in Hewlett

Hall Mar. 31. Capt. Dawson said that because of "certain extenuating circumstances," the student was not absolutely sure that breaking and entering was involved.

There are presently no suspects in either case.

According to Jeff Steinmiller, Assistant Director of Student Activities, this year's Greek Week committee has put a great deal of work into the celebration.

"They have taken it upon themselves to organize everything. I'm very impressed with the work they've done. Greek Week gets better every year!"

Each year, two representatives from each fraternity and sorority are elected to the committee, which begins meeting very early in the school year, usually October or November.

The committee plans all activities from games to parties, which takes much time, energy and dedication. Greek Week has come a long way since the first year, back in the 1980-81 school year.

Steve Gnadt, assistant director for operations of the University Union, was the first advisor to organize and work with the first Greek Week committee. Their schedule was such the same as it is today, consisting of relay games and a pig-pickin'.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The new SGA takes office, and we take notice

A new era began quietly and without pretention last week in the Student Government Offices of University of North Carolina at Wilmington as B. Allen Dudley hung a gold medal around Donald Lee King's neck, signifying the passing of an old administration and the start of a new.

The 1987 elections were extraordinary to begin with — rumors of massive spending, racial bias, signs being torn down by rival candidates, and for the first time in recent memory, the issue of Greek vs. Independent reared its head.

Student interest, while still low, increased to recent high of 10% of all students voting for senate seats, class officers and the SGA presidency/vice-presidency.

And now it's over. The new officers have been sworn in, and the report you read in the paper this week is of the Forty-first student senate at UNCW.

The new president is Lee King, a brother of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity and outspoken member of the Senate for the past two years.

The new vice president, Ms. Karla Alston, is also Greek and is one of the few blacks ever to reach her position at this University — a possible sign that our generation could be the first to look at qualifications instead of color.

One can only hope that with the new members, many of the problems between SGA funded clubs and the Student Government offices will be solved.

Hopefully there will be no more innuendo battles like there were at the beginning of this year when our competition went head to head with both the SGA and Seahawk. The Wilmington community got some pretty grim ideas about our campus and its students as a result of those unnecessary wars, and no one benefited.

Hopefully the rumors of "Greek-stacking" in the SGA will prove false. According to the new President, the reason there are so many Greeks in the SGA is, obviously, because only Greeks applied for the positions and more Greeks than independents voted. (For the record, the majority of the staffers at the Seahawk are non-Greek, and no one on the editorial staff is a brother/sister in any fraternity or sorority.)

We at the Seahawk also wish to thank the Fortieth Senate for their support and help this year, and hope all grudges are forgotten.

Extra special thanks to Senators Mark Bremer, Dawn Clodfelter, Jeff Silverman, Chuck Hatch, former President Allen Dudley and especially former Treasurer Beth Riffe, along with anyone else who was a big help whom we neglected to mention.

Thanks to the Fortieth, and good luck to the Forty-first.

And watch yourselves, because we'll be watching you.

Reader comments on 'Platoon' review

Dear Editor:

In response to Joseph Allen's article "Seahawk Reporter Takes A Vet To See 'Platoon' ...." 1 April 1987, page 7:

Mr. Allen has made a conclusion based on the testimony of two veterans, yet at the end of his report he remarks: "The best way to find out about what the Vietnam war was really like is to ask several Nam vets for a broad overview." I do not consider the witness of two vets to be very "broad". Mr. Allen stated that Oliver Stone's "fantasy" movie "Platoon" was inaccurate in several respects. Without addressing any of Mr. Allen's particular statements in depth, I'd like to state that I am of the opinion that Mr. Allen has displayed considerable naivete in his report, and that more facts than what Mr. Allen provide need to be considered.

I served in a grunt (infantry) company in the Marine Corps from 1977-1981. I was not in Vietnam; the closest I came to combat was when I was in the Persian Gulf near Iran during the hostage situation. However, consider my experiences. My first friend in the Marine Corps was there only to escape jail; the judge gave him the choice of two years in jail or three years in the Marine Corps. Another friend is serving twenty years in Fort Leavenworth for helping to pump twenty rounds into a fellow Marine's head. The victim had made a small fortune selling hash to other Marines, and my friend wanted that money. Several other Marines I knew literally went crazy - I don't know why they did, only that they did while in the USMC (and during peacetime at that). In my first company, it was common knowledge that our company commander would die by one of our hands if we went to battle - he had a bad habit of volunteering us for activities that would help him get rank. Our lives weren't worth that. We had no fear of being punished "to the fullest extent of the law" because with so many bullets flying around, who was going to know where the fatal one came from?

My experiences mean nothing when it comes to determining the accuracy of "Platoon", yet they may mean something when it comes to believing that "Platoon" might be accurate, and that atrocities may have occurred more often than what Mr. Allen believes.

I have a cousin who served two years in Vietnam with the Special Forces. He has tales that are similar to Stone's: murder, collecting ears, and other hellish situations. Raul Ruiz, a minister in California who served with the Marines in Vietnam admitted that he had "murdered and burned." One corporal I served with had been in Vietnam, and he used to talk about raping and the fun of killing "gooners". He said something I'll never forget: "When in a horrible situation, why not be as horrible as that situation?" Several books written by vets or with vets' conversations sound like Stone's Vietnam too; a few of these are "Dispatches" by Michael Herr, and "Nam" by Mark Baker.

War is a strange horror that cannot be imagined by me, Mr. Allen, or anyone else who has not experienced it. But I can say that it is a deeply unsettling activity that is totally alien to the cushy lives we Americans lead daily. Thus, it is hard for us to imagine what such an extreme experience could do to people. It is logical to think that people, being different, would probably react in different ways. And I am convinced that nobody knows how they would act if their ass was on the line, if survival became the most burning - and perhaps the only - issue.

I do not discount the words of Mr. Allen's Marine, or Mr. Santoli. I also think that "Platoon" portrayed some of the most drastic occurrences that could ever have happened in Vietnam. I submit, however, that both parties have truth in what they say. Some, maybe most, veterans did not experience Stone's "Platoon". But some did. Do not discount the story of these few. Their story must not be denied, pooch-pooched, or buried because their truth offends others. Atrocities and psychotic behavior have not been strangers to any war. Do not think for a minute that "Platoon" could not happen.

Robin J. Boucher

Oh, those summer days of old

With the onset of Daylight Savings Time, more than one memory of the innocent days of a young boy, a good dog, bicycles, and a few friends emerge to haunt me as I watch a sunset over the Wilmington horizon from my post behind a computer terminal.

Most everyone I speak with had one summer that was their best before the onset of the automobile and resulting part-time job. If they lived in a small town where people still waved at strangers, they probably had a good dog at that time, too.

There were only two or three of us then, fourteen years old, tanned by a summer sun beating down on a lawn mower fourteen times a week, eyes glistening from many an afternoon by the local fishpond, cane pole or (after half the yards in Erwin were moved) spinning red in hand. Our stomachs and legs were hard from miles and miles of hard and fast riding on our bikes, waving to little old ladies and tobacco-chewing old men on their front porches in the twilight.

Oftentimes, but not often enough, there was the adventurous trip to the mighty Cape Fear, a different Cape Fear than the one we know in the Port City, although really the same body of water. That end of the river is fresh, not brackish, and it held the mysteries of huge catfish, "holes" that could suck down unwary swimmers and freezing cold springs that flowed from the sides of rocks to make their way into the muddy Cape Fear drowsing by below, making steam rise from the cool water during spring and fall mornings.

Those days were lazy and innocent; none of us were playing baseball in the summer leagues, but there were enough "unattached" kids running around that we never had any trouble setting up a game or two in the back yard of the Methodist Church.

While baseball was fun, the game of the summer was cat-and-mouse.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

Cat-and-mouse is very simple; all one needs is a bicycle and a thorough knowledge of his or her neighborhood.

We knew every back alley, heavy hedgerow, and overgrown lot where a boy (or girl, since that was who we chased and were chased by) could hide a bicycle; we knew where the long hills were, and we knew if you hid halfway down the street on one of those hills and dashed out behind your "cat" team they would never be able to stop before the "mice" had hidden again.

We knew too well what would happen if we stayed out too far past the fall of night, and our parents knew too well which trees held the best switches. Although a thrashing never happened to this writer (probably one of my problems), I was witness to several, and it is not a pretty sight to see a loveless fourteen-year-old snatched off his Murray three-speed and soundly whipped while his would-be sweetheart watched giggling from her safe position a block away.

Of course, that particular giggle was on her when she went home to the same reception after an hour too long on her pink Sears ten-speed that could outrun almost anything on a flat straitaway.

We all had dogs then. Well, all of us except my closest friend, and my golden retriever Dudley always wagged his tail for Kevin, anyway.

Late last summer, we tried to recapture those days, and as usual with attempts to resurrect the past, it was a failure that left us missing the pre-car/truck days even more.

Dudley had just celebrated his tenth birthday, (as Lorne Greene would say, "That's seventy years old for you and me.") and the arthritis had begun to take its toll, so he was no longer able to run full steam ahead for hours at a time like he could seven years before. Besides that, town officials had begun to look down their noses at the idea of a dog running loose, even if he was with a bicyclist (although Dudley had never hurt a fly and some of the town officials were more of a rabies threat than any loose dog I have ever known.)

A motorcycle accident had taken some of the willingness from my left leg, and the tobacco hadn't helped the lungs. Kevin's arches had been giving him more trouble since his return from basic training at Fort Maclellan, Alabama. He was in the best physical shape of his life, but his feet were flat as all get out.

Still, we rode out past the grown over lots (many of which now hold houses), through the back alleys (except for one that was barred with a wire gate and an unfriendly NO TRESPASSING sign put there by the new owners) and eventually stopped on the crest overlooking where the giggling teen-boppers of long ago had lived before discovering we were too low class for them. After graduating high school and departing our small town for SEPU (Snoopy Expensive Private University), they seemed to forget their old friends of bygone days.

But that was okay. We spent the rest of the evening on the front porch with both my dogs (Kevin still doesn't have one) and watched the sunset.

As the clock approached 9:30, Kevin stretched and suggested we go for a cup of coffee somewhere before hitting our respective sacks. I stretched in return, and pointed out that it's not so much fun to stay out late like it used to be.

Dudley snored peacefully.

How not to win elections

Gleelessly, the major media across North Carolina reports how "moderate" or "mainstream" Republicans are ousting Helms wing members in contests for party posts, delegate seats and other positions of leadership or influence.

And gleelessly these editors and reporters should indeed be, because 90% of them are "Yaller Dog Democrats," who couldn't care less who or what the officials may be as long as they are Democrats.

They know just as well as I do that Jesse Helms, J. Strom Thurmond, John Warner and others of their leanings weren't elected because they were Republicans. They were elected because they were conservatives, in most counties with more conservative Democrat than Republican voters.

That isn't going to be any different in the South during the rest of this century, maybe never.

As for that often misapplied term "mainstream," it seems to me that the faction delivering the most votes must be really in the mainstream, because that faction obviously represents a greater segment of the electorate.

In North Carolina and throughout the South there is one indisputable fact of life. No Republican ever has, or ever will, carry a statewide election without a massive crossover by conservative Democrat voters.

And this writer, as a Democrat who has voted with the majority many times during the last 20 years to elect conservative Republicans, feels qualified to speak for many Southern Conservatives.

I refused to vote for liberal Wendell Wilkie in 1940; I refused to vote for liberal Tom Dewey in 1944 and 1948, and I will never vote for any liberal, regardless of party, geography or personality.

Ninety-nine out of a hundred of those so-called moderates are liberals who either lack the courage of their convictions or hope to deceive some conservative voters.

By the same token, the day is gone forever when a conservative Democrat can be nominated in a statewide election anywhere. But in the remote eventually that such a candidate should be nominated and elected, that individual would be totally without influence in the Democratic party.

So, like the words of the song "Love and Marriage," you cant have one without the other.

That isn't true of love and marriage, everybody must know that.

But in the South it is surely a fact that as far as Republicans and conservatives are concerned one is doomed to defeat and failure without the other. — LTJ Features, Dunn, N.C.
